SOUTHERN METHODIST RECORDER.

Established 1893. $1 a Year.

DEVOTED TO THE SPREAD OF SCRIPTURAL HOLINESS.

New Series, Vol. VII. No. 1.

REV. JAMES CANNON, JR., EDITOR,
BLACKSTONE, VA.

RICHMOND AND BLACKSTONE, VA., JANUARY 5, 1899.

BUSINESS OFFICE:
No. 8 South Tenth Street, RICHMOND, VA.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

The richest of all prizes is the cheapest; it is God's love and help.—Dr.
Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago.

Good Influences.

Good suggestions and influences do not drive or force us; they only lead.—
Dr. Pratt, Swedenborgian, San Francisco.

Rest For the Soul.

The rest God speaks of is not the alternative of something else, but the quality which marks the highest attainment of the human soul.—Dr. Storrs, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.

The Christian's Peace.

The true secret of a Christian's peace is that the sorrows of the past and future are stripped from him and he is given the present, which is always tolerable.—Dr. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago.

Do All Things Heartily.

Let every Christian do his part in civil life as a Christian, doing all things heartily, as to the Lord and not as to men.—Rev. J. H. Webster, Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

THE TWENTY-THIRD
The state will soon be more in line with the laws of God.—Rev. J. H. Webster, Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

Natural Law.

The reign of natural law is acknowledged, but there seems to be an impression that moral law may be violated with impunity. It will be learned eventually that the consequences of breaking moral law are not to be ignored.—Rev.
J. N. Beard, Methodist, San Francisco.

Time For Action.

There is a time for action as well as prayer. The man who prays and fails to work for the end desired may be disappointed. Do not live too much in the past, but turn your eyes forward that you may make progress in God's work.
—Rev. A. Remington, Presbyterian, Boston.

Trust In the Lord.

When Jesus came near the disciples walking on the waves, they did not know him and were alarmed. So in the midst of our trials we sometimes fail to recognize the hand of our divine Master. If we only knew that God's hand was in it all and that he as surely loves us as he did his lone disciples on the sea, it would give us hope and fill us with courage.—Rev. Mr. Winship, Methodist, Cheyenne, Wyo.

Religious Unity.

Religious unity teaches us to believe that out of the blocks of time the rising walls of eternity are being shaped; that through struggle, disappointment and sorrow earthly pilgrims must push on, now halting in caves of doubt, now climbing cross crowned heights, but ever finding their way to the tablelands of unhedged fellowship whereon is built the city of light.—Rev. Jenkins
L. Jones, Unitarian, Chicago.

Equal Burden For Man.

Insist that society's safeguard lies in forcing by public opinion the burden of weight equally upon the shoulders of the culpable man as upon the culpable woman. in the spirit of that Jesus whose teachings a vast portion of mankind honors I plead for charity, for forgiveness and tender helpfulness to the woman who errs. I sincerely hope that the moral blindness of society will be so heroically treated it will soon be cured.

—Rev. Henry Frank, Methodist, New York.

What Religion Means.

Religion means that you must ask blessings upon your home and help to rear your children that your boys may become great, good men and your girls splendid women. It means that you must be good and charitable, not in order to get the praise and applause of the observer, but because those qualities make you like God. If you are a Christian, you must try to reproduce God's beautiful moral features of character.
You may have little success, but you will know that you are man or woman enough to try.—Rev. Father Magevny, Catholic, Omaha.

Christian Heroes.

The Christian Endeavorer who will have done with lies and compromises is a hero. The Endeavorer who will be a hero. The Endeavorer who will follow Christ wherever he goes, through the home, the church and the state, is a hero; the Endeavorer who will look the devil in the face and tell him he is a devil is a hero; the Endeavorer who will stand up for Jesus in the marts of trade, in the halls of state, in social walk, and not flinch or surrender one iota of God's truth, is a hero.—Rev. Dr.
Stephen A. Northrop, Baptist, Kansas City.

A Christian Nation.

From the unobtrusive walks of life our country has been roused to martial strife and bloody war—not for the sake of self aggrandizement or acquisition of territory, but in behalf of the downtrodden. No nation ever took up arms in a nobler cause; none was ever influenced by more disinterested motives and none ever accomplished so much in so short a time. God's people should have a settled conviction that this is God's country. The oft repeated question, "Are we a Christian nation?" should be definitely answered. A people whose God is the Lord should be, must be, read and known as such.—Rev. Dr. H. R. Naylor, Methodist, Washington.

God's Plans For All.

God has a distinct plan for each one of us in sending us into the world. Not only does he create us all to be useful, to take some part in the world's affairs, to honor and glorify him in some way, but he designs each person for some definite place and some specific work.
He does not send us into life merely to fill any niche into which we may chance to be lifted by the vicissitudes of life or to do whatever bits of work which may drift to our hands in the vast, complicated mesh of human affairs. God has a plan, embracing all his creatures and all their actions, and in this plan every intelligent being has an allotted place and an assigned part.—Rev. G. W. Wilson, Congregationalist, Omaha.

A PRESENT HELP.

There is never a day so dreary,
But God can make it bright;
And unto the soul that trusts Him,
He giveth songs in the night.
There is never a path so hidden,
But God will show the way,
If we seek for the Spirit's guidance,
And patiently watch and pray.

There is never a cross so heavy,
But the loving hands are there,
Outstretched in tender compassion,
The burden to help us bear.
There is never a heart that is broken,
But the loving Christ can heal,
For the heart that was pierced on Calvary
Doth still for His people feel.

There is never a life so burdened,
So hopeless and so unblest,
But may be filled with the light of God
And enter His promised rest.
There is never a care or a loss,
But we may carry to Jesus,
And leave at the foot of the Cross.

What more can we ask than He's promised,
And we know that His word cannot fail,
Our refuge when storms are impending,
Our help when temptations assail.
Our Saviour, our Friend, and Redeemer,
Our portion on earth and in heaven;
For He who withheld not His own
dear Son,
Hath with Him all things freely given.

THE RECORDER'S NEW YEAR.

The Recorder is five years and eight months old, but to make the paper year correspond with the calendar year, we changed the numbering in July, and so we enter volume seven with this issue. This is a convenient season to say a word or so about the past and the future of the paper.

1. Its Origin.—Some people who never trouble themselves to investigate facts, and some who, if they know the facts, do not regard them, have ascribed a reason for the origination of the paper which is contrary to fact.
The editor and present owner of the Recorder was not the originator of the paper. He was asked by certain parties if he would edit the paper for them if it was started, the purpose being to furnish a cheap paper for those who could not or would not buy a high-priced paper. As there was no colportage work being done in our Conference, and thousands of families who took no religious papers, the purpose seemed very commendable, and the work was begun. It has been continued from that time with the same purpose in view. About two years ago, finding that our subscribers wished to see the paper more frequently, it was changed from a monthly to a semi-monthly, and one year ago the demand was so great that the paper was made a weekly. This last change has been very popular, and new subscribers have been received every week, and letters from a number of friends have encouraged the editor to believe that the paper is supplying a real need. It was not established, therefore, to tear down any other paper, but to supply its work. The aim of the paper is to do genuine Methodist work—namely, "to spread Scriptural holiness through these lands." The word "holiness" is not used with reference to any special theory, but in the general sense, as opposed to all sin. This work necessarily involves conflict. The history of the world is made up of conflicts, and the key that unlocks its history is the conflict between God and the devil for the soul of man. "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil." No man or paper can do the work of God that is always urging peace. The failure to observe the order of the Scriptures, which is distinctly, FIRST, PURE, THEN PEACEABLE, has brought a multitude of woes upon the Church. The Church is terribly handicapped to-day by the fact that it has so many people in it who are unconverted, and who insist upon worldly methods in the Church, and many who are converted do not want a "fuss," and think it is unchristian and uncharitable to fight these godless people and godless ways.

and so it comes to pass that too often selfishness in its various forms rules the Church. Such things must be fought, and the Recorder has aimed to fight the devil both in and out of the Church. It has not been altogether because of a bump of combativeness in the editor, as many have supposed, but because it has seemed to him that at the present time the need of the hour is a fight from a DESTRUCTIVE standpoint. Certain forms of evil have become so firmly entrenched in the world and in the Church that it has not seemed possible to build up the kingdom of righteousness without strong and persistent assaults on the kingdom of darkness. And it does not follow at all because some good persons may be connected with the things denounced that there is an assault upon the persons. Good persons are often sadly lacking in judgment, and frequently in clear perceptions of what is the real truth. But that only renders it the more necessary to fight the evil which they defend. The evil is the more dangerous on account of their defence of it.

Some persons have favored some of the special aims of the Recorder, but have objected to the methods occasionally employed. They dislike personalities, that bring out the bad things that men have done. The Recorder, also, dislikes personalities, and dislikes the "taffy" kind as much as the other, and so it has never had a column in which to chronicle the incidental movements of men coming and going, here and there, and in which to tickle their vanity and "soft soap" them by set compliments. This editor does not believe that all the personal remarks he has ever made about the wrong-doings of others have done a tithe the harm done by the fulsome flattery continually published in our religious papers about high officials and pets of various editors. But, strange as it may seem to some, the Recorder does not like the other kind of personalities, either, and in the work of the paper such things have been studiously avoided, unless there was a real good to be accomplished by bringing out the facts in reference to persons. Every personal article ever published in this paper has been in defence of persons or principles. The question has sometimes been asked, Why general statements have not been made, and principles advanced and maintained, without bringing in persons? The reason is that general articles are a failure in some cases. General articles are either so general as to produce no impression, or they picture persons so clearly, and yet do not call their names, that the writer may justly be branded as cowardly for not calling names. The belief and practice of this paper is to put principles above everything else, and if in defending a principle, it becomes necessary to call attention to the person who is specially violating that principle, or standing in the way of the widest good from the maintenance of it, it is cowardly, and having "respect to persons" not to call names. For example, the editor believes that the greatest danger of Southern Methodism to-day is OFFICIALISM, and this danger will have to be fought by showing its evil effects. General articles will not meet this case. There is a striking instance of that before our eyes. Our Conference is tired of having the same men sit in judgment upon what is best for the preachers and the churches. They have seen too many grave blunders made by this set of men. They passed a general resolution, declaring the opinion of the Conference that men ought not to have this power longer than eight years successively. The Recorder fought for the principle. What was the result? Nothing. Each man thought that he was not the man meant. His judgment was so extraordinary, he was so free from prejudice, that the Conference wanted him to stay in, but passed a general resolution to get rid of the other men whom they did not want. What was to be done in such a case? General articles have failed. General resolutions have failed. The only thing left is to come out squarely, and tell these men by name that there are a great many, if not a majority, of their brethren, who have lost respect for them, who object to their having anything to say about the work that they shall do, etc. But such an article would be personal. True, but general articles have failed, and the question has arisen, Which is more important, the principle or these presiding elders? The Recorder thinks that the principle is, and so will not hesitate to fight for the principle even at the risk of offending persons. This kind of personal fighting the editor believes in, not because he likes the personalities, but because it is the only kind of fighting that seems to have any effect in some hardened cases.

And so with all other evils, in and out of the Church. If the fight cannot be won, because of certain persons in the way, the persons must be attacked as the embodiment of false principles and the instrument of satan in carrying out evil.

The Recorder has made special efforts in these directions. Missions, education, and anti-saloon work have taken up much of our space. These are the three greatest causes which the Church has before it, and we have tried to contribute in every possible way to help in the fight for the furtherance of these great causes.

Future Plans.—The Recorder will endeavor in the future, as in the past, to give as much as possible to its subscribers for a small price. The subscription price has been raised to $1 per year for single subscriptions, but in clubs the paper can be secured for the same price as formerly. The club rates will be given in our next issue.

The paper will continue to be independent in its expression of opinion on the various subjects before the Church. It is expected to give up four pages of the paper to the Junior Department. Pertinent and telling cartoons will be a feature of this department, and the endeavor will be made to make the paper so interesting and yet so cheap, that it will reach the homes of many who have never before taken a religious paper. In clubs of five or over the price of the paper will still be 60 cents. Get up a club. Old and new subscribers at the same rate.

TWENTIETH CENTURY THANK OFFERING.

World-wide Methodism has determined to mark the opening of the twentieth century by a great thank offering to God for His gracious providence, which has for the past one hundred and fifty years guided the denomination, and has developed it from a grain of mustard seed till it is now the greatest of Protestant denominations. The Wesleyan Methodist Conference of England, with about half a million members, has determined to raise one million guineas, about $5,250,000 of our money, or nearly ten dollars per member; the Canadian Methodist Conference, with 280,000 members, has determined to raise $1,000,000, or about four dollars per member; the Methodist Episcopal Church, with about 3,000,000 members, has determined to raise $20,000,000, or about seven dollars per member; our own Church, of about 1,500,000 members, through the preachers and laymen in General Conference assembled, has determined that it will raise $1,500,000, or an average of one dollar per member.

Thus all the great branches of the denomination have joined in this common purpose to make this thank offering to our Heavenly Father as a token of appreciation of His loving favor shown to us as a Church, and at the same time to show to the world at large that we fully realize that all our prosperity, both material and spiritual, comes from God, the Creator of the World, and the Head of the Church.

In this great offering it is the hope of the leaders of the Church that every member of the Church shall have a part. Some will have more and some less to contribute, but all God's children have much to be thankful for, and every one should contribute something.

1. Because we want to do so. The old Jewish Church, among its other offerings, had the meat or thank offering, and the idea of thanksgiving is a common thought to most of us. When our earthly friends have been good to us, we love to show them our gratitude by appropriate evidences. So, as individuals, but in this matter especially as members of a great Church, we want to thank God for His goodness, and to give practical evidences of our appreciation of it.

2. Because we ought to do so. If a Church who does not want to make a thank offering to God, then the reason for giving changes from "I want" to "I ought," and the man who does not want to do so, should be shown that he is sadly lacking in the true Christian spirit, and needs to be either re-consecrated or, perhaps, reconverted. No man is truly saved, whose heart is not full of thanksgiving for his salvation. If it is not, it ought to be, and he had better examine himself, whether he is in the faith.

3. Because our Church has pledged itself before the other churches and the sinful world to do so. No other branch of Methodism has more to thank God for. Shall the others come up with both hearts and hands full of thanksgiving, and we fail to do our part? Our pride in our Church, the purest form of Methodism in the world, demands that when the twentieth century shall dawn, we shall not be found lacking, but shall be found in line with our Methodist brethren all over the world.

Virginia Methodism must be found in the lead in this matter. The oldest and next to the largest Conference, the whole Church looks to us to see what we are going to do. Our part of the thank offering is in round numbers one hundred thousand dollars ($100,000). Virginia Conference Methodism can easily, and I hope will easily, give this amount as her portion of this monumental fund. Her 90,000 members would find it a small amount to be subscribed for any business enterprise which would yield a guaranteed dividend of 6 per cent. Our Saviour looks upon us. Do we really feel thankful for our salvation and its attendant blessings? Have we faith in the dividends of heaven? Do we long to show to men that as a Church we really do thank God? Let us, then, arouse ourselves and determine that when the time expires, the Virginia Conference will have offered every dollar and more besides of the $100,000. This will be the great matter before us as a Church this year, and the press and pulpit will be full of it. The Recorder will not fail to give both facts and exhortation. In another article we give a report of one of the meetings in England, which shows how our English Wesleyan brethren are at work.

AN INTERESTING PROPHECY.

At the recent Church Congress held at Bradford, England, Rev. W. Boyd Carpenter, Bishop of Ripon, spoke on the subject, "The Opportunities, Needs, and Characteristics of Our Age." The address was notable for its breadth of view, the closing passage coming from a bishop of the Church of England (which holds much the same doctrine as the Protestant Episcopal Church of this country), was marked by great catholicity. In it he discussed "The Religion of the Future," as follows:

"The future of the world does not belong to sectarianism, and so the dream of catholicity will be fulfilled. Of another thing I am certain: As increasing light falls upon great things and great men, and as the scientific thought is mingled with popular Christianity, how many accretions due to human weakness and race prejudice have been incorporated in our conceptions, they will distrust the Church. For every new epoch has added new dogma to faith, and with every new dogma has gone further from the simplicity of Christ. The future of the world does not belong to Latinism, and so the vision of Protestantism will be fulfilled. But of a third thing I am convinced, even more surely. The religion of the future will neither be Protestant nor Catholic, but simply Christian. The dogmas of the churches which have separated communion from communion will fall off as autumn leaves before the fresh winds of God. Many views which in the very providence of God have played their part in clearing the thoughts of men will pass into forgetfulness. Men will not grieve to see the old things go, for a larger faith will be theirs; they will not think God's world will fall apart because we tear up parchments more or less. The Church of God will renew its youth. It will be content with a simpler symbol, because it will have learned Christ. It will not need any longer Trent, or Westminster, or Lambeth, or the Vatican to lead it. It will be satisfied with simpler thoughts to realize that there is one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all."

That much of this prophecy will be realized in the coming century is not only to be desired, but to be fully hoped for. Religion is essentially a life. Creed we must all have. We may not call it by that name, but we must believe something, and that belief is our creed. There must be clear-cut opinions as to certain great facts of life—our relations to God, the Creator; to Christ, the Redeemer; to the Holy Ghost, the Sanctifier; to our fellow-men all around us. All these relations exist, and we must have definite purposes as to how we will meet them. But there is need for much less dogma than we have at present, in order to be Christians. St. John says of Christ: "In Him was life; and the LIFE was the light of men," and St. James says: "Pure religion and undefiled before our God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." Both stress the same thing. Christ's life is our light. If we only walk in that light, we will be truly Christian. The book of the Rev. Charles M. Sheldon on "What Would Jesus Do?" is a direct call to examine and to follow the life of Christ. When this is honestly attempted by any man he will find that such questions will not be settled so much by the distinctive doctrines which make him a Methodist, or a Baptist, etc., but by broad principles which make him Christian.

"Our conduct and our thought," Bishop Carpenter says, "will not be Protestant or Catholic, but simply Christian." If this, indeed, comes to be true, and we are all "simply Christian," we can gladly give up other things. To be "simply Christian" in all our thoughts and speech and action will be enough for every true disciple.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY FUND.

The subject occupying more attention in Methodist circles than any other just now is the Twentieth Century Fund. The movement was publicly launched last week in Wesley Chapel, City Road. And the success of the inaugural meetings was such that the general opinion now is that a much larger sum than a million guineas will be raised. In fact, the Committee of Management has already allocated the first $250,000 obtained above the million guineas. The meetings of last week were intended for the circuits of the London districts only. No others were expected to promise anything. And, as far as I know, only one person outside of those districts did give anything, and he was an American—Dr. Briggs, of the Theological College, Denver, Colorado. The worthy Doctor wished to contribute fifty guineas, and his wish was gratified. No English audience can say "No" to any request from an American cousin. London Methodism is, and always has been, one of the comparatively poor portions of the Connexion. Yet, on Tuesday of last week, Metropolitan Methodists promised upwards of seventy thousand guineas as a start towards the million. And only seventy of the hundred circuits took part in the giving, and in the majority of instances the amounts promised were named as the minimum, and intimations were given that much larger amounts would be reached. The president of the Conference expressed the opinion that London's contribution to the fund would not be less than a hundred thousand guineas, and would probably reach double that figure. If London's start is followed throughout the country, and especially in the wealthy districts of the north, the million guineas originally thought of will be left far behind.

In all parts of the Connexion our people are beginning to understand and heartily appreciate the twofold purpose of the fund. First, by raising the money to express our gratitude to God for the wonderful things which He has done for Methodism, and by Methodism, in the century about to close, and, secondly, to enter the new century with means in our hand to enable us to take a big step in advance in every department of our Church's work, and assault more vigorously than ever all the strongholds of the devil. And I am thankful to say that underlying and permeating all this is a general spiritual awakening, a conviction that with greater opportunities of working we must seek and obtain more of God's sanctifying and converting power. It is arranged that the president's conventions for the deepening of the spiritual life of the churches shall go hand in hand, during the year, with the meetings of the Twentieth Century Fund. The two are fit companions.—Christian Guardian.

A CURIOSITY.

The substitute offered in the Western North Carolina Conference for a very good report from a special committee on the war claim, and by a small majority adopted, must, it seems to this scribe, go down in history as a moral, if not a literary, curiosity. It is surprising that such a man as Dr. Atkins should introduce and advocate it, but more surprising that Southern Methodist preachers should vote for it. How, why, and where the idea originated it is very difficult to say. Certainly, Dr. Atkins and the preachers voting for his remarkable substitute have never preached such teaching from their pulpits as this paper implies. If we understand the gist of the thing, it is to tax a defrauded people for the deeds of the defrauder, and leave the wrong-doer in possession of his ill-gotten thousands. Congress is to say what would have been a fair and honest fee for an attorney's services; this amount is to be deducted from the sum actually paid, and then the remainder is to be collected from the Church and paid to the Publishing House, while no effort is made to induce Mr. Stahlman to refund the excess of his receipts over an honest fee. All this is to be done, too, not to satisfy the demands of right and justice, but to satisfy Congress. It is, as it were, to buy off the criticism of the National Legislature of the fact that the beneficiaries of the fund did not get as much money as the appropriators intended. In the minds of the proposers of this scheme there must have been a very low estimate of the intelligence of Congress and a lower estimate of the mental gifts of the rank and file of our Church membership, and a still lower estimate of the morals of both.

How it could be thought satisfactory to an intelligent body of legislators to put into the Publishing House an amount of money, drawn from the pockets of persons already complain-

SMITH'S DICTIONARY

—OF THE—

BIBLE,

Comprising its Antiquities, Biography
Geography and Natural History.

Edited by WM. SMITH, LL. D.,
Classical Examiner of University of London.

By a special arrangement with the publishers, we will send the Southern Methodist Recorder for one year and Smith's Bible Dictionary for $2.00. Every family should have a copy of this great work. For description, see below:

The simple explanation of this work, unlike the expositions of a commentary, admit of no denominational or sectarian coloring, and it is therefore equally valuable to Bible readers of every diversity of belief.

This is, undoubtedly, the best work of its kind in the English language, and has no rival in importance for the elucidation of the scenes and facts of Scripture.

The work contains 1024 large octavo pages, over 150 illustrations and maps engraved especially for this work, and is handsomely and strongly bound in cloth. Price, $4.50.

ing of fraudulent charges on the part of an attorney, to equal the amount of said former injustice, is beyond our ken. It looks like adding an injustice to an injustice to make the first injustice satisfactory to those that criticised it.

But how the brethren of North Carolina expected any thoughtful person to contribute to such a fund, or an honest preacher to take up such a collection, is equally outside of our powers of understanding. Surely, there must be something in the minds of these good men that has not been expressed in the resolution for which they voted.

If a committee of the Senate should by a resolution say what was a legal, fair, and honest fee for services, they would, ipsis verbis, declare that all now in the hands of the attorney over and above such fee, must be an illegal, unfair, and dishonest possession. Then, if the resolution spoken of be carried out by the Church, two things are implied:

First, the Conferences are to advise senators to be satisfied with a thing pronounced by themselves to be fraudulent, and second, the Conferences are to connive at the same deed, though agreeing with the senators as to its moral turpitude. For the resolution seems to make the Senate committee a kind of arbitrator as to what a fee ought to be, and by acting upon the arbitration the Church would agree to its doctrine. Our great Church would then appear to be (as the Senate committee would appear to be) satisfied with a moral wrong. The immense amount held by the attorney must be looked upon as dishonestly held, and yet Senate and Church must say they are satisfied with the pronounced fraud, simply because the very parties originally defrauded have been subjected to a second draft equal to the first. We can but think the good brethren who voted for this resolution will reconsider.

The truth is, there can never be a settlement of a moral question until it is settled according to moral law. Hence we insist upon the duty of our Church authorities to ask the attorney to refund what he holds over and above an honest fee; and upon refusal of payment to institute a suit in a court of equity. It is hardly to be supposed that when the check was signed giving a fortune to the attorney there was ignorance of the flagrant violation of his contract. Hence the signer had no right to sign that check, even under the wonderful contract for the exorbitant fee.

Our brethren who say they are tired of the agitation of this subject in the Church papers must have the grace of endurance. They should aid in the securing of justice, and then they can claim a good, because a conscientious, rest. It is a subject unpleasant to all, no doubt, but Church authorities cannot afford to allow a great moral wrong to go uncriticized simply to secure temporary quiet. Peace should always be achieved by conquering wrong, not by conniving at it. May the good Lord guide in all exertions for the attainment of the right!

Those brethren who seem so positive in the assertion that there is no case for a court of inquiry should reread their law-books on exorbitant fees, and on the authority of fiduciaries, and on the rights of beneficiaries. We can but think they will soon see that exorbitant bargains to lawyers are null in law, and especially that fiduciaries have no right to make them.

JOINT EPWORTH LEAGUE CONVENTION.

Mr. Editor,—You will oblige us if you will give the following a place in your columns:

The committee, consisting of Rev. E. T. Dadmun, Epworth League District Secretary of the Petersburg District; Rev. G. H. McFaden, District Secretary of Epworth Leagues of the Farmville District, and myself, as instructed by our respective District Conferences, met at Blackstone the 23d ultimo, and proceeded to formulate a programme of exercises for a joint Epworth Conference of the two districts.

It was agreed to open the Conference at Blackstone on Friday evening, with short devotional exercises, introductions, etc. Friday at 7:45 P. M. exercises will open with a song service, addresses of welcome, and responses, and then the opening address proper by Dr. A. Coke Smith, of Lynchburg. Rev. John O. Moss, of Lunenburg, will preside.

Saturday morning's session will open at 9:30; Rev. J. B. DeBerry will preside; devotional exercises to be conducted by Rev. E. V. Carson. Subject to be discussed: "Leagues in the Country." (1) Do We Need Them? (2) How to Get Them. (3) How They Help the Pastor. (4) How the Pastor Helps Them." Followed by open parliament.

Saturday at 2:30 P. M., W. W. Sawyer to preside, praise service. Subject: "Reading Circle; How Arranged for and Conducted;" "Public Literary Meetings; League Socials; Do We Need Them?" "What Social Entertainments Shall We Substitute for Those We Condemn?" Close with question box.

Saturday night, 7:45—Song service thirty minutes, by Blackstone Female Institute ladies, J. R. Sturgis to preside. Charity and help department. Close with the League and Missionary address of thirty minutes.

Sunday, 10:30 A. M., Sunday School; 11:30, sermon; 2:30 P. M., A. C. Berryman, presiding, devotional exercises one hour; 3:30 subject: "The Leader; His Preparation;" 3:40, "How to Lead;" 3:50, "How to Secure Good Singing;" 4:00, "How to Advertise;" 4:10, "How to Secure Variety."

Sunday night, 7:45, song service, then a sermon; exercises conclude with a consecration sermon.

The speakers and those to preach, except the case of Dr. A. Coke Smith, are not yet positively arranged, hence names not given.

CUBA STRETCHES HER HANDS TO US FOR HELP.

In company with Dr. W. R. Lambuth, Rev. H. W. Baker, Dr. C. A. Fulwood, and my wife, I recently visited Cuba—the nearest, neediest, ripest mission field of our Church.

When, on this great voyage to the West, Cuba broke upon Columbus, he said: "It is the most beautiful island that eyes ever beheld, full of excellent ports and profound rivers." Speaking of a lovely scene in one of its palm groves, he declared: "One could live there forever."

If conditions were as when the great admiral first looked upon "the pearl of the Antilles," his words would still ardently, but not inaccurately speak the truth. But conditions have changed since the Spaniard came.

A too prolonged application of Spanish flies has wellnigh drawn all the vitality out of the island. The soil and the climate remain, because they were beyond the reach of Spanish theft.

An impoverished, diminished, mixed population still remains, despite pestilence, starvation, war, and Captain-General Weyler. A visitor to the islands finds proof clear and unmistakable that Weyler intended to carry to a finish a policy of extermination. During his administration I read the newspaper reports of his atrocities, and discounted them much, doubting that such enormities could be practiced in the nineteenth century by the representative of a civilized government. I even doubted that our government was keeping well within its international rights by intervention. My visit to Havana convinced me that the horrible picture was not overdrawn, and that Americans did not interpose too soon. Weyler was the Duke of Alva in the nineteenth century, and even now when one stands in the streets of Havana and witnesses the squalor, the disease, and even death itself (we saw the dying on the streets), he feels as if he had been transported into the midst of mediaeval ignorance and distress.

It is difficult to say who has robbed these people most, the Spanish officials or the Romish priests. If it had not been the most fertile land imaginable, the enormous drain upon its resources would have exhausted it long ago. Yet it has had periods of comparative prosperity, and I predict when stable government has been established and the exhausting corruptions have been stopped, its speedy revival will surprise the world. American engineers are now laying out camps for our troops and devising plans of improved sewerage and sanitation. American surgeons are with them, daring the foulest and most pest-laden filth to give healthful conditions to this unhappy people, who look to the coming of their deliverers as the fever-stricken towns of Mississippi looked for the plague-destroying frost. And the people in Cuba are looking to our country for nobler things than sanitation and political deliverance. They want our Protestant religion. The Pope, not less than the Queen Regent, has lost the "ever faithful isle." True, it is said the Spanish officials are making over to the Romish Church valuable governmental property, that Romanism may have an opulent income when it is no longer a beneficiary of the State treasury; but this will not avail to save it. It has lost the people. And no wonder the people turn away from such a Church. They renounce it not alone because it is identified with Spanish sovereignty, which they abhor, but because it has its own enormous crimes to answer for.

One woman told my wife that at confession it was drawn out of her that she was an insurgent, and with the discovery she was cast into Morro Castle, where she languished for months, subjected to outrages which in any other land would have brought death to her tormentors. She cannot forget.

A photographer was cast into Morro Castle for making pictures of the cathedrals and paintings for some American periodicals. He told members of our party that some of the richest treasures of art are being surreptitiously sent away to Spain. As he told of his experiences in the Morro his language was bitter beyond measure. He will not forget.

None of the people can forget, for they have resentments which every joy and every sorrow of their lives will feed. Their marriages and their funerals alike arouse their hostility to their Church—once theirs, but now renounced forever.

Reading one morning the "Diario de la Marina," one of the daily papers, I observed in one of the municipal reports of births, deaths, marriages, etc., that the marriages were few and the legitimate births not many, while the figures for illegitimates were large. I asked an intelligent Cuban gentleman to explain these statistics to me. His explanation was that legitimacy or illegitimacy turned on the presence or absence of Romish rites at the marriage ceremony, and that the priesthood put these rites out of reach of the poor by their fees. In like manner the poor are denied decent burial. In the short distance of half a mile, as our party was returning from the Cristobal Colon Cemetery, we met three bodies borne in rented coffins on the shoulders of friends, to the potter's field. We were told that these bodies would be turned out into a sort of ditch provided for such persons. Then the bodies would be covered over with lime and earth, and then the coffins would be returned to the dealers from whom they were rented.

To meet such a distressing condition, the Baptist Mission owns a cemetery, and from it, I was informed, a monthly income of several hundred dollars was realized. Indeed, a Church burial ground is a good attachment to a mission plant in Havana.

Our little church has been held together during all the perilous days of the war by its brave pastor, Rev. Ysadore Barredo. It has, after all the losses of that distressing period, forty-eight members, and Barredo thinks if we had a better location it would probably be self-sustaining in three years. They paid their missionary assessment in full. This was done by thrift and self-denial since the termination of the blockade. During that time both preacher and people were at the point of starvation. I confess, the fact goes a long way to remove from my mind the doubt that Barredo's opinion was correct when he said the Church, if better housed, would be self-sustaining in three years.

We must have a better place—not alone in the interest of our Cuban Church, but for the welfare of our American people who are pouring into Havana. A suitable hall will cost not less than $800 a year. But it will pay to secure it at once.

We ought to occupy, besides Havana, the cities of Pinar del Rio, Matanzas, Santa Clara, Puerto Principe, Caibarien, Cienfuegos, Manzanillo, and Santiago. That would require not less than fifteen men, and for salaries and preaching places and mission homes would involve an outlay of $25,000. Some of this can be had on the field. How much, I do not know.

Surely fifteen men are not too many for an island four-fifths as large as Georgia, and having a population eight-tenths as great as Georgia's. We have 450 preachers on the effective list in the Georgia Conferences. I believe one-tenth as many in Cuba would show at the end of a year a net increase twice as large as the remaining eight-tenths would gather in my native State. The field is so ripe a consecrated man cannot fail to gather a large increase.

From the points I have named our preachers could go out to the neighboring towns and villages, and thus reach almost the entire population of the island. Barredo thinks that the people in these smaller towns, who are most of all ready and eager for Protestantism, would pay the travelling expenses and provide halls for the preachers who would visit them from the centres.

O, that we had the $25,000 needed for the first year! What a harvest could be gathered! The Baptist investment in Havana alone is estimated to be worth $65,000. But, in any event, we must have three men in Havana, one in Cienfuegos, and one in Santiago de Cuba. To do that will require $3,500 more than the Board of Missions has been able to appropriate for the Cuban work. Where will the money come from? I know not. I lay the facts before the Church, and make my prayer to God for this field so near, so needy, and so ripe. It is all I can do.

The letter from Messrs. Esperon and Fernandez, printed in this Advocate November 17th, is a fair index to a pervasive sentiment throughout the island.

W. A. CANDLER.

P. S.—Porto Rico seems out of the question, if this much cannot be done for Cuba.—Nashville Advocate.

NOTES.

Dr. John O. Keener, president of the Southern University, and son of Bishop Keener, suffered a stroke of paralysis a few days ago, and has since died. He was one of the finest looking men in the last General Conference, and no man seemed to have a promise of longer life and greater usefulness. Bishop Keener has had many afflictions in recent years, but none have been more severe than this one. He will have the prayers of his brethren in his hour of sore trial.

A pleasing episode at the close of the memorial service of the Alabama Conference occurred. A strange young man arose in the back part of the church and asked the privilege of saying a few words with reference to Dr. A. S. Andrews. It was Lieutenant R. P. Hobson. He told us how much Dr. Andrews had helped him when a student in the University, and how he had thought of Dr. Andrews when on the sea, and even when performing the perilous task of sinking the Merrimac. What a blessing to young men presidents of colleges and their professors may be!—Alabama Christian Advocate.

One step in the direction of temperance has been taken in France. A company having four hundred restaurants in various districts in Paris has announced that the use of spirits of all kinds is now prohibited in all its establishments.

Invitations have already been issued to the various national and international temperance societies to make arrangements for a world's temperance convention to be held in London in the year 1900. They are signed by the Archbishop of Canterbury. The last time such a convention was held there was in 1846.

At a recent meeting of the Salvation Army, Commissioner Boothe-Tucker made an earnest appeal for money to carry on the Army's work. A plainly-dressed lady in the audience responded by passing up a slip of paper, on which was written a promise to give realty valued at $20,000. She desired the gift to be anonymous, but it is found that her name is Mrs. Fuller, a widow of Bayonne, N. J.

THE SWAN AND THE CRANE.

In India the swan is considered a sacred bird, but they have a legend there that one day an old crane was out on the beach looking for snails, and down came a big white swan. The crane stretched out its great long neck and said to the swan:

"Where do you come from?"

The swan said he came from heaven.

"Heaven," said the crane, "I never heard of that place. Is it far away?"

"Oh, yes."

"Is it a good country?"

"Oh, yes."

"Is it better than this?"

"Oh, far better," and the swan went on explaining about its lakes and its rivers and its fountains and its climate. The old crane stood there listening, and when the swan got through, said:

"Have they any snails there?"

The swan drew itself up, and said: "No vile things! They wouldn't have them in heaven."

"Well, then," said the crane, "you can have your heaven; I don't want it. I want snails."

Don't you see a mighty truth wrapped up in that legend? I have had mothers come to me and say: "Mr. Moody, isn't it strange that my boy doesn't like spiritual things? Isn't it strange that he would rather have low, earthly things than spiritual things?" Strange? No! the natural man likes natural things, of course. The worldly man likes worldly things. Why shouldn't he? And the spiritual man likes spiritual things. Did you ever see a young man that has a beautiful mother, a lovely home, a godly father, and loving brother and sisters, and the home a little paradise on earth; and he will turn his back on that home and go to Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, and get into what you call the slums, and he will go down, down, until he gets to a miserable old saloon, where he is willing to clean out spittoons for drink. Tell him his mother wants him, is praying for him, and will give him a warm welcome, and tell him how his father will receive him; tell him there is going to be rejoicing in his home if he will come back, and tell him how his brothers and sisters long to have him come back, and he will turn and say:

"No; I want whiskey."

He has the old nature. He wants snails.

Tell him that he is going to lose his soul; tell him he is making shipwreck of his life—in fact, he has made shipwreck of his life—and tell him about the glories of heaven, and he will say:

"You can have heaven with all its glory. You may have mother; I will crush her under my heel. I despise Christianity."

He has the old carnal nature. But if he gets God's nature, he gets out from those surroundings pretty quick. You can't keep him there. What men want is to be born from heaven, born again, born of the Spirit. And then, they will live for heaven; and you will never get a man or woman to live for heaven until they are born from above, until they get the divine life.—D. L. Moody.

THE LEPER MISSIONARY.

The Extraordinary Recovery from Leprosy of Miss Mary Reed, of Pithoragarh, India.

Many of our readers were deeply interested in the thrilling story of Mary Reed, the leper missionary, which Dr. Louis Albert Banks told in this journal on June 9, 1897. They will be delighted to hear the sequel to that story which has just been received.

Miss Reed is a native of Lowell, Washington, county, Ohio, where she was born December, 1854. For several years she taught school in neighboring towns, until the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church accepted her offer to go as a missionary to India. She arrived in that land September, 1884, and began work at Cawnpore.

It will be remembered that Miss Reed, who had been laboring among the lepers of India, was on her way to her home in Ohio for a brief period of rest and recuperation, when she saw, with consternation, spots on her hand and arm, which she recognized as the first symptoms of leprosy. She had seen too many victims of the dread disease to have any doubt about the nature of the malady which produced these ominous spots. But in order to satisfy others, she consulted eminent specialists in London and Paris, and they confirmed her diagnosis.

She immediately came to the conclusion that her terrible condition was a direct indication of God's will as to her future course. Instead of collapsing under the discovery and lamenting the evil which was blasting her young life, she turned her face toward the abode of those similarly afflicted, and promptly returned to India to give her life to service among the lepers. On her arrival, her friends were inexpressibly shocked to learn the cause of her sudden and unexpected return. They begged her to consult the famous brigade surgeon of India, Dr. J. H. Condon, whose knowledge of the diseases of India is unsurpassed. To content them, she consented, though she foresaw the opinion he unhesitatingly pronounced, that she was undoubtedly a leper. He gave her the usual directions and prescribed for her the remedies which alleviate the sufferings of the victims of the disease. Miss Reed also asked the prayers of her friends, and then, bidding them farewell forever, went direct to the leper settlement at Pithoragarh, to give the remainder of her days to ministry among the afflicted inmates.

For some months past the letters that have reached her Ohio home from her retreat have described her health as wonderfully improving. Now, to the surprise and joy of her friends, there has come extraordinary news. Miss Reed has paid another visit to Dr. Condon, and to his own surprise, as much as to that of all who know her case, he pronounces her cured.

"I am cured," Miss Reed writes, "not by medicines, but by the Great Physician in answer to prayer."

So marvelous a recovery is a matter for devout thankfulness, and it will bring joy to the many people in this land who have made her case a matter of prayer.—Christian Herald.

CHANGED BY THE GOSPEL.

"Have you ever heard the Gospel before?" a Chinaman was asked, who had come into a mission room for the first time.

"No," he replied; "but I have seen it! I know a man who used to be the terror of his neighborhood. If you gave him a hard word, he would shoot at you and curse you. He was as dangerous as a wild beast, and a hard opium-smoker; but when the religion of Jesus took hold of him, he became wholly changed. He is gentle, moral, and has left off opium. Truly, the teaching is good."

An Unwelcome Visitor.

Mr. T., a business man of Cleveland, says The Plain Dealer, rents desk room in his office to Mr. B., whence the following story. "Is Mr. B. in?" asked a caller. "No," replied Mr. T., thinking he recognized an unwelcome caller. "Well, I'll wait for him," replied the caller, sitting down.

At 5 o'clock he was still waiting.

At 5:30, still waiting.

A few minutes before 6 Mr. T. closed his desk for the day and prepared to go home. The caller ventured to ask if Mr. B. was likely to return to his office that day. Mr. T. answered:

"No. He is in Buffalo and will be back next Tuesday morning."

The caller showed no anger. On the contrary, he smiled.

"Don't apologize," he said. "My business was not important, and your office has proved a pleasant lounging place. Fact is," he blandly added, "I suppose I'm coming down with the smallpox, and the doctor told me I must stay indoors and keep warm."

Fooled the Burglars.

The agent of an express company in Huntington, Ind., is a canny individual. Reasoning that money in a safe is in danger of being stolen by burglars, it has been his custom to take it out of the office safe every night and bring it home with him, so when burglars actually did break open the safe the other night they didn't get a cent.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON II, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JAN. 8.

Text of the Lesson, John 1, 35-46—Memory Verses, 35-37—Golden Text, John 1, 36—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1898, by D. M. Stearns.]

35, 36. "Again, the next day after John stood, and two of his disciples, and looking upon Jesus as He walked, he saith, Behold the Lamb of God." John was preaching and baptizing in Bethabara, beyond Jordan, and spoke of Jesus as one standing among them whom they knew not. The next day he seeth Jesus coming unto him and saith, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world" (verse 29). The next day of this verse therefore was a third day in the story. He does not now speak of taking away sin, but only of Him who takes it away. He Himself must occupy our attention, not as a mortal man, but as He who, having purged our sins, is at God's right hand, a risen immortal man, who was and is and is to come. The phrase "as He walked" makes us think of Him as He walked in the garden of Eden in the cool of the day, for He is the same Lord God who said to Adam, "Where art thou?" and who has ever been seeking the fellowship of man since first He created him in His own image.

37. "And the two disciples heard him speak and they followed Jesus." When we, as His witnesses, so speak that those who hear will follow Him, it is well, but if they follow us it is not well, for there is no man worth following except in so far as he follows Christ. When He is by us lifted up, He will draw unto Himself, and He was lifted up on the cross that all who look unto Him might be saved.

38. "Rabbi, where dwellest thou?" As Jesus turned and said, "What seek ye?" this was their reply. I think He is always saying that to us every day that we live. "What seek ye in one house or on His holy day? What seek ye in His book when ye read it, or when ye read any other book? What seek ye in your daily occupation in home or store or office on land or sea, at home or abroad? Is your answer like that of the Greeks, "We would see Jesus?" If so, He is always ready to reveal Himself to such, but it is in the old way of I Sam. iii, 21—"The Lord revealed Himself to Samuel by the word of the Lord." Where dwellest thou? might be answered by Isa. lxvi, 2, and lvii, 15, "He dwells in the lowly heart where there is a broken and contrite spirit."

39. "He saith unto them, Come and see. They came and saw where He dwelt and abode with Him that day, for it was about the tenth hour." It was about the sixth hour when before the crucifixion on that same morning Pilate said, "Behold your King" (John xix, 14), and as He was crucified at 9 a. m., as we reckon time it must have been 6 a. m. when Pilate said those words. At the same hour of the day He talked with the woman at the well (John iv, 6). Supposing that John uses the same reckoning in all his gospel, it must have been 10 a. m., when the two disciples went with Jesus.

40. "One of the two which heard John speak and followed Him was Andrew, Simon Peter's brother." It is probable that the other of the two was John, the author of this gospel. There is an incident in each of the other gospels in which the writer probably refers to himself as the unnamed party. We are sure that it was so in the case of Matthew. See Math. ix, 10, and compare Luke v, 29. The others are Mark xiv, 51; Luke xxiv, 18. But it is Jesus whom we must see, not John or Andrew or Matthew. Mark or Luke.

41. "He first findeth his own brother Simon and saith unto him, We have found the Messiah, which is, being interpreted, the Christ." By the testimony of John and the teaching of Jesus Andrew was convinced that Jesus was indeed Israel's long promised Messiah, and he hastens to tell the glad tidings to his own brother.

42. "And he brought him to Jesus, and when Jesus beheld him He said, Thou art Simon, the son of Jona." He therewith gave him a new name, Cephas, which means a stone. He did not need to be introduced to him to be told who he was.

for He knew all men, and He knew what was in man (John ii, 24, 25). There is much pretty talk about Jesus which does not bring Him to the heart as the one altogether lovely, nor does it bring people to Him as the only one who can meet the soul's need by taking away our sins.

43. "The day following Jesus would go forth into Galilee, and findeth Philip, and saith unto him, Follow Me." We seem to have set before us the events of consecutive days, and if so this would be the fourth day of this series. Why He should go and seek Philip we do not know, but He knew, for He always knows just what He is doing and why He is doing it, and some day we shall see that He has never done without cause anything that He has done (John vi, 6; Ezek. xiv, 23).

44. "Now Philip was of Bethsaida, the city of Andrew and Peter." Perhaps the three, with James and John, were all, like Simon and Anna, looking for the promised Messiah. The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth to show Himself strong on behalf of those whose hearts are perfect toward Him (II Chron. xvi, 9).

45. "Philip findeth Nathanael and saith unto him, We have found Him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph." These men were students of prophecy. They had probably talked many a time of Him of whom we read in Gen. iii and xlix, in the prophecies of Balaam, in Deut. xviii and xxxii, in Ps. ii and lxxii, in Isa. ix and xl, in Jer. xxiii and Ezek. xxxvii and, in fact, everywhere.

46. "And Nathanael said unto him, Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth? Philip saith unto him, Come and see." When he came and saw and heard Him for himself, then he cried, "Rabbi, Thou art the Son of God, Thou art the King of Israel" (verse 49). Micah had said that the Messiah would be born at Bethlehem. Hosea said He would come out of Egypt. Jeremiah said He would reign at Jerusalem, but where was it ever said that He would come from Nazareth? Nathanael was impressed with the thought that he was speaking to one who saw him when he evidently thought that no mortal eye beheld him. Perhaps under that fig tree he was communing with God. Jesus surprises him still further by telling him hereafter he would see still greater things, even an opened heaven, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man—evidently a reference to Jacob's vision of the ladder and a yet future fulfillment. Jesus said that Nathanael would see it; so shall we. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory (Col. iii, 4).

Tradition.

In the world dwelt a giant.
His name was Tradition.
All men bowed before him.

Lo, one day came a man
And defied the giant,
Who crushed him with quick, huge hands
Till red blood spattered the green grass,
While all the slaves shrieked "Fool!"

Years passed, and men,
Looking on his white life, said,
"There lived a hero!"
But the man was dead.

Amos Owen Cherry Trees!

The finest cherries and largest cherry tree in the known world grow on the famous Cherry Mountain, near Ellenboro, N. C.

For the past few years trees from this famous orchard have been transplanted in the surrounding country, and have proved a surprise to the people by their rapid growth, enormous size, and delicious fruit. The trees grow very tall, and spread out long, heavy limbs, and are filled with large, black heart-shaped cherries. As many as five bushels have been gathered from one tree. The fruit is very fine in flavor, and suitable for canning, pies, drying, etc., and, ripening as they do in May and June, they come in when other fruit is scarce, and sell readily at 10 cents per quart. Besides their great value as fruit trees, they make the finest of shade trees. Mr. John T. Patrick, chief industrial agent of the Seaboard Air Line, after examining them and seeing their great value as a fruit and shade tree, says:

"These trees are rapid growers; they make a good shade, and yield an abundant crop of large, black cherries, that find a ready market. One thousand trees will in five years from planting yield a revenue to the town that puts them out sufficient to pay town taxes, keep up the streets, and work the country roads leading into the town.

"It would be a big advertisement that will be worth thousands of dollars to be able to say 'our town has fruit-bearing trees enough on its sidewalks and public parks to pay the expenses of the town and build good county roads,' and will give you a world-wide reputation for thrift, enterprise, and good judgment."

Mr. Patrick did not only talk, but acted on his judgment, and we furnished to him and his agents over six thousand trees during 1897-'98 season.

The trees can be set any time from October 20th to March 30th, and it is a very rare thing for one to die. So rare that we gladly send another in place of any that die the first season, that has been carefully set out. We carefully pack all trees, so as to arrive in good condition. We can furnish them either by mail or express one to three years old. Small trees grow off better, and will make a large tree as quick as a ten-foot one, but we will furnish them any size up to ten feet high. We prepay all trees when cash accompanies the order. So it does not make any difference where you live, they will be delivered at the following prices:

One tree by mail 25c. Twenty tree by express $2 50
Six trees by mail $1 00 Fifty trees by express 5 00
Twelve trees by express 1 75 One hundred trees by express . 8 00

One tree free with each order, if you mention the Methodist Recorder.

Our Motto:

Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction. REGULAR COURSE!

This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teacher's Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN.

The Institute is the property of the Church. I was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent or Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Jan. 8, "A Precious Invitation."
Text, Math. xi, 28-30.

"Come unto Me."

The lot of a beast of burden in the east is far from an easy one. Heavy loads, long hours of work, scant food and abundant abuse are all too frequent. During the journey or the hours of work in the field little relief need be expected. Pathetic as is the condition of dumb animals, that of human beings is often more miserable and helpless. As the nature is higher and more capable of knowledge and spiritual pleasure it is by that very fact exposed to keener pain and consciousness of evil.

How many, even young in life, grow heartsick and soul tired, spirit hungry and utterly weary with the endless toil and strife. They crave love and good cheer. To all who find the burdens of life hard to bear, Jesus calls as a kind hearted man might call to an overloaded animal, "Come unto Me, and I will give you rest." Is it possible that in the midst of the work the pack shall be taken from the back and it shall be allowed to wander free and feed and sleep and rest? This is impossible while the caravan must move on in the desert and the plow be pulled through the furrow and the grain be trodden out on the thrashing floor. The work must go on, the load must be carried for our good and the good of others. The oasis and wells shadowed by palm trees are not yet reached. What then?

"Take My yoke upon you."

He puts His own neck into the yoke with us. He harnesses Himself alongside us to the plow. His own back shares the load we carry. His strength takes the weight that crushed us and we grow strong by His side. His presence beside us gives the thrill of companionship and cheer. He touches us as no other one does. He works so easily, so gladly, so tenderly with us. He shows us how to carry our part that still remains. The road is no shorter, the sun no less scorching, the load not an ounce less; but, oh, what a changel His yoke has made all so easy! The soul rests. The harness no longer chafes and galls. With songs of gladness we can do our work because we are working with and for Christ.

Patron of Learning.

Methodism from the first has been the patron of learning. The movement was born in a university and has ever encouraged true investigation. Intelligent piety has been the aim of all her efforts. Scripture holiness means intelligent, understanding devotion. This is the mission of Methodism to diffuse and establish.

Wesley, among his first acts, established a school for the neglected children of the miners near Bristol, England, which still lives and does good work. Asbury and Coke made early and strenuous efforts to found a college in America. Education has been fostered from the early days to the present. The long list of academies, colleges, universities and theological seminaries under the control of the church compares favorably with that of any church in the land. In every foreign mission field the school stands side by side with the chapel and medical dispensary.

At the beginning of this century religion was at a low ebb in the colleges of the land. Atheistic thought was in the ascendant. At the present time a large body of the teaching force is actively Christian, and a greater proportion of students than ever before are consistent believers in Christ. How much of this has been brought about by Methodist influence it would be impossible to say. But no inconsiderable share in shaping these changes must be credited to this source.

"Makers of Methodism."

This is the title of the book in the Epworth League reading course intended for the social department. All the volumes in the set this year are bound in fine style, well printed and of much greater value and interest than those in any previous course issued. This volume is specially valuable and should in some way be made familiar to all members. If it is impossible to induce all the members to read it, some review of it can be presented by one who has read it. Chapters can be assigned different ones to read and discuss. The more we become acquainted with the makers of our history, the founders of our church and pioneers of our faith the more heroic does it tend to make our lives. We catch inspiration from them and our principles become more stable. One of the best correctives of the laxity and frivolity of the times lies in a new study of the fortitude and faith of the fathers and mothers of Methodism. The example of Susannah Wesley should ever be kept before the young motherhood of our land. Let the lives of the saints be studied, and saintly character will revive and flourish. Get the book and use it.

No one possessing the love of God will willingly or knowingly do what will harm his fellow man if he can possibly avoid it. If drinking causes my brother man to fall into evil, I must give up the drink, or Christ will give me up.

We Worship Thee.

We worship Thee, O blessed Lord,
With songs of loftiest praise!
Most wonderful in heaven and earth
Are all Thy works and ways.

The fountain head of life art Thou,
The source of all that's good,
Most wonderful Thy love to us;
Thy rod the holy rood.

Pilgrims are we, sojourners here,
We seek a better land.
Most wonderful, Thou leadest us
By Thy most gracious hand.

By faith we claim the promises
That he who keeps Thy way,
Most wonderful, shall reign with Thee
In realms of endless day.

BEAR NATURE.

It Is Good and Bad, Something Like the Human Variety.

A little Tam O'Shanter cap afforded the text for a discourse which interested a number of visitors to Forest park the other afternoon. It belonged to a golden haired little girl, who rushed up to the bear cage, after a romp through the autumn leaves. With the buoyancy of childhood she twirled the cap about her fingers and laughed gleefully at the antics of the bears until in her excitement the Tam O'Shanter escaped her and went flying into the cage. A black paw was upon it the instant it struck the stone floor of the pit. Two black eyes surveyed it critically, and then the owner of the paws and eyes rolled over it like a football player scoring a touchdown. Miss Columbia lay in a corner of the pit and let Uncle Sam have all the fun. Suddenly the little black ball of fur unfolded. One black paw grasped the cap and bruin advanced to the iron bars outside of which many grown persons and children, one of them a crying little girl, stood watching him. His next move was surprising. He threw the cap through the bars at the very feet of its golden haired owner.

"Well, that beats anything I ever saw!" exclaimed a young man who had witnessed the whole performance.

"That observation, my boy, shows how little you know about bear nature." It was a gray bearded man, bent with age and leaning on a cane, who spoke.

"If you knew bears as I do," he continued, "you would not marvel. The black bear is the best natured fellow on earth. He is mean only when self preservation demands it. Now, if that little girl's cap had fallen in the cage of that old grizzly over there, there would not be enough of it left to cover a safe cracker's conscience. The grizzly is a confirmed pessimist. He would have taken that cap as a personal insult. He would have jumped to the conclusion that that little girl there was trying to worry him, and he'd have got even good and strong. The black bear, on the other hand, is a sunny natured optimist. He was sorry for the little girl, and when he saw her crying he just couldn't help handing back the cap. Now watch this."

The old man picked up a piece of paper, rolled it into a wad and threw it into the cage containing the black bears. It was Miss Columbia who came to the front this time. She seemed delighted beyond expression and played with the piece of paper, knocking it about from one end of the cage to the other. The gray whiskered man had meantime prepared another paper ball. This he tossed into the grizzly's pit. The big fellow hit at it viciously as it flew past him. With grunts of rage he pursued it and tore it into a thousand fragments. Then he leaped toward the bars, saying plainly in bear language that he could lick the fellow who had insulted him.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

No Examination For the Chief.

I have just seen a curious letter sent to Cardinal Lavigerie's white friars from Bandoenville by Mgr. Roelens. In this letter the bishop of Kongo details the results which have been achieved in the work of Christian civilization and tells the following amusing anecdote:

"Returning from Mpala one day, I stopped at St. Joseph de Kipakive and attended a catechism class for women and children. Afterward I went to see Kyanza, the chief of the district, who, I was told, had been absent for some time past from religious instruction. I pressed him to set a good example to his people and promised him the divine blessing if he followed my counsels. He has great need of it, poor fellow. He has always been a brave man, it is true, and has ever shown himself the friend of the missionaries; but, like all the chiefs, he has never had the courage to renounce polygamy.

"He has promised me, however, that he will attend the classes regularly, but on one condition—that no questions are to be put to him. 'Monsignore,' he said, 'the words of the priest do not penetrate an old head like mine. If I were questioned, I should be unable to reply and should be the laughing stock of the children who knew better than I did. That is not seemly, for here I am the chief, and I must be respected.'"—Rome Letter in London Post.

A Royal Romance.

Those who think that the queen of the Netherlands will marry Prince William of Wied tell this story of how it came about: Princess Pauline of Wurttemberg, who is the intimate friend and sole confidant of Queen Wilhelmina, married the elder brother of Prince William of Wied.

Before her marriage the princess used to spend a part of the year with the presumptive heiress to the throne of Holland, and the two friends at times would dream dreams of the future, as young girls will do be they princesses or peasants. Engaged in this pleasant occupation one day, they thought to themselves how agreeable it would be if they were to marry two brothers and thus unite themselves by bonds of kinship as well as affection. The idea grew on them, and they determined if possible to carry it into effect.

Antiscandal League.

Some well meaning enthusiasts of the fashionable set in London are trying to start an "Antiscandal league." "Smart" society has been invited by circular to give adhesion to this novel movement. The members of the league are enjoined "to combat pleasantly any slander uttered in your presence and to enlist the offender as a member of the league." The new crusade has excited more amusement than interest, especially as it has been initiated by some members of the defunct set styling themselves "The Souls," in which Arthur Balfour was high priest and Margot Tennant (now Mrs. Herbert Asquith) was high priestess.—London Correspondence.

The Pope's Love of Chess.

It may not be known that Leo XIII is an ardent lover of chess. He has been a constant player for over 30 years, and his skill in the game is anything but mediocre. His holiness' favorite opponent used to be Father Giulio, with whom he was in the habit of playing when he was Cardinal Pecci. On being raised to the pontifical throne he summoned Father Giulio from Florence, where he was then stationed, and gave him apartments in the Vatican. Father Giulio was said to combine a rare mastery of the game with an exceedingly irascible temper. Sometimes during a game with his holiness he would burst out into an ungovernable fit of rage. On such occasions Leo XIII immediately interrupted the contest and proceeded to deliver a little homily on the virtues of Christian resignation and self control.—Rome Correspondence.

Life Imprisonment For Mrs. Botkin.

San Francisco, Dec. 31.—The jury in the case of Mrs. Botkin, charged with murdering Mrs. John P. Dunning by sending poisoned candy to her at Dover, Del., returned a verdict last evening finding the prisoner guilty of murder in the first degree, with the penalty fixed at life imprisonment.

A Reminder From Spain.

Madrid, Jan. 2.—The minister for foreign affairs, Duke of Almodovar Del Rio, is about sending a note to Washington to remind the American government of its undertaking, by the terms of the treaty of Paris, to obtain the liberty of the Spanish prisoners in the Philippines.

THE DAWNING YEAR.

DR. TALMAGE GIVES OUT SOME APT
NEW YEAR THOUGHTS.

Life Is Not Measured by Years—Nor Should It Be Measured by Misfortune—Wealth Makes a Very Poor Yardstick.

[Copyright, 1898, by American Press Association.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1.—Appropriate to the exit of one year and the entrance of another year are the practical suggestions which Dr. Talmage puts in this discourse, which propose a different mode of measuring time from that ordinarily employed; text, Genesis xlvii, 8, "How old art thou?"

The Egyptian capital was the focus of the world's wealth. In ships and barges there had been brought to it from India frankincense and cinnamon and ivory and diamonds; from the north, marble and iron; from Syria, purple and silk; from Greece, some of the finest horses of the world and some of the most brilliant chariots, and from all the earth that which could best please the eye and charm the ear and gratify the taste. There were temples aflame with red sandstone, entered by the gateways that were guarded by pillars bewildering with hieroglyphics and wound with brazen serpents and adorned with winged creatures, their eyes and beaks and pinions glittering with precious stones; there were marble columns blooming into white flower beds; there were stone pillars, at the top bursting into the shape of the lotus when in full bloom.

Along the avenues, lined with sphinx and fane and obelisk, there were princes who came in gorgeously upholstered palanquins, carried by servants in scarlet or elsewhere drawn by vehicles, the snow white horses, golden bitted and six abreast, dashing at full run. On floors of mosaic the glories of Pharaoh were spelled out in letters of porphyry and beryl and flame. There were ornaments twisted from the wood of tamarisk, embossed with silver breaking into foam. There were footstools made out of a single precious stone. There were beds fashioned out of a crouched lion in bronze. There were chairs spotted with the sleek hides of leopards. There were sofas footed with the claws of wild beasts and armed with the beaks of birds. As you stand on the level beach of the sea on a summer day and look either way, and there are miles of breakers, white with the ocean foam, dashing shoreward, so it seemed as if the sea of the world's pomp and wealth in the Egyptian capital for miles and miles flung itself up into white breakers of marble temple, mausoleum and obelisk.

It was to this capital and the palace of Pharaoh that Jacob, the plain shepherd, came to meet his son Joseph, who had become prime minister in the royal apartment. Pharaoh and Jacob met, dignity and rusticity, the gracefulness of the court and the plain manners of the field. The king, wanting to make the old country man at ease and seeing how white his beard is and how feeble his step, looks familiarly into his face and says to the aged man, "How old art thou?"

Last night the gate of eternity opened to let in amid the great throng of departed centuries the soul of the dying year. Under the twelfth stroke of the brazen hammer of the city clock the patriarch fell dead, and the stars of the night were the funeral torches. It is most fortunate that on this road of life there are so many milestones, on which we can read just how fast we are going toward the journey's end. I feel that it is not an inappropriate question that I ask today when I look into your faces and say, as Pharaoh did to Jacob, the patriarch, "How old art thou?"

How Life Is Measured.

People who are truthful on every other subject lie about their ages, so that I do not solicit from you any literal response to the question I have asked. I would put no one under temptation, but I simply want this morning to see by what rod it is we are measuring our earthly existence. There is a right way and a wrong way of measuring a door, or a wall, or an arch, or a tower, and so there is a right way and a wrong way of measuring our earthly existence. It is with reference to this higher meaning that I confront you this morning with the stupendous question of the text and ask, "How old art thou?"

There are many who estimate their life by mere worldly gratification. When Lord Dundas was wished a happy new year, he said, "It will have to be a happier year than the past, for I hadn't one happy moment in all the 12 months that have gone." But that has not been the experience of most of us. We have found that though the world is blasted with sin it is a very bright and beautiful place to reside in. We have had joys innumerable. There is no hostility between the gospel and the merriments and the festivities of life. I do not think that we fully enough appreciate the worldly pleasures God gives us. When you recount your enjoyments, you do not go far enough back. Why do you not go back to the time when you were an infant in your mother's arms, looking up into the heaven of her smile; to those days when you filled the house with the uproar of boisterous merriment; when you shouted as you pitched the ball on the playground; when on the cold, sharp winter night, muffled up, on skates you shot out over the resounding ice of the pond? Have you forgotten all those good days that the Lord gave you? Were you never a boy? Were you never a girl? Between those times and this how many mercies the Lord has bestowed upon you! How many joys have breathed up to you from the flowers and shone down to you from the stars and ebullient to you with the voice of soaring bird and tumbling cascade and booming sea and thunders that with bayonets of fire charged down the mountain side! Joy! Joy! Joy! Joy! If there is any one who has a right to the enjoyments of the world, it is the Christian, for God has given him a lease of everything in the promise, "All are yours." But I have to tell you that a man who estimates his life on earth by mere worldly gratification is a most unwise man. Our life is not to be a game of chess. It is not a dance in lighted hall, to quick music. It is not the froth of an ale pitcher. It is not the settlings of a wine cup. It is not a banquet, with intoxication and roistering. It is the first step on a ladder that mounts into the skies or the first step on a road that plunges into a horrible abyss. "How old art thou?" Toward what destiny are you tending and how fast are you getting on toward it?

The Furrowed Brow.

Again, I remark that there are many who estimate their life on earth by their sorrows and misfortunes. Through a great many of your lives the plowshare hath gone very deep, turning up a terrible furrow. You have been betrayed, and misrepresented, and set upon, and slapped of impertinence, and pounded of misfortune. The brightest life must have its shadows and the smoothest path its thorns. On the happiest brood the hawk pounces. No escape from trouble of some kind. While glorious John Milton was losing his eyesight he heard that Salmasius was glad of it. While Sheridan's comedy was being enacted in Drury Lane theater, London, his enemy sat growling at it in the stage box. While Bishop Cooper was surrounded by the favor of learned men his wife took his lexicon manuscript, the result of a long life of anxiety and toil, and threw it into the fire. Misfortune, trial, vexation for almost every one! Pope, applauded of all the world, has a stoop in the shoulder that annoys him so much that he has a tunnel dug, so that he may go unobserved from garden to grotto and from grotto to garden. Cano, the famous Spanish artist, is disgusted with the crucifix that the priest holds before him because it is such a poor specimen of sculpture, and so, sometimes through taste, and sometimes through learned menace, and sometimes through physical distresses—aye in 10,000 ways—troubles come to harass and annoy.

And yet it is unfair to measure a man's life by his misfortunes, because there are 50 marigolds and harebells; where there is one cloud thunder charged there are hundreds that stray across the heavens, the glory of land and sky, asleep in their bosom. Because death came and took your child away did you immediately forget all the five years, or the ten years, or the 15 years in which she came every night for a kiss, all the tones of your heart pealing forth at the sound of her voice or the soft touch of her hand? Because in some financial Euroclydon your fortune went into the breakers did you forget all those years in which the luxuries and extravagances of life showered on your pathway? Alas, that is an unwise man, an ungrateful man, an unfair man, an unphilosophic man, and, most of all, an un-Christian man, who measures his life on earth by groans and tears and dyspeptic fit and abuse and scorn and terror and neuralgic thrust!

Again, I remark that there are many people who estimate their life on earth by the amount of money they have accumulated. They say, "The year 1866 or 1870 or 1898 was wasted." Why? "Made no money." Now, it is all cant and insincerity to talk against money, as though it had no value. It may represent refinement and education and ten thousand blessed surroundings. It is the spreading of the table that feeds the children's hunger. It is the spreading of the table that feeds the children's hunger. It is the lighting of the furnace that keeps you warm. It is the making of the bed on which you rest from care and anxiety. It is the carrying of you out at last to decent sepulcher, and the putting up of the slab on which is chiseled the story of your Christian hope. It is simply hypocrisy, this tirade in pulpit and lecture hall against money.

The Curse of Money.

But while all this is so, he who uses money or thinks of money as anything but a means to an end, will find out his mistake when the glittering treasures slip out of his nerveless grasp, and he goes out of this world without a shilling of money or a certificate of stock. He might better have been the Christian porter that opened his gate or the begrimed workman who last night heaved the coal into his cellar. Bonds and mortgages and leases have their use, but they make a poor yardstick with which to measure life. "They that boast themselves in their wealth and trust in the multitude of their riches, none of them can, by any means, redeem his brother or give to God a ransom for him that he should not see corruption."

But I remark, there are many—I wish there were more—who estimate their life by their moral and spiritual development.

It is not sinful egotism for a Christian man to say: "I am purer than I used to be. I am more consecrated to Christ than I used to be. I have got over a great many of the bad habits in which I used to indulge. I am a great deal better man than I used to be." There is no sinful egotism in that. It is not base egotism for a soldier to say, "I know more about military tactics than I used to before I took a musket in my hand and learned to 'present arms' and when I was a pest to the drill officer." It is not base egotism for a sailor to say, "I know better how to clew down the mizzen topsail than I used to before I had ever seen a ship." And there is no sinful egotism when a Christian man, fighting the battles of the Lord, or if you will have it, voyaging toward a haven of eternal rest, says, "I know more about spiritual tactics and about voyaging toward heaven than I used to."

Why, there are those in this presence who have measured lances with many a foe and unhorsed it! There are Christian men here who have become swarthy by hammering at the forge of calamity. They stand on an entirely different plane of character from that which they once occupied. They are measuring their life on earth by golden gated Sabbaths, by pentecostal prayer meeting, by communion tables, by baptismal fonts, by halleluiahs in the temple. They have stood on Sinai and heard it thunder. They have stood on Pisgah and looked over into the promised land. They have stood on Calvary and seen the cross bleed. They can, like Paul the apostle, write on their heaviest troubles "light" and "but for a moment." The darkest night their soul is irradiated, as was the night over Bethlehem, by the faces of those who have come to proclaim glory and good cheer. They are only waiting for the gate to open and the chains to fall off and the glory to begin.

I remark again, there are many—and I wish there were more—who are estimating life by the good they can do.

John Bradford said he counted that day nothing at all in which he had not by pen or tongue done some good. If a man begin right, I cannot tell how many tears he may wipe away, how many burdens he may lift, how many orphans he may comfort, how many outcasts he may reclaim. There have been men who have given their whole life in the right direction, concentrating all their wit and ingenuity and mental acumen and physical force and enthusiasm for Christ. They climbed the mountain and delved into the mine and crossed the sea and trudged the desert and dropped at last into martyrs' graves, waiting for the resurrection of the just. They measured their lives by the chains they broke off, by the garments they put upon nakedness, by the miles they traveled to alleviate every kind of suffering. They felt in the thrill of every nerve, in the motion of every muscle, in every throb of their heart, in every respiration of their lungs, the magnificent truth, "No man liveth unto himself." They went through cold and through heat, foot blistered, cheek smitten, back scourged, tempest lashed, to do their whole duty. That is the way they measured life—by the amount of good they could do.

The Eternal Life.

Do you want to know how old Luther was? How old Richard Baxter was? How old Philip Doddridge was? Why, you cannot calculate the length of their lives by any human arithmetic! Add to their lives 10,000 times 10,000 years, and you have not expressed it—what they have lived or will live. Oh, what a standard that is to measure a man's life by! There are those in this house who think they have only lived 30 years. They will have lived a thousand; they have lived a thousand. There are those who think they are 80 years of age. They have not even entered upon their infancy, for one must become a babe in Christ to begin at all.

Now, I do not know what your advantages or disadvantages are. I do not know what your tact or talent is. I do not know what may be the fascination of your manners or the repulsiveness of them, but I know this: There is for you, my bearer, a field to culture, a harvest to reap, a tear to wipe away, a soul to save. If you have worldly means, consecrate them to Christ. If you have eloquence, use it on the side that Paul and Wilberforce used theirs. If you have learning, put it all into the poor box of the world's suffering. But if you have none of these—neither wealth, nor eloquence, nor learning—you at any rate have a smile with which you can encourage the disheartened, a frown with which you may blast injustice, a voice with which you may call the wanderer back to God. "Oh," you say, "that is a very sanctimonious view of life!" It is not. It is the only bright view of life, and it is the only bright view of death. Contrast the death scene of a man who has measured life by the worldly standard with the death scene of a man who has measured life by the Christian standard. Quin, the actor, in his last moments said, "I hope this tragic scene will soon be over, and I hope to keep my dignity to the last." Malesherbes said in his last moments to the confessor: "Hold your tongue! Your miserable style puts me out of conceit with heaven." Lord Chesterfield in his last moments, when he ought to have been praying for his soul, bothered himself about the proprieties of the sick-room and said, "Give Dayboles a chair." Godfrey Kneller spent his last hours on earth in drawing a diagram of his own monument.

Compare the silly and horrible departure of such men with the seraphic glow on the face of Edward Payson as he said in his last moment: "The breezes of heaven fan me. I float in a sea of glory." Or with Paul the apostle, who said in his last hour: "I am now ready to be offered up, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought the good fight, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give me." Or compare it with the Christian deathbed that you witnessed in your own household. Oh, my friends, this world is a false god. It will consume you with the blaze in which it accepts your sacrifice, while the righteous shall be held in everlasting remembrance, and when the thrones have fallen and the monuments have crumbled and the world has perished they shall banquet with the conquerors of earth and the hierarchs of heaven.

The Coming Year.

This is a good day in which to begin a new style of measurement. How old art thou? You see the Christian way of measuring life and the worldly way of measuring it. I leave it to you to say which is the wisest and best way. The wheel of time has turned very swiftly, and it has hurled us on. The old year has gone. The new year has come. For what you and I have been launched upon it God only knows. Now let me ask you all, have you made any preparation for the future? You have made preparation for time, my dear brother. Have you made any preparation for eternity? Do you wonder that when that man on the Hudson river in indignation tore up the tract which was handed to him and just one word landed on his coat sleeve, the rest of the tract being pitched into the river, that one word aroused his soul? It was that one word, so long, so broad, so high, so deep—"eternity." A dying woman, in her last moments, said, "Call it back." They said, "What do you want?" "Time," she said, "call it back." Oh, it cannot be called back. We might lose our fortunes and call them back; we might lose our health, and perhaps recover it; we might lose our good name and get that back, but time gone is gone forever.

Some of you during the past year made preparation for eternity, and it makes no difference to you really, as to the matter of safety, whether you go now or go some other year—whether this year or the next year. Both your feet on the rock, the waves may dash around you. You can say, "God is our refuge and strength—a very present help." You are on the rock, and you may defy all earth and hell to overthrow you. I congratulate you. I give you great joy. It is a happy new year to you.

I can see no sorrow at all in the fact that our years are going. You hear some people say, "I wish I could go back again to boyhood." I would not want to go back again to boyhood. I am afraid I might make a worse life out of it than I have made. You could not afford to go back to boyhood if it were possible. You might do a great deal worse than you have done. The past is gone! Look out for the future! To all Christians it is a time of gladness. I am glad the years are going. You are coming on nearer home. Let your countenance light up with the thought—nearer home!

Now, when one can sooner get to the center of things is he not to be congratulated? Who wants to be always in the freshman class? We study God in this world by the Biblical photograph of him, but we all know we can in five minutes of interview with a friend get a more accurate idea of him than we can by studying him 50 years through pictures or words. The little child that died at six months of age knows more of God than all Andover and all Princeton and all New Brunswick.

Does not our common sense teach us that it is better to be at the center than to be clear out on the rim of the wheel, holding nervously fast to the tire lest we be suddenly hurled into light and eternal felicity? Through all kinds of optical instruments trying to peer in through the cracks and the keyholes of heaven—afraid that both doors of the celestial mansion will be swung wide open before our entranced vision—rushing about among the apothecary shops of this world wondering if this is good for rheumatism and that is good for neuralgia and something else is good for a bad cough, lest we be suddenly ushered into a land of everlasting health where the inhabitant never says, "I am sick!"

What fools we all are to prefer the circumference to the center! What a dreadful thing it would be if we should be suddenly ushered from this wintry world into the May time orchards of heaven, and if our pauperism of sin and sorrow should be suddenly broken up by a presentation of an emperor's castle surrounded by parks with springing fountains and paths, up and down which angels of God walk two and two!

In 1835 the French resolved that at Ghent they would have a kind of musical demonstration that had never been heard of. It would be made up of the chimes of bells and the discharge of cannon. The experiment was a perfect success. What with the ringing of the bells and the report of the ordnance the city trembled and the hills shook with the triumphal march that was as strange as it was overwhelming. With a most glorious accompaniment will God's dear children go into their high residence when the trumpets shall sound and the last day has come. At the signal given the bells of the towers, and of the lighthouses, and of the cities will strike their sweetness into a last chime that shall ring into the heavens and float off upon the sea, joined by the boom of bursting mine and magazine, augmented by all the cathedral towers of heaven—the harmonies of earth and the symphonies of the celestial realm making up one great triumphal march, fit to celebrate the ascent of the redeemed to where they shall shine as the stars forever and ever.

Such Extravagance!

GENERAL SOUTHERN NEWS.

Wheeling, W. Va., Dec. 29.—The Intelligencer publishes a brief letter over Judge Nathan Goff's signature stating that he is not, nor does he intend to be, a candidate before the coming legislature for United States senator. The leading Republican candidates are, therefore, Governor Atkinson and Hon. N. B. Scott.

Richmond, Va., Dec. 27.—Governor Tyler tonight gave out for publication his letter to the acting secretary of the treasury, protesting against the decision of the comptroller, claiming that the money paid by the state in equipping the troops should be used as an offset for claims due to the general government by the commonwealth.

Huntington, W. Va., Dec. 27.—A blaze at Culloden last night, entailing a loss of $6,000, originated in a very peculiar way. Some young lads tied a box of fire crackers to a dog's tail, when the dog ran under the store building of S. B. Blackwell. The building ignited and was burned to the ground, together with the contents. The loss is covered by insurance.

Raleigh, N. C., Dec. 23.—Last night Thomas Smith, colored, was brought here and jailed to save him from lynching. He lives near Smithfield. Yesterday three white boys passing his house threw in some fire crackers. Smith ran out, and with a pocketknife cut the throat of one boy named Cawthorne. The boy fell dead. Smith then cut the throat of another, but missed the jugular vein.

Thomasville, Ga., Dec. 28.—Miss Mercedes Garcia, daughter of the late Calixto Garcia, the Cuban leader, died at the Masury hotel, in this city, last evening of consumption. Mrs. Garcia and her two daughters arrived here the day General Garcia died in Washington, and while at dinner received the intelligence of his death. The contents of the telegram were never revealed to Mercedes.

Parkersburg, W. Va., Dec. 27.—Judge Henry Brannon, sitting in chambers at Weston, has granted Hon. W. R. D. Dent, of Grafton, a writ of mandamus, compelling the board of canvassers of Taylor county to declare the result of the recent recount in that county and issue to him a certificate of election to the house of delegates, in accordance with that recount. A special session has been called for Dec. 30 at Charleston to hear the case.

Knoxville, Tenn., Dec. 28.—Captain John M. Tobin, until recently quartermaster of the First brigade of the division at Camp Poland, committed suicide yesterday by firing a pistol ball into his mouth. The bullet passed through his spinal column, killing him instantly. Captain Tobin was formerly a Boston man, but he is believed to have come here from Washington. He has been morbid for some time, presumably on account of his discharge from the volunteer army when it was being reorganized.

Richmond, Va., Dec. 27.—The marriage in Manchester today of Charles W. Swann was an unusual one. The groom had been twice married to the same lady, and convicted of bigamy and sentenced to three years in the penitentiary for his first marriage to her. The first marriage to his present wife was performed after Swann had obtained a partial divorce, and he married under a misapprehension of his rights. The governor pardoned Swann, and the divorce was completed, and the wedding followed today.

Harmony Grove, Ga., Dec. 27.—Jeff Bolton, colored, was lynched at Wood's Bridge, two miles east of this place, Saturday night by unknown parties. This is the negro who is charged with having shot at Mr. Van Wyler one night last week, and of having set fire to Van Wyler's barn Thursday night. A warrant was issued for the negro's arrest, and he was tried at Dry Pond Saturday evening and committed to jail in default of bond. The officers started with their prisoner to Jefferson Jan, but were met en route by a mob of masked men, who took the prisoner away from them.

Texarkana, Tex., Dec. 27.—Two persons were killed and another seriously injured yesterday in a shooting affray near Fouke, Ark., a town 18 miles from here on the Texarkana and Shreveport railroad. Two men named McKnight and Firquin quarreled and fought over a wagon trade. McKnight drew a revolver and fired at Firquin, but shot wildly and mortally wounded White Easley, a young man, who stood nearby. Easley died within a few minutes, but while life lasted he drew a revolver and shot into McKnight's house, killing an 18-year-old daughter of McKnight and injuring a younger daughter. McKnight is under arrest.

Morgantown, Va., Dec. 27.—Roscoe Tennant was lodged in jail here this afternoon to await the action of the grand jury. The charge is that he stabbed Will Moore in the neck in a fight Saturday night. Moore died on Monday. The fight occurred at a Christmas celebration, which a number of young toughs undertook to break up, on Jake's Run, near here. David Morrow, of Clarion county, stabbed J. E. Noel, an Allegheny citizen, in the left side seven times in a row near Flyblow, this county. Noel may die as the result of his injuries. Noel was the bully of the camp and Morrow was his butt. They were oil drillers. Morrow claims self defense.

San Antonio, Tex., Dec. 30.—The local officer of the Wells-Fargo Express company is out a money package containing $60,000. The money was sent here from Houston for the Southern Pacific to meet its payroll west from this city to El Paso. It arrived Wednesday morning and was given to C. A. Boeler, the Wells-Fargo money delivery clerk, to hand over. Boeler started for the depot, and was seen en route. Four hours after his departure his wagon was found five miles west of the city in a thicket, the horse almost dead from the effects of hard driving. Inquiry developed the fact that no delivery had been made. There was no evidence of a struggle in the vicinity where the vehicle was found. Boehler had been in the employ of the company for nine years, and enjoyed the confidence of all. He spent several years on the frontier as a cowboy. His friends stoutly assert that he is the victim of foul play, and his wife also inclines to this belief.

The Peace of Europe.

Europe is an armed camp.
The echo of the sentry's tramp
Is heard by night in every town, While on the heights grim earthworks frown.
The frontiers are hedged with steel.
Their roads are grooved with cannon wheel.

New arms are forged with murderous skill,
And every man is trained to kill;
With rifle shot or cannon's breath
To strike from far with sudden death,
Hurling to judgment those that live,
Usurping God's prerogative.

And at the counter, desk and till Merchants and clerks are soldiers still,
And, like the puppets in their box,
The showman tosses there and lox,
They will be taken forth some day
To act in dreadful tragedy.

When next the battle blast is blown,
'Twill not be army corps alone.
Whole nations in a mass shall rise
And rush to bloody sacrifice,
While from the seas their cannons roar
To answering cannon on the shore.

Peace moans and tosses in her sleep
And thinks she sees a shadow creep
To plunge a dagger in her breast.
She struggles, with the dream oppressed,
Then starts in terror from the bed.
The sword has fallen from its head.

When will it come, for come it must—
The great and awful holocaust,
The solemn cannon thunder loud,
The black and heavy sulphur cloud,
Which, like a death pall in the sky,
Shall hang where countless thousands die;

The pouring of the leaden rain
Upon the life incumbered plain,
The sudden lightnings, leaping wide
To blast the armies in their pride?
From all these millions of men,
Oh, death shall reap a harvest then!

SENATOR MORRILL DEAD

The Veteran Statesman Succumbs
After a Week's Illness.

GRIP DEVELOPED PNEUMONIA.

He Had Served in Congress Continuously For Forty-four Years, Over Thirty-one of Which Were Spent as a Member of the Upper House.

Washington, Dec. 28.—Hon. Justin S. Morrill, the senior senator from Vermont, died at 1:25 o'clock this morning, in the 89th year of his age, after an illness of less than a week. With him when the end came were his sister-in-law, Miss Louise Swan, his son James, Mr. Benjamin Durfee, for a long time associated with the senator in the finance committee work at the Capitol, and Colonel S. E. Chamberlain, an intimate friend. Senator Proctor was in the house at the time, as were also several other friends. The senator never recovered from the unconscious state into which he lapsed early in the day, and his death was calm and peaceful.

The immediate cause of death was pneumonia, which developed from an attack of grip contracted about a week ago. The venerable senator was confined to his home but seven days. Despite his advanced age, he attended to his senatorial duties faithfully, and regularly went to the Capitol. About ten days ago the weather here was cold, raw and foggy and his physician thinks that exposure to its rigors brought on the attack of grip. The day before congress adjourned for the Christmas holidays the senator was unable to leave his residence. He grew no better as the days went on, his low vitality, due to advanced age, being unable to resist the disease. On Christmas night it developed into pneumonia, and from that time until the end he sank steadily.

Justin Morrill was born in Strafford, Orange county, Vt., April 14, 1810. He received an ordinary education in the schools of the neighborhood. When a young man he entered mercantile life, quickly acquired a modest fortune and became interested in banking and agricultural pursuits. In 1856 he was elected to the lower house of congress, serving continuously until March 3, 1868.

Mr. Morrill took his seat in the United States senate March 4, 1868, and was re-elected at the close of each term. He was the colleague for many years of Senator Edmunds, for whom he entertained a high regard. Mr. Morrill had served continuously in the senate for more than 31 years, and he was 88 years old on the 14th of April last. With the single exception of Hon. Galusha A. Grow, of the house of representatives, he was the only man in congress whose congressional career began prior to the beginning of the civil war, and he had the honor over Mr. Grow in that his congressional service had been continuous, covering in the senate and house combined almost 44 years. His present term, to which he was chosen in 1896, would not have expired until 1903.

Emperor William Declines a Big Fee.

London, Jan. 2.—The Berlin correspondent of The Observer says that a local paper, the name of which is not given, vouches for the truth of an amusing story, according to which Emperor William received a letter from a New York publisher, enclosing a check for $5,000, and requesting that his majesty write an article giving his views upon the Spanish-American war. The check was returned through the German embassy at Washington, with the observation that his majesty has no time nor wish at present to devote himself to a journalistic career.

Snowstorm in California.

San Francisco, Jan. 2.—A general storm prevails throughout the northern portion of California, with every indication of extending to the southern counties. In addition to generous rains in the valleys there has been a heavy fall of snow in the higher altitudes. On the Oregon line snow has fallen as far south as Red Bluff, and rain at all points between there and Sacramento. Dunsmuir has accumulated 30 inches of snow, and there is almost as much at Redding. From Colfax eastward to Reno the snowfall has been very heavy.

A Gift to the Naval Cadets.

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 2.—The naval cadets of the first class were given a New Year's gift yesterday that made them happy. Just before dinner they were informed that they would be graduated after the semi-annual examination that takes place in February. There are 53 members of the class, and they all saw service during the late war. Many of them will probably receive assignments in the navy immediately after graduation.

Revolution in Bolivia.

London, Jan. 2.—The Lima correspondent of The Times says: A serious revolution is now proceeding in the republic of Bolivia. The transit trade, by way of Mollendo, Peru, is interrupted. Ecuador is also much disturbed, but Peru is perfectly tranquil.

President Dewey, Vice President Lee.

Louisville, Ky., Jan. 2.—Henry Waterson, in a leading editorial in The Courier-Journal, under the caption "The New Year's Outlook for the Democratic Party," nominates Admiral George Dewey for president and General Fitzhugh Lee for vice president.

AMBASSADOR ROMERO DEAD.

Mexico's Representative in Washington a Victim of Appendicitis.

Washington, Jan. 1.—Ambassador Romero, of Mexico, died last Friday as the result of an operation for appendicitis.

THE LATE SENOR ROMERO.

He was 62 years old. The remains will be taken to Mexico for interment. The president sent a telegram of condolence to the Mexican government. The president and cabinet attended the funeral services this afternoon.

GEN. MILLER AT ILOILO.

He May Have Had a Fight With Philippines Insurgents.

LANDING WITH MACHINE GUNS.

General Miller, as the Dispatch Was Sent, Was Preparing to Take Possession of Iloilo, and the Filipinos Were Apparently Prepared to Resist.

Manila, P. I., Jan. 2.—The following dispatch, dated Friday afternoon, Dec. 30, at Iloilo, Island of Panaya, has just been received by boat, telegraphic communication with Iloilo not having been resumed:

"The situation at Iloilo is grave. Fifteen hundred natives, fully armed, are at Melo, a suburb of Iloilo. Seventeen thousand more, it is reported, are awaiting orders to embark at several points on the Island of Negros, 15 hours sail from Iloilo.

"All the women have withdrawn, and many families have taken refuge with the Americans. The rebels, after a consultation, insist upon inaction until General Aguinaldo shall have been heard from. General Miller, when this demand was first made, declined to concede them time and insisted upon an answer being given him by noon today. At the same time he gave assurances that lives and property would be protected.

"The foreign residents then petitioned General Miller to grant the extension desired by the rebels, as a fight would cause inevitable loss. This also General Miller refused.

"At the designated time a native commission again boarded the United States transport Newport and asked for delay, saying that they were unable to control the army, which commanded the city and surrounding country. General Miller refused, and prepared to land forces, sending an emissary back to Manila for instructions.

"The rebels are strengthening their position, and are preparing to resist. The streets of Iloilo are full of armed soldiers, who are constantly entering in every direction. There is great excitement, which is increased by the appearance of the gunboat El Cano, flying the Spanish flag. The public buildings, churches and boats along the river are filled with rebels.

"The Newport's boats, as the dispatch boat which carries this message is about leaving, are being lowered with four machine guns mounted in their bows. The lighters are alongside the United States transport Arizona. The United States transport Pennsylvania lies three miles to the south, with steam up."

Woman Died From Poison Sent to Another as a Gift

New York, Dec. 29.—Mrs. Kate J. Adams, a well to do woman, was fatally poisoned yesterday in her handsomely furnished apartments on Eighty-sixth street. Her death is connected with a curious chain of events.

Mrs. Adams was a widow, 50 years old. She lived with her son-in-law, Edward Rogers, an insurance agent. Harry Cornish, a well known athlete and physical director of the Knickerbocker Athletic club, boards with the Rogers. Mrs. Adams awoke yesterday with a bad headache. Her daughter, Mrs. Rogers, advised her to take some bromo seltzer. Cornish declared he had some in his room, and he brought out a bottle so labeled and gave Mrs. Adams a dose, also taking a dose himself. Mrs. Adams died soon after, and Mr. Cornish is confined to his bed, though out of danger. Dr. Hitchcock declares that Cornish was saved by drinking the dregs, which turned his stomach.

Mr. Cornish states that on Christmas day he received a neat package addressed to himself containing a sterling silver medicine bottle holder in a Tiffany box, and in the holder was a bottle marked "bromo seltzer." The package was anonymously sent, but Cornish says he thought nothing of this, as he frequently gets presents in this way. It was from this bottle that Mrs. Adams took the poison, which is said to be cyanide of potassium.

Princely Gift For the Pope.

London, Jan. 2.—The bright, cold weather of Christmastide has given the pope's health a decided change for the better. He now walks unaided during his daily constitutional in the Vatican grounds. The newspapers of Rome announce that a rich American lady has had a gold snuffbox, incrustated with superb diamonds, made by one of the best jewelers of Rome as a New Year's offering to the pope, who, it is added, will find a check of $50,000 inside the snuffbox.

An Awful Fall to Death.

Ishpeming, Mich., Jan. 2.—While nine Finnish trammers, whose names are unknown at this time, were coming to the surface in one of the shafts of the Lake Superior Iron company the cage met some obstruction in the shaft that inclined the floor so as to let six men slide off and they fell 500 feet to the bottom, being instantly killed. The three who clung to the cage were injured slightly.

Five Poisoned by Oatmeal and Milk.

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 2.—A family of five were taken suddenly ill after eating oatmeal and milk. Pearl Holmes, a young colored girl, died and a jury of inquest has been summoned.

Metallizing Wood.

Still another method of metallizing wood, one by which it becomes very solid and resistant and assumes the appearance of a true metallic mirror, is described in the Paris Monde with much detail. Briefly, the wood is first immersed for three or four days, as may be its degree of permeability, in a caustic alkaline lye, and thence passes immediately into a bath of hydrosulphite of calcium, to which is added, after 24 or 36 hours, concentrated solution of sulphur in caustic potash. The duration of this bath is about 48 hours, and its temperature is from 55 to 50 degrees. Finally, the wood is immersed for 30 or 40 hours in a hot solution of acetate of lead. The wood prepared in this manner, and after having undergone a proper drying at a moderate temperature, acquires under a burnisher of hard wood a polished surface and exhibits a very brilliant metallic luster—a luster still further increased in its attractiveness if the surface of the wood be rubbed thoroughly, in the first place, with a piece of lead, tin or zinc and afterward be polished with a glass or porcelain burnisher.

Carried Off a Roof by a Turkey.

Harry Dabill, at the Norwalk hotel, climbed out on the roof to catch a 32 pound turkey that had escaped and was roosting there. He took the bird by the legs. It started to fly and pulled him into the air and off the edge of the roof. Then he let go, and now he has a broken arm.—Hartford Courant.

The Merritt & Chapman Wrecking company has started to raise the sunken Reina Mercedes in Santiago harbor.

R. G. Dun's review of trade says the year 1898 far surpassed all others in financial and industrial results. New York is now the center of the world's financial power.

The Union Central Life Insurance Co., of Cincinnati, is now thirty-one years old, and has $20,000,000 assets, with a surplus of $3,000,000. The company is now doubling in size every five years, and the insurance reports show that it makes the highest interest rate and lowest death rate for its policy holders of all the old line companies; hence it is one of the best managed financial institutions in this country to-day, and can but make the best returns to policy holders. Its size, location, management make it an ideal company for investment, besides furnishing the very best protection to the loved ones in the event that death overtakes you early, or, as a saving to come to you in your old age, should an All-Wise Providence spare you that long.

To-day is the time to insure. Tomorrow may never come. Death may overtake you, bad health may claim you as a victim at any moment; hence, do not put off such an important step, but take your insurance right away.

Call or write to R. S. Tuck, General Agent, Chamber of Commerce Building, Richmond, Va., at once, and learn of the matchless advantages of the Union Central and investigate the new guaranty policy they write, which is unquestionably the most model policy contract issued by any company, and if you need any assistance the company will always help you in carrying it. R. L. CLIBORNE, Local Agent, Blackstone, Va.

RECOMMENDATION: The editor of the Recorder believes the Union Central to be one of the best companies in the country, and is as well pleased with his policy as with the one he holds in the Equitable. Northwestern and New York Life.

DIXIE

CHICKEN AND HOG POWDER.

Farmers can cure the sick ones and prevent the well animals from taking the disease by giving freely by directions found on each package of the Dixie Chicken and Hog Powder. Don't delay giving this valuable Powder until your Hogs are sick, but as soon as the Cholera appears in your neighborhood begin at once to give it as a preventive.

The "Dixie Chicken and Hog Powder" is equally as good for Cholera in Fowls, and the careful housewife will not wait until the disease has made havoc in her flock, but upon the first symptoms she will give at once and thus prevent the spread of the disease to the whole flock.

Hens will lay more and look better, and become perfectly healthy if given "Dixie Chicken and Hog Powder." It is well to give to the young chicks, in corn-meal dough, a little "Dixie Chicken and Hog Powder" twice a week, and thus prevent disease and make them healthy and strong.

Price, 25 cents a package; $2.50 per dozen.

Formal Transfer of the Island of Cuba to General Brooke.

NO CROWDING PERMITTED.

The Masses Kept Away From the Vicinity of the Palace.

CASTELLANOS SHEDS TEARS.

The Retiring Captain General Overcome by Emotion as He Bids Farewell to Spanish Control on This Continent—Cuban Officers Took Part in the Evacuation Day Ceremonies, and Pledged Loyalty to the Stars and Stripes.

Havana, Jan. 2.—The sovereignty of Cuba passed from Spain to the United States at noon yesterday. The form of the transfer was simple, consisting only of an exchange of speeches in the salon of the palace, the hauling down of the Spanish flag and the raising in its stead of the flag of the United States on the flagstaff on the palace roof. Salutes were fired from the heavy guns of the forts and the warships before and after the change of flags. The raising of the Stars and Stripes was greeted with cheers by the people who covered the roofs of the buildings around the palace and plaza.

No crowd was permitted to gather in the streets in the vicinity of the palace to witness the epoch making function. At 9 o'clock a guard composed of the Second battalion of the Tenth infantry marched into the Plaza de Armas, under command of Captain Van Vliet, and formed around the square. Captain General Castellanos watched them with interest from the balcony of his apartments as they entered the square and were stationed at all the streets approaching the plaza. No one was allowed to enter without a pass, and all the doors of the palace facing the square were ordered to be closed. Only those who could get on the roofs and balconies of houses in the neighborhood saw what was going on before the palace.

The American Generals Arrive.

At 11:10 Major General Wade and Major General Butler, of the American evacuation commission, arrived from El Vado on horseback, accompanied by their staffs. They were met by Brigadier General Clous and Major T. Bentley Mott, of General Ludlow's staff. About the same moment Lucien J. Jerome, British vice consul, arrived. He was warmly greeted by the American officers.

Major General John R. Brooke, governor of Cuba, and Major General Ludlow, governor of the city of Havana, accompanied by their staffs, arrived in carriages. General Brooke and General Adna R. Chaffee, General Brooke's chief of staff, in the first carriage. In each of the other carriages rode a Cuban general with American officers. The Cubans were General Lacret, Mario Menocal, Maya Rodriguez, Serafin Sanchez, Jose Miguel Gomez, Nodarte, Rafael, De Cardenas Agramante and Vidal, and Colonel Valiente. As the carriages drove up the Second company of the Thirty-eighth Spanish infantry, under command of Colonel Don Rafael Salamancia, presented arms, and the American band started up with "The Stars and Stripes Forever," the Spanish colonel saluting.

At 11:45 Major General Lee, military governor of the province of Havana, with his staff, joined General Brooke. The latter then crossed the street to the palace, General Lee on one side of him and General Chaffee on the other, followed by the other American generals and the Cuban officers. The Cubans wore dark blue uniforms, brown hats and gray gloves and carried machetes.

A flourish of trumpets greeted the procession, and the Spanish troops presented arms as the Americans entered the palace. The Cubans remained outside until escorted in by members of General Brooke's staff, the Spanish soldiers remaining all the while at "present arms." As soon as all were within the Spanish troops formed in column of fours and marched around the right side of the plaza to the docks, while the band of the Second Illinois volunteers played the Spanish royal march.

On entering the palace the American generals went to the salon facing the plaza, which is on the second floor. Here were gathered the members of the captain general's staff, Colonel Gelpi, Lieutenant Colonels Bolled, Girault and Bonitas, Major Priego, Captain Rittenne and Captains Adolfo and Ramon Castellanos, sons of the captain general.

Castellanos Greets the Cubans.

Suddenly Captain General Castellanos entered the salon without ceremony from the left and greeted General Brooke and others. After shaking hands General Brooke sat upon a sofa, while General Castellanos moved towards the group of Cuban generals. British Vice Consul Jerome introduced him to General Maya Rodriguez. Shaking both the hands of the Cuban officer, in the usual Spanish fashion, General Castellanos said:

"We have been enemies, but I respect you for your correct attitudes and opinions. I have pleasure in shaking your hand."

General Rodriguez replied: "I thank you, general. I feel sorry for the Spanish army, which has defended the banner it was sworn to defend. I also have pleasure in shaking your hands."

At the last stroke of 12 the boom of a gun brought all eyes to the point in the room where stood the captain general, who was talking with an American officer. Immediately all was silence. The captain general stepped to the left, taking his position directly in front of his staff. On his right stood Captain J. S. Hart, interpreter to the United States military commission. Next to Captain Hart, in the order named, were Generals Chaffee, Brooke, Ludlow, Lee, Wade, Butler and Clous. Immediately behind General Chaffee was Senator John W. Daniel, of Virginia.

Formal Transfer of Authority.

At this moment the band on the plaza was playing the Spanish national hymn. As the guns at Cabanas fortress ceased firing there was a breathless pause in the salon. Everybody knew that the American flag was being raised on the staff on the roof of the palace by Major Butler, son of General Butler, and that the Stars and Stripes was going up on all the other official staffs in Havana. After this second of silence the band on the plaza played "The Star Spangled Banner," while the guns of the fleet and fortresses began to roar out the national salute of 21 guns.

Immediately Captain General Castellanos handed the manuscript of his speech to Captain Hart and began to speak. Amid the strains of the band and the noise of the guns it was impossible to hear him. "Close the windows," said some one, and the casements were closed, but the sound of the cheering still visibly disturbed the captain general.

Addressing himself to Major General Wade, president of the United States military commission, though he seemed to look at the floor, General Castellanos said:

"Gentlemen: In compliance with the treaty of Paris, the agreement of the military commissioners of the island and the orders of my king, at this moment of noon, Jan. 1, 1899, there ceases in Cuba Spanish sovereignty and begins that of the United States. In conclusion, I declare you in command of the island, with the object that you may exercise it, declaring to you that I will be first in respecting it. Peace having been established between our respective governments, I promise you to give all due respect to the United States government, and I hope that the good relations already existing between our armies will continue until the termination of the evacuation or those under my orders in this territory."

After Captain Hart had translated the address General Wade said to General Brooke:

"I transfer this command to you."

Major General Brooke said:

General Brooke's Acceptance.

"I accept this great trust in behalf of the government and president of the United States, and (addressing Captain General Castellanos) I wish you and the gallant gentlemen with you a pleasant return to your native land. May prosperity attend you and all who are with you."

Generals Brooke and Castellanos then shook hands, after which General Castellanos and staff retired from the throne room.

Meanwhile the officials of Spain were saying farewell to their nation's seat of power in the new world. Turning to his officers, General Castellanos said, with tears in his eyes:

"Gentlemen, I have been in more battles than I have hairs on my head, and my self possession has never failed me until today. Adieu, gentlemen, adieu."

Then he moved swiftly toward the stairway, escorted by General Chaffee, and followed by his staff. As he crossed the plaza the American ladies who were standing in the balcony of the barracks waved their handkerchiefs, and General Castellanos responded by bowing and kissing his hand toward them. At the corner of the plaza, with tears in his eyes, he turned to take a final look at the palace. He could see the American generals on the balcony. Without a word he turned sharply in the direction of the wharf. At the dock Generals Clous and Chaffee bade him farewell, and the retiring captain general put off for the Spanish transport Rabat, on which he will proceed to Matanzas.

Major General Brooke held a reception in the palace salon, the various officials paying their respects and promising allegiance to the United States. At the close of the reception the Cuban generals were introduced. General Brooke said to them:

"I shall look to you to assist us in carrying out the purpose that brought us to these shores. It is a great trust, and I shall expect most extraordinary assistance from you."

General Lacret, who acted as spokesman for the Cuban officers, assured the United States military governor that everything in the power of the Cuban military officials would be done to help the Americans restore Cuba to a condition of peace and prosperity.

The parade of the United States troops showed the feeling of the Cuban element of the population. The roofs, the streets, the parks and the wayside in the suburban districts were crowded with curious, but for the most part silent spectators. Now and again there was a cry of "Viva Los Americanos," followed by a burst of cheering, but there was no general expression of public rejoicing, though Major General Lee, who rode at the head of the column on a gray charger, received a personal ovation along nearly the entire route.

STRICKEN WITH PNEUMONIA.

Critical Illness of Nelson Dingley, Father of the Tariff Law.

Washington, Jan. 2.—Representative Nelson Dingley, of Maine, is critically ill at his apartments at the Hamilton House, in this city, with an attack of pneumonia. Because of his age, much concern is felt over his condition. His illness dates from Wednesday of last week, when he had an attack of the grip. He rapidly grew worse, and Saturday night pneumonia set in. Yesterday afternoon it was stated that there had been a slight change for the better, which continued during the evening. Mr. Dingley is of delicate physique, is an unremitting worker, and has figured in the tariff legislation of the house for a great number of years past. He is now chairman of the committee on ways and means and is the leader of the Republican majority on the floor of the house. His wife and daughter are here nursing him in his illness, while a physician is in constant attendance at his bedside.

CHAPTER 1.

1 The genealogy of Jesus Christ: 13 Mary's miraculous conception; Jesus is born: 21, 23 his names.

THE book of the generation of Jē'sus Christ, b the son of Dā'vid, the 'son of Ā'brā'hām.

2 Ā'brā'hām begat Ī'saac; and Ī'saac begat Jā'cob; and Jā'cob begat Jū'das and his brethren;

3 And Jū'das begat Phā'rēs and Zū'rā'of Thā'mar; and Ā'Phā'rēs begat Es'rom; and Es'rom begat Ā'ram;

4 And Ā'ram begat Ā'mīn'a-dāb; and Ā'mīn'a-dāb begat Ē'Nā-as son; and Nā-as son begat Sāl'mon;

5 And Sāl'mon begat Bō'oz of Rā'chāb; and Bō'oz begat O'bed of Rūth; and O'bed begat Jē'se;

6 And Jē'se begat Dā'vid the king; and Dā'vid b the king begat Sōl'o-mon of her that had been the wife of U'rī-as;

7 And Sōl'o-mon begat Rō'bō'am; and Rō'bō'am begat Ā'bī'a; and Ā'bī'a begat Ā'sā;

8 And Ā'sā begat Jō'sā-phāt; and Jō'sā-phāt begat Jō'ram; and Jō'ram begat O-zī-as;

9 And O-zī-as begat Jō'ā-thām; and Jō'ā-thām begat Ā'chāz; and Ā'chāz begat Ē-zē-kī'sā;

10 And Ē-zē-kī'sā begat Mā-nās'sēs; and Mā-nās'sēs begat Ā'mon; and Ā'mon begat Jō-si-as;

11 And Jō-si-as begat Jōch'o-ni-as and his brethren, about the time they were carried away to Bāb'y-lon;

12 And after they were brought to Bāb'y-lon, Jōch'o-ni-as begat Sā-lū-ti-ēl; and Sā-lū-ti-ēl begat Zō-rōb'a-bēl; and Zō-rōb'a-bēl begat Ā'bī'ud; and Ā'bī'ud begat Ē-lī'a-kim;

13 And Ē-lī'a-kim; and Ē-lī'a-kim begat Ā'zōr;

14 And Ā'zōr begat Sā'dōc; and Sā'dōc begat Ā'chim; and Ā'chim begat Ē-lī'ud;

15 And Ē-lī'ud begat Ē-le-a-zar; and Ē-le-a-zar begat Mātthan; and Mātthan begat Jā'cob;

16 And Jā'cob begat Jō'seph the husband of Mā'ry, of whom was born Jē'sus, who is called Christ.

17 So all the generations from Ā'brā'hām to Dā'vid are fourteen generations; and from Dā'vid until the carrying away into Bāb'y-lon are fourteen generations; and from the carrying away into Bāb'y-lon unto Christ are fourteen generations.

18 Now the birth of Jē'sus Christ: When as his mother was on this wise: When as his mother

Mā'ry was espoused to Jō'seph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Hō'ly Ghost.

19 Then Jō'seph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a publick example, was minded to put her away privily.

20 But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Jō'seph, thou son of Dā'vid, fear not to take unto thee Mā'ry thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Hō'ly Ghost.

21 And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jē'SUS: for he shall save his people from their sins.

22 Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying,

23 Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Ēm-mān'u-el, which being interpreted is, God with us.

24 Then Jō'seph being raised from sleep did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife:

25 And knew her not till she had brought forth her firstborn son: and he called his name Jē'SUS.

CHAPTER 2.

1 Wise men enquire after Christ. 13 Joseph fleeth into Egypt. 16 Herod slayeth the children: 19 Christ brought out of Egypt.

NOW when Jē'sus was born in Beth-lē-hem of Jū-dā in the days of Hēr'od the king, behold, there came wise men b from the east to Jē-rū'sā-lēm, 2 Saying, c Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him.

3 When Hēr'od the king had heard these things, he was troubled, and all Jē-rū'sā-lēm with him.

4 And when he had gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, d he demanded of them where Christ should be born.

5 And they said unto him, In Beth-lē-hem of Jū-dā: for thus it is written by the prophet,

6 And thou Beth-lē-hem, in the land of Jū-dā, art not the least among the princes of Jū-dā: for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Īs-ra-el.

7 Then Hēr'od, when he had privily called the wise men, enquired of them diligently what time the star appeared.

8 And he sent them to Beth-lē-hem, and Facts and Questions

FOR

Parents and Pastors.

"It is not enough to educate. We must put an idea into our education if it is to be saved. That idea is the Son of God."—Dr. J. C. Kilgo in address before Virginia Conference.

- (1) Fatally Defective! What? All education that lacks the thought quoted above as its corner stone.
- (2) You desire your daughter to become a well educated woman. But do you not desire most of all that she shall be a well educated CHRISTIAN woman?
- (3) The spiritual character of the school which your daughter attends will greatly influence her work in this world and her location in the world to come.
- (4) As a christian man, do you not believe that God expects you to use the very best care in this important matter, and will hold you responsible for the selection you make? Have you a right to place her in any school which does not say with emphasis that growth in grace is above social polish and mere intellectual culture?
- (5) Can you conscientiously place her in a State school, which from its very nature ignores religious training, even if by so doing you should save $20 a year? If you can raise $122 to develop her intellect can you not raise $20 more to develop her soul at the same time?
- (6.) The Methodist Church in the Virginia Conference has now a system of schools to which parents can safely entrust their children, "Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." They belong absolutely to the Church. They have been built solely to meet the needs of our people. They are not private schools in any sense of the word. They do not have that serious defect of private schools—LACK OF PERMANENCY. They do not die or pass into the hands of the State or of other parties when the owner dies, or gets tired of teaching, or fails to make a success of his work. In a nut-shell, they were, not established in order to make a fortune or as a means of making a living. They have only one aim—THOROUGH INSTRUCTION UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.
- (7.) This system was established for your children. Will you give them the benefit of it? The Randolph-Macon Woman's College has been established for the higher education of women.

The Blackstone Female Institute

Is one of the two schools in the Conference for younger girls which belongs ABSOLUTELY to the Church. Its success has been great from the start. Of it the Board of Education of the Annual Conference spoke as follows:

"The Blackstone Institute is owned entirely by our Church. It is not in any sense a private corporation or stock company, but stands in the same relation to the Church as the Randolph-Macon system. While not in the Randolph-Macon system, the course of study is correlated with the Woman's College, and stands related to the latter as the academies to the college at Ashland. The Institute is in a most prosperous condition, having now, at the beginning of its fourth year, a patronage of 170. It is thoroughly Methodist in ownership and spirit, every officer and teacher being an active member of our Church."

At a meeting of the Trustees of Randolph-Macon College, held June 17, 1896, the following resolution was adopted—viz:

"RESOLVED, That next to the institutions under our special care, we feel deepest interest in the Blackstone Female Institute, under the superintendency of Rev. James Cannon, Jr., which is owned entirely by our Church; and that we regard it and commend it to our people as holding a tributary relation to our Woman's College at Lynchburg, akin to that of our Academies to our College at Ashland."

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

Peace with oneself and one's God lends the soul wings.—Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, Independent, Chicago.

God's Goodness.

God's goodness is not manifest so much by his once offering us his love as by his insistent offer of a love that is daily scorned.—Dr. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago.

World Demands a Return.

No man ever gets anything from the world worth his having until he gives of himself something to the world that is worth the world's having.—Rev. George W. Stone, Unitarian, Kansas City.

Christ's Atonement.

It is only as we enter into the experience of Jesus, drinking his cup of sorrow and being baptized with his baptism of suffering, that we learn the meaning of his atonement.—Rev. Henry W. Pinkham, Baptist, Denver.

Business of the Church.

The business of the church is to show that Christianity is true, now and here, and that it has something of pressing value to offer the world which no sensible man can afford to neglect.—Rev. S. G. Smith, People's Church, St. Paul.

Make Sure of Heaven.

Better than indulge in dogmatical speculations concerning heaven is to assure ourselves that our "names are written in heaven" and that we lay up treasures in heaven.—Rev. Theodore F. John, German Evangelical, Louisville.

Golden Cords.

Our aspirations are intended to be golden cords linking us to heaven, but when sin comes in and snaps the cord the communication ceases and our ambitions become perverted.—Rev. F. C. Harding, Congregationalist, New York.

Fellowship Born of Love.

The spirit of fellowship born of love to the same Lord and Master is vastly more desirable than a mere external bond of ecclesiastical organization, which may be utterly lacking in true Christian love and service.—Rev. Dr. Robert S. MacArthur, Baptist, New York.

Automatic Morals.

The highest type of morals is not that which is wrought out laboriously in pain and struggle, but which springs forth naturally and necessarily from the character. It is, in short, automatic. It comes out of the life without effort, even without thought or will.—Dr. J. L. Jackson, Baptist, Chicago.

Life's Best Guide.

The Bible is our best guide to life. It may become literally a lamp unto our feet and a light unto our path. There we learn the divine will and our duty. No one can find his allotted place in God's plan who does not follow the divine commandments.—Rev. G. W. Wilson, Congregationalist, Omaha.

Religion as Life's Great Reconciler.

Religion is the great reconciler in life. It broadens, sweetens, deepens human nature. The busy man needs it to save him from overwork and sudden death. He needs it to save him from avarice and materialism, from all the excesses that destroy health and weaken the spiritual nature.—Rev. George W. Stone, Unitarian, Kansas City.

Power of Prejudice.

All thinking persons know the power of prejudice. Yet over this barrier, which seems impassable, did the gospel triumph and 3,000 prejudiced Jews were enlightened and converted under one discourse. Think of such a multitude being disarmed, overcome and added to the kingdom of Jesus, even in the city of his death.—Rev. George J. Miggins, Methodist, Ashbury Park, N. J.

Love and Purchase.

Love cannot be bought. There is no relation between love and purchase. You can buy marks of outward esteem, but you cannot buy any man's or woman's love. The rich and powerful are often cut off from companionship with their fellows by the suspicion they are sought for favors they can do, for what they have instead of for what they are.—Rev. W. J. McCaughan, Presbyterian, Chicago.

Patriotism.

Another essential element is patriotism. True patriotism sets the welfare of the nation above all party politics. To men influenced by it there is presented the great opportunity to work in every sphere of life for the true glory, welfare and interest of the nation, and, last of all, there is the most essential element of all, adherence to the teachings of Christianity.—Rev. Dr. R. T. Jones, Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

Man and the Universe.

Man is but a "reed," the feeblest thing in nature, but it is a reed that thinks. It needs not that the universe arm itself to crush him. An exhalation, a drop of water, suffice to destroy him. But were the universe to crush him man is yet nobler than the universe, for he knows that he dies, and the universe, even in prevailing over him, knows not its power.—Rev. William M. Jones, Congregationalist, St. Louis.

Paul's Love For Christ's Church.

The final element in Paul's optimism to be noticed is his love for Christ's church—so deep, so strong, so all pervasive, as to give him joy even in his sufferings in its behalf. The church to Paul was the very body of Christ, the body of which Christ is the head. If we have a like love for Christ and his church, we can find roses where others find thorns, and honey where others find gall.—Rev. A. S. Coats, D. D., Baptist, Buffalo.

Our Influence.

Every one is able to influence some of his fellow creatures and lead them toward a better life, and when we neglect this we are robbing God. If we do not give our fellow men the love and charity which are their due, and if we are mean spirited and selfish, we are robbing God, for Christ said, "Whatsoever ye do unto the least of these, do ye also unto me," and if you neglect his children you rob the Lord.—Rev. T. E. Ryan, Union Mission, St. Louis.

THE LAST GOOD NIGHT.

We all have known how sweet it is to fall in sleep away,

And close our heavy eyes to all the sorrows of the day;

To feel the softening curtains drawn before the petty cares

That all day long have vexed our hearts and clogged our earnest prayers.

Gladly we welcome our repose, nor coming darkness heed;

Feeling our weariness, the more its sheltering cloud we need;

We part with hope and calmness from the fast receding light,

And our best wish to nearest friend is now,

"Good night! Good night!"

Then, O, how sweet, when evening falls and life's short day is o'er,

To sink to sleep in Jesus' arms, to wake on heaven's shore.

The night of death cannot appall, for Christian spirits know

The grave is but a quiet rest from all these toils below.

Fear enters not the blessed heart which Jesus has possessed,

And when He calls the soul away 'tis only to be blessed;

O, then, when from the realms of day, His hand and voice invite,

Hopeful and glad is that farewell—"Good night, dear love, good night!"

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

The joint Epworth League Convention of the Farmville and Petersburg districts, which was announced last week for the fifth Sunday in January, has been postponed until the fifth Sunday in April.

The Board of Education has sent out this week a circular letter to our pastors, requesting a list of names. Brethren will greatly help on the work of the Board by sending these names at once, as they must be copied and sent to Nashville as soon as possible.

HISTORY OF RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE.

The work was issued last month. The first issue has been disposed of. Another is now ready.

The prices of the book named to subscribers before the book was printed have been advanced, on account of the cost of the book and the illustrations.

Prices: Cloth bound, postage paid, $1.50; half morocco, $2.50; full morocco, with extra steel engravings, $3.

The above statement is very gratifying to the friends of Captain Irby and of the College. It shows an interest in the institution, and it shows that Captain Irby has presented the history in an attractive form. The editor has intended to write an extended notice, but wished first to read the book through. He has not been able to do this yet, but has read enough to be able to say that Captain Irby was the man to write the book. It is doubtful if there is any other living man who could have done so. The book appeals, of course, with special power to the alumni of the College. They read not only the printed lines, but they fill in between the lines, and names and faces in the book call to mind countless other names and faces, and incidents came back which had been hidden away in memory's secret alcoves for many years. Few men who have entered into the life of the old college can take up the volume without smiles mingled with some tears as they enter again upon the arena of their college conflicts. Every alumnus should have a copy. The faces of the professors are alone worth far more than the price of the book.

SAINTS HELPING SATAN.

One cold Sabbath morning I preached at one of our country churches, which, if named, would be recognized by many of our preachers as the church home of one of the most faithful and consecrated societies in our Conference. As I drew near the church I noticed the men and boys sitting or standing in large numbers on the sunny side of the house. As it was cold, I wondered that they did not go in the house. But when I got inside the church, and reached the pulpit, and had time to take in the situation, I did not wonder. The superintendent of the school, with overcoat on, was standing close to the stove, reviewing the lesson. The temperature in the pulpit was not over 45 or 50 degrees, and in some parts of the house not quite that high. The stove was a large box stove, and might have warmed the room under favorable conditions, but the fire had been made late in the morning, and no supply of wood had been provided to keep it running at half blast, to say nothing of full blast. Three large panes of glass were broken out of one of the windows in the pulpit end of the house, and the current of air which swept in dared the preacher to try to warm up to his subject. The superintendent closed the school, and the folks outside came in, as many getting on the sunny side as possible. Nearly everybody sat with upturned coat collars, and shivered. I turned to the pastor and asked him if he thought it safe to preach, and if he would do so himself if I were not there? He said he would, and thought the people would be disappointed if there were no preaching. With great misgiving as to the outcome, I began. I never preach short sermons, and unless I can "warm up" early in the service, require some time to develop a line of thought. It is hardly necessary to say that I did not "warm up," and neither did the congregation. I am sure one hand was in my overcoat pocket half the time, and the conclusion of every paragraph brought with it a query as to whether the next one should be begun. I had a better outline than usual, and knew about what I wanted to say, but the cold current of air from the rear, and the cold figures in front prevented any "warming up," and the sermon, instead of ending in a glow, ended with a shiver.

The above is simply an instance of what is occurring all over our Conference in the winter time, especially in the country. And yet there is not the slightest excuse for such a state of affairs. The reason for it is found in the words of the Master, "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." They make things pleasant and attractive. The saloon, the dance hall, the theatre are comfortable. The aim is to make money, to have pleasure. The owner or a committee sees to these things. The business of the Church is "to catch men." But how badly the Gospel net is handled in some places. No effort or expense should be spared to make the house of God attractive and comfortable, so that young and old will be glad when it is said, "Let us go up to the house of the Lord." How many old persons there are who are afraid to go out to church because they know it will be dangerous to sit in the cold room! How many are there who do not love the service of the sanctuary, and who are glad to ease their conscience by such a good excuse? How many services have been ruined by the stinginess or the thoughtlessness of the officers of the church?

When a farmer is locating his plant-bed, he selects a warm, sunny spot, protected from the cold winds. He prepares the soil with care and properly enriches it. After sowing the seed, he buys canvas and covers the bed over. He is anxious to raise plenty of young plants. If he does not, he cannot have a crop.

With less trouble than the tobacco-grower takes with his plant-bed all our churches could be made attractive and comfortable. There is no excuse for our failure except our stinginess or our thoughtlessness or our lack of interest. If the one stove will not heat the house, then buy another, and buy them large enough and good enough to do the work. If there are drafts from under doors and around the windows, get some strips and stop the cracks. If there are window-lights out, buy some, and if when you go to town they have none the right size, wait till they cut them, or have them ordered at once, and make a special trip for those window-lights. If it was canvas for a plant-bed, it would be obtained, even if it required a half dozen trips. If the church is hard to warm, rise up in the morning while it is yet a great while before day, and see that a fire is started and kept up. If the wood has been rotten, or wet, or green, and will not burn, make it your business to see that there is an abundance of dry wood on hand. If the lamps in the church are insufficient in number to light the room, or are so badly kept that they do not serve the purpose for which they were bought, buy some more lamps, and then see to it that they are clean. Every church can be made, and ought to be made as bright and comfortable as possible. Children and young people ought not to feel that to go to church is to go to gloom and shivers and dirt (for sometimes the dust is so thick that letters can be traced in it with the fingers, and the windows are grimy and the cobwebs wave in the drafts). THE CHURCH IS GOD'S MEETING-PLACE WITH HIS PEOPLE. He is the Lord of Heaven and earth, and the Giver of all our blessings. When men of great prominence, or our friends and benefactors come to see us, we desire to "put the best foot foremost," but some people act as if they thought any place was good enough in which to meet God. When God himself gave the plan for His house, He did not seem to think that way. The most beautiful and costly tent in the wilderness was the Tabernacle, where God met with His people. Perhaps as magnificent buildings as the world has ever seen were the temples built for God's worship by the Jews. To the Jewish boys and girls there was no house like the house of the Lord. Its beauty and its glory made them anxious to go there.

Just how far we should go in this matter I will not attempt to decide here, but one thing is certain, there is no good excuse for uncomfortable, gloomy, and dirty churches. If it be said that the people are too poor to build a comfortable church, to buy stoves and chandeliers, and furnish wood and oil, the answer must be made that this statement is not true, and cannot be proven. The contrary can be proven by the amount of money spent on trifles and selfish indulgences, even by poor people.

If the fault be placed upon the sexton, as it often is, that also is a worthless excuse. The officials of the church see that their own private business is attended to, and the ladies of the congregation see to it that their houses are kept clean. They would feel disgraced if their own homes were as dirty as the house of God often is. Their window-lights shine, their lamp chimneys are clean, their furniture is dusted, their floors are swept, their walls are clear of cobwebs. But not so with their church, where they go to meet with God, and where they take their children to teach them the way of the Lord.

ALL SUCH SAINTS ARE DIRECTLY AIDING SATAN. Our young people need to be taught that the brightest and best things in this world belong to the religion of Jesus Christ, and every cold, dark, dirty, bare, and uncomfortable church is an ally of the devil.

Practical application: There are thousands of Church members who say that they would work for Christ if they knew how, and many who say that they would give but they are not able. Here is work for all such to do. The man or boy who will make it his business to see to it that the church is well warmed, will be truly working for the Lord. He may have to rise early in the morning, but he will make it possible for the hard work his pastor has put on his sermon during the week to be effectual in the conversion and sanctifying of his own family and friends. He not only will no longer shiver himself, but he will keep others from longing for the preacher to stop, and he will keep his pastor from having the discomfort and sorrow of feeling that his congregation want him to stop, and that the sermon over which he had prayed and worked and from which he had hoped so much, was wasted because his saints had aided Satan. The girls or ladies who will wash the windows and lamp chimneys and sweep the floor and dust the pews and furniture, and brush down the cobwebs, and try to make God's house bright and attractive, can not only make the money which is paid to inefficient sextons, with which to pay their own quarterage or missionary contribution, but they will make it a greater pleasure to both saints and sinners to come up to God's house.

Shall we not as Christian people stop this sinful waste? Shall we not stop paying a preacher several hundred dollars to prepare sermons for our help, and then destroy the effect of his sermons and keep people from church by our negligence or by our stinginess in failing to give the little time and the few dollars necessary to make the church comfortable and attractive?

I believe that many of our pastors could afford to preach a sermon on this special subject, and by so doing greatly advance the interest of Christ's kingdom. "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." Shall this be true of you?

TWENTIETH CENTURY THANK OFFERING.

A press cablegram dated London, December 10th, says:

"Although the subscription list to the fund of 1,000,000 guineas which the Wesleyan Methodists are desirous of raising next year will be informally open until January, a fifth part of the total has already been guaranteed. Central meetings have been held in six out of the thirty-four administrative districts into which Wesleyan England is divided. Three London districts guaranteed £50,000; Leeds, £30,000, and Manchester, £40,000. Twenty-eight districts have not yet been heard from."

THE PRESIDING ELDERSHIP.

To the Editor of the Recorder:

Opposition to the presiding eldership, as at present filled and administered in the Virginia Conference, becomes more and more intense. It will not do to say that this opposition comes alone from the sore-heads, wet-logs, disappointed ones. Most of us know who these are. We know, also, that this criticism of and opposition to this high office as it is at present filled and used, and abused, in our Conference, comes now from the truest, bravest, most efficient, most loyal members of our Conference, both of the ministry and laity. These men are aflame with zeal for the Master's cause. They love His Church above everything else. It is for the good of Zion that they say things that seem harsh and severe.

When a good piece of machinery that has done excellent work begins to screech and thump and jump and loses its efficiency, we look for the trouble, and, if we find it, we try to remedy it, and if we cannot, then we lay the machine aside for some other that will serve our purpose.

From my observation, the trouble is not with the office so much as it is with the men who fill it. The people, however, lose respect for an office, however high, in Church and State, just as soon as unworthy and incompetent men are put in it.

1. One of the complaints that I hear on almost every hand, and one that I make, is that the office is filled largely by inefficient men. It is well known that these brethren are not taken from among the most efficient preachers and pastors. The majority could not sustain themselves in the pastorate before they were appointed to the office, and they could not sustain themselves if they were put back in the pastorate. And when they can no longer walk they have to be carried, and the presiding elder wagon is pulled by preachers and people.

Sometimes the family connection with a big member of the cabinet, sometimes the influence of a big member outside, sometimes the accidental relation to a popular movement lifts an inefficient brother to the high office. And then the same dry-as-dust sermons which he gave to the people when he was preacher in charge, he unloads on the preachers and people when he gets to be presiding elder.

Surely it has been my misfortune to hear more stale sermons from presiding elders since I have been in the Conference than any other member of my years. The people do not always see the defects of these poor sermons as we preachers do. They know, however, that they are not fed or helped, and they go away and say nothing; but their respect for the high office is lowered.

2. Then again these brethren who have to ride like to be pushed as well as pulled, and they find those preachers on the district who will do this. These become the presiding elder's pets. The pets will compliment his sermons when they have no food for the mind or heart in them. They will write to the Church paper of the grand sermons preached by the elder, when a number of our undergraduates could have excelled him. To see a presiding elder fondling one of these favorites, appointing or trying to appoint him to a place he cannot fill, tends to lower one's opinion of the high office which he fills.

No man is readier to speak a word of cheer to a preacher, whatever office he fills, if his sermons edify me, than this writer. No man is readier to do a friendly and brotherly deed to another, if it is needed and is deserved.

n I, but to see grown men kissing favors disgusts me.

From what I have observed the of presiding elder tends to dry the fountain of beneficence of the upants. There are preachers who not presiding elders who are close ed, and my presiding elders may e belonged to this class before they e appointed to office; but during twenty years' ministry I do not all but one dollar that has been en by one of these dear brethren, side of a collection at Conference. I this dollar I wrung out of one af- he had preached, and I took up a sionary collection, and looked him he face and asked him how much would give. I have heard some very est appeals from presiding elders the people to be liberal, but they er set an example when I am pres-

They read from the Discipline le the collection is being taken, t your light shine before men," but y must also practice that other in- ction of our Lord, "When thou st alms let not thy left hand know at thy right hand doeth."

e have regular channels through ch the preachers and people con- ute to the various causes of the urch. I have watched these chan- s for twenty years, and have seen one dollar from a presiding elder that way. They may help the ds in the district, but I have al- ys found them mingling with people t do not need charity. I do say that office of presiding elder is one of best places for a close-fisted acher to practice his stinginess that now of. Now, who can have any ect for a stingy preacher or mem- r? The higher the office and bigger salary, the less respect we have for a.

The crowning complaint which I ke is the added burden which they ose upon the people and which no at feeling and right thinking man uld think for a moment of doing. e travelling expenses of the preach- n charge and of the presiding elders included in their salaries. The poor acher out of his meager allowance s his horse and saddle, or buggy, l buys his corn and hay and bears expenses of his travel like a man. he presiding elder urges the dis- t stewards to make him a large al- ance, as his travelling expenses are vy. Then he pays those which the roads and steamboats compel him pay, and then some of them beg and t the balance. Some of them will around a depot all day waiting for unwilling preacher or member to ve or send fifteen or twenty miles him, while he holds on to the ney which the Church has given a to pay his way. I have hung my id in shame while the stewards, h long faces, were devising some y to send the presiding elder to the ot or some distant appointment on other circuit, while he had in his ket the money which the Church l given him for his own expense of vel.

and sometimes it is the case that en a brother agrees to go for an er fifteen or twenty miles, and ex- ts to receive some compensation by e society of the elder, he is sadly appointed. One good brother re- ted after such a trip that he would prefer to haul a load of rails; that the elder sat up and whistled to himself all the way. He would answer ques- tions in the quickest way possible, and then resume his whistling, as if the brother was not worthy of his notice. Another brother went to the depot at great personal inconvenience to him- self to meet the elder, and as soon as they started the elder pulled a book out of his satchel, settled himself in the corner of the buggy, and read until he reached the church. Another pre- siding elder wrote to a preacher to meet him at the depot twelve miles away. The preacher had an engage- ment elsewhere, and wrote the elder that he could not do it, and kindly in- formed him that there were good liv- ery stables at the depot. The elder was so unfortunately constituted that he did not appreciate the kindness, but would barely speak to the preacher at the Quarterly Conference. Other in- stances could be given, if necessary. How can men respect an office that is filled by such preachers? The coming of the presiding elder to these over- burdened people is not a great joy.

This article is not written by a sore- head. He has received everything from the Church that he deserves, and more. He loves the Church better than his own life. He asks for nothing, but takes whatever appointment they give him. He would not whine if he were sent to the humblest appointment in the Conference. He does not expect to be made a presiding elder. Cer- tainly not, if he has to get the place from the blonds, as he is not in high favor with them.

I do not sign my name to this article, because there are things in it which would become directly personal if I should do so, and I have no desire to make personal attacks, but to point out what I consider to be serious troubles.

TWENTY-YEAR PASTOR.

"THEY COMPASSED ME ABOUT LIKE BEES."

Psaln cxviii., 12.

(Herbert T. Bacon.)

We do not think David could have used a comparison more suitable to his condition than this; a man surrounded by a great swarm of angry bees; one flies into his face, and bewilders and stings him in the eyes; another stings him on his cheek; another on his hand; another entangles himself in his hair, while over his head is the roar of a great multitude with which it is use- less to try to contend. There is no refuge but in flight.

David is flying from the face of Ab- salom, his unnatural son, who has by good words and fair speeches so wrought evil in the hearts of the peo- ple toward him, that it is said, "The hearts of the people are after Absa- lom." Shimei curses and throws stones at him, accusing him of the evil that had been brought upon the house of Saul. Ahithophel, his wise coun- sellor and adviser, leaves him to fol- low Absalom. He is indeed as a man assailed by a swarm of angry, furious bees.

But it has been said, "The hour of danger is the hour of nerve," and we know from the teachings of God's Word that faith sings its loudest and best assured song in the night; that after the stars of earthly trust and

BIBLE,

Comprising its Antiquities, Biography
Geography and Natural History.

Edited by WM. SMITH, LL. D.,
Classical Examiner of University of London.

By a special arrangement with the publishers, we will send the Southern Methodist Recorder for one year and Smith's Bible Dictionary for $2.00. Every family should have a copy of this great work. For description, see below:

The simple explanation of this work, unlike the expositions of a com- mentary, admit of no denominational or sectarian coloring, and it is there- fore equally valuable to Bible readers of every diversity of belief.

This is, undoubtedly, the best work of its kind in the English language, and has no rival in importance for the elucidation of the scenes and facts of Scripture.

The work contains 1024 large octavo pages, over 150 illustrations and maps engraved especially for this work, and is handsomely and strongly bound in cloth. Price, $4.50.

hope have set that faith in God rises highest in the heavens shines with such brightness that no cloud of unbelief dims it. David cries out in this same psalm, "It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in man; it is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in princes." Even when "compassed about like bees" by his enemies, blinded and stung by their malignity and hatred, he with the serenity of faith cries out, "Yet in the name of the Lord will I destroy them."

Come, brethren, let us read together slowly, thoughtfully, prayerfully, the one hundredth and eighteenth Psalm, and we will arise from its perusal with faith's vision clear and strong, and though "compassed about like bees," yet in triumph and exultation will we exclaim with the Psalmist, "The Lord is on my side; I will not fear; what can man do unto me?"

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

Two memorial windows have been recently unveiled in High-Street church, Petersburg. One was in memory of Thomas Branch, Esq., for many years a prominent member of the church. Dr. A. G. Brown delivered the address. The other was in memory of Dr. E. M. Peterson, and the address was delivered by Rev. J. C. Reed.

The Methodist preachers of Norfolk Circuit held their weekly meeting at Epworth church yesterday morning, with the president, Rev. W. H. Edwards, in the chair. Prayer was offered by Rev. A. G. Brown, D. D., the presiding elder. The call of the churches was then taken up, and reports were heard from the following:

Rev. L. B. Betty had fine congregations at Monumental, Portsmouth, morning and night.

Rev. Dr. Brown was with Rev. J. W. Nicholson, of South Princess Anne Circuit. He reported very pleasant services.

At Cumberland-Street church there were good congregations, and three new members were received. There was one conversion at night.

At Port Norfolk Rev. J. F. Carey had the largest Sunday school and congregation since he has been pastor of the church.

Rev. R. H. Bennett, at McKendree, Norfolk, had his usual congregations, and two accessions to the church membership.

Rev. S. C. Hatcher reported two new members received at Queen Street.

Large congregations attended the services at Trinity. Two persons were received into the church on profession of faith, and there were twelve additions to the Sunday school.

Rev. Daniel T. Merritt had good congregations at Huntersville church, and received two new members.

Rev. J. W. Baker gave a good report from Oaklette. He had one conversion.

Rev. Mr. Beadles gave an encouraging report from Central, Portsmouth. He received seven new members, and had several additions to the Sunday school.

Rev. Paul Bradley, of Liberty-Street, and Rev. R. M. Chandler, of Chestnut-Street, Berkley, had pleasant services Sunday.

Fine congregations heard Rev. W. T. Williams, at Lekies Memorial, Atlantic City, morning and night.

Rev. George H. Spooner gave a very gratifying report of Sunday's work at Lambert's Point. He received two new members and raised a collection that paid off the remainder of the debt on the church building.

Rev. R. T. Waterfield reported good congregations at Owens Memorial, Portsmouth, and six accessions to the church.

Rev. B. F. Lipscomb, of Washington-Avenue church, Newport News, and Rev. J. W. Nicholson, of South Princess Anne Circuit, were visitors at the meeting. The former reported fine congregations Sunday, and that the church expects to build a new and spacious edifice in the near future, and has already built a chapel near the ship-yard.—Pilot.

The following paper was introduced at the Richmond Ministerial Union, and referred to the Business Committee to report at the next meeting:

"Recognizing the right guaranteed to the citizens of this country, as individuals and in meetings peaceably assembled, 'to petition the government for redress of grievances,' and believing that serious danger would threaten our country, our churches, and our homes in seating Representative-elect B. H. Roberts, an avowed polygamist, of the State of Utah, as a member of the House of Representatives in Congress, we, the people of God, and citizens of the Commonwealth of Virginia, do hereby and herein call upon our representatives in Congress, members of the House of Representatives from this State, as they honor their country, respect the religion of the Bible, love their homes, and are concerned in the welfare and happiness of the sons and daughters of our land, to guard well their sacred trust and deal firmly and fearlessly with this case as it demands. Let Congress say to the world by refusing this man a seat therein that we are a people who value morality and virtue, respect our mothers, wives, and daughters, and honor the holy ordinance of matrimony as instituted by Almighty God."

The Union also appointed a committee to arrange for a memorial service to Dr. Hoge.

A service of much interest was held in the Trinity Sunday school in the morning. It was the occasion of reading the attendance of officers, teachers, and scholars for the past year, and presenting resolutions of respect to the memory of their late superintendent, Mr. Charles P. Rady. The attendance was very gratifying to the patrons of the school, showing 136 who had attended forty or more Sundays during the year, and many had attended every Sabbath. One entire class of six young ladies had attended school every Sunday during the year.

Methodism was planted in Richmond one hundred years ago, Trinity being the first organized church. As this is the centennial year, a movement has been started looking to a grand and fitting centennial celebration on the part of the Richmond Methodist people some time in the spring. The official boards of all the Methodist congregations have been requested by the Trinity Board to meet together to discuss the matter, and if it is decided to undertake the celebration, to promulgate specific plans and make necessary arrangements. This conference will take place in the near future, and the action in the premises will be published in this paper. It is likely the celebration will cover several days, and that many of the most distinguished orators of the Methodist pulpit will be on hand to deliver sermons and addresses. It is likely that a handsome souvenir programme will be provided, containing, in addition to the full programme of exercises, an epitome of Richmond Methodist history for one hundred years, pictures of the several churches, prominent pastors, etc. The promoters of the celebration are very sanguine of a complete success if the Methodist people generally will interest themselves in the matter. The occasion would not only be one of great interest to Methodists, but one in which all other church folk, no less than our citizens generally, would take pride.

Next Sunday Dr. Starr, pastor of Broad-Street Methodist church, will preach morning and night at the University of Virginia. He was at one time pastor of the Methodist church in Charlottesville, and had the pleasure of preaching to large numbers of the students every Sabbath night.

At the first Quarterly Conference of Central church, Manchester, a committee was appointed to take under consideration the building of a new church, the building to be erected on their lot at Thirteenth and Porter streets.

Rev. Jesse A. Cunningham, one of the oldest and best known Methodist preachers in North Carolina, died in Greensboro Saturday night.

There are 750,000 Africans in Protestant churches, and 140,000 children in Protestant schools in Africa.

As a mark of progress in the Holy Land it is announced that a daily newspaper will soon be published in Jerusalem.

The Sultan has issued instructions that in future no land in Palestine shall be sold to a Jew, even though he may be a native of the Turkish Empire.

The vote of the Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church on the proposition for equal ministerial and lay representation in the General Conference up to date is 7,263 for and 1,429 against. The vote of these same Conferences last year was 3,507 for, and 5,034 against.

One hundred and seven new members were gathered about the altar of the Jefferson Park church, Chicago, on a recent Sunday morning. This makes about 450 new members Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage has received since he became pastor in Chicago, a little a year ago—making an average over one new convert for each day the whole year, with about one hundred names to spare. The original membership of the church was now the church enrolment is over The Sunday school was 90, now an enrolment of 585.

The latest reports concerning the Episcopal Church in Hawaii, which he transferred to the American Episcopal Church, show that there are the islands seven clergymen, six churches, and a membership of 1 of whom fifteen are Hawaiians. There are 30,000 Congregationalists, and 600 Roman Catholics in the islands.

According to a statement prepared by Rev. Dr. Strong, the missionary societies of the United States, Great Britain, Continental Europe, Asia and Australia number 249, with 4 stations, and 15,200 out stations. There are 11,695 missionaries, 65,000 native workers, and a million and a quarter communicants. The income from all these counts approximates $13,000,000.

THE HONEY MOON.

An early Anglo-Saxon custom, still followed by newly-married couples was that of drinking diluted honey thirty days after marriage. From this custom comes the word honeymoon.

BIBLE KISSES.

There are eight kind of kisses mentioned in the Scripture: Salvation (Sam., 20: 41; I. Thess., 5: 26); Valediction (Ruth, 1: 9); Reconciliation (Sam., 14: 33); Subjection (Ps., 2: 12); Approbation (Prov., 24: 26); Adoration (I. Kings, 14: 18); Treachery (Matt., 23: 35); Affection (Gen., 45: 15).

A CONSECRATED LIFE CLOSE

The Founder of the Fulton Street Prayer Meeting Passes Away.

With the recent death of Mr. J. Lanphier, the founder of the Fulton Street Prayer Meeting, there passed away a personality which had become familiar to many thousands of New Yorkers. And not to New York alone, but to thousands of Christians throughout the Union, for Mr. Lanphier was in a sense a national character. He was an earnest Christian business man, who loved the Lord's work, and who gave up a lucrative business that he might devote himself wholly to bringing wandering souls into the Redeemer's Kingdom.

In 1857, during a time of great business anxiety and distress, the Fulton Street Prayer Meeting was founded. It had been decided by the Old Dutch Church in Fulton street to adopt new methods of reaching the masses with the Gospel message and employ a missionary to go from house to house, visiting the sick and the discouraged. To this task Mr. Lanphier then an active, energetic, and magnetic man, in the prime of life, was signed. He devoted himself to it body and soul, and it proved a blessing to that section of the city. It became his habit to turn into the consist-om of the church every day, and ere "shut to the door and commune ith his Father who is in secret," and in fresh spiritual strength for his ities. It occurred to him that there ust be many, in that time of anxious ncern, who would benefit by such asons of prayer. He spoke of it to a w friends, who agreed with him. he consent of the consistory to hold e meetings in their room was ob- ined, and notices of the first meet- g were issued. Mr. Lanphier was nctual at his post, but for nearly lf an hour no one joined him. He mained, however, and presently one rson came, and afterwards ur others. At the next meet- g there were twenty pres- nt. The meetings were held every ednesday, but at the fourth, when ere was a large attendance, one of e persons present spoke of the bene- he had derived from the meeting, d urged that it be held daily. His roposal was put to the vote and car- ed unanimously. From that time to e present, a period of forty-one years, ere has been no interruption. Regu- rly at noon on every business day, e voice of prayer and praise has e up from the company of believers the Fulton Street Prayer Meeting. as necessary, as the number grew, e transfer the meeting from the con- story room to a larger hall.

Until September, 1893, the meeting ntinued under the charge of its nder, Mr. J. C. Lanphier. But the firmities of age began to press hea- ly on the venerable Christian worker, d it was evident that he must soon ve place to another. On the thirty- th anniversary of the first meeting, e formally committed the charge to r. C. F. Cutter, who has conducted e meetings ever since.

During Mr. Lanphier's incumbency, conductor of the work, 11,232 meet- gs were held, over 36,000 prayers ere offered, and nearly a quarter of million requests for prayer were re- ived and laid before the meetings. is on record that a multitude of e prayers offered in the Fulton Street ayer Meeting have been most won- derfully answered. Probably no sim- r work in any country in the world s been more marvellously productive spiritual results.—Christian Herald.

LETTER FROM CUBA.

The climate to me is not agreeable. ere are no fireplaces, and a portion the time fire would give comfort to ybody but a person reared in this mate and accustomed to do without ificial heat altogether. There is uch in habit. A man accustomed to e, wants it; a man accustomed to do thout fire, makes it a point never to t cold. I sleep with two or three nkets, while a native will snore un- r a single sheet.

Here they cook altogether with wood, hich is packed from the country on rses. The hay is packed, not haul- . I see many a movable stack of nes with a load of green grass on his ck, and can't avoid the reflection at if it were in his stomach instead on his back, the ratio between the nes and flesh might be altered for e better. I see many a man on a rse, when the question naturally es as to which ought to be on top; in some cases, it seems to me, they are hardly cases of mind controlling matter.

The diet is, no doubt, good, but not suitable to an American. Certainly, I am not yet acclimated to it. "Accli- mated to the diet?" you will say. Yes; acclimating does not wholly consist in getting used to the atmosphere and temperature of a country; it consists partly in getting adjusted to the diet; not merely to the cooking, but to the materials cooked. Grain, meat, and vegetables are what the soil and cli- mate make them. Grain raised here, vegetables raised here, and meat raised here are not what these things are in Tennessee. Hence, when you betake yourself to Cuban diet, your digestive machinery must be readjusted; and the readjustment is likely to create incon- venience, if not sickness. Everything here tastes and smells like Cuba. O, for one whiff of Tennessee cuisine!

Cuba is what Weyler left it, who did not have it soon enough. His policy devastated the island. Concentration and reconcentration vacated the fields and crowded the towns with starving multitudes. Without employment and without incomes, the population has wasted away. Intelligent men here es- timate that Spanish inhumanity in the late war superinduced sufficient fam- ine and pestilence to destroy the lives of six hundred thousand people—men, women, and children! This estimate does not include those who fell in bat- tle on the Cuban side, a number said to be inconsiderable; for the Cuban commanders adopted the Fabian pol- icy, knowing that in their great pau- city of men victory would often be a defeat. Weyler's war was mainly on women and children. His policy was to save the island to Spain by annihi- lating its people.

I am almost afraid to saunter out in this town by myself, even in daylight; for when I do I am followed by a pack of hungry wolves in the persons of starving, cadaverous women and chil- dren, who beg only for a penny. I walked along one of the narrow streets (and all are narrow) yesterday for a mile, and I saw to the right and left nothing but filth, want, and squalor. The low, flat houses, or rather huts, solid blocks on both sides, were liter- ally crowded by these poor wretched specimens of humanity, all thinly clad, and some as naked as they were born. The only security against having one's heart broken by such scenes is either more religion than most Christians en- joy, or the stolid indifference cultiva- ted by the men and women who daily witness them. It would take a million of dollars spent in charity to arrest the war of extermination now being waged by famine on the people of the island. What charity does here she must do quickly. The Government of the United States ought forthwith to appropriate five million dollars and put it into honest hands to arrest the hu- man extermination now going on. The best thing that can be done is to loan the people money on mortgages to en- able them to renew the planting and grazing industries, which have been laid aside, and which cannot be re- newed without aid from without. The most insistent beggars are those who least need help, though all the beggars need it. Those most easily repudiated are they who are so reduced by hun- ger that they have no strength left to realize it or to care for life.—Rev. R. N. Price, in Nashville Advocate.

Santa Clara, Cuba, Dec. 19, 1898.

IT CAN BE DONE.

Lexington, Ky.—Every saloon in the city was closed yesterday, Sunday, by mutual agreement of the proprietors. This action was brought about by the fact that the recent grand jury indicted all saloon keepers for violating the Sunday law.

This is good news, but it is not the first indication that the Blue Grass State, famous too long for its whiskey stills, is taking a leading place in the advancement of sobriety, good morals, and religion. A dispatch from another part of the State has just informed us that a local judge has created a big stir by preparing an "inebriate list," a copy of which he has furnished to every saloon man in town. It is made up of those who have been arraigned in po- lice courts for drunkenness, and is a lengthy roll of both whites and blacks. The penalty is $50 fine to sell drink to an inebriate. The saloon men and the "inebriates" are loud in their com- plaints, but the judge has taken a firm stand, and says he means to sober up the town. One man who bought liquor for one of the "listed" men, was promptly fined $50, and sent to the workhouse. It is said that the saloon men are standing by the notice, so far, and some of the worst drunkards in town are becoming as dry as a powder- horn. The scheme is a little novel, but let us welcome anything which will curb the reign of this dread monarch, Drink.—Pam's Horn.

A BROKEN CHEST.

Astuteness is not a persistent ele- ment in the intellectual equipment of all those who adorn the judicial bench, if this story, from "Household Words," is to be relied upon:

Mr. Justice Ball, an Irish judge, once tried a case, in which a man was in- dicted for robbery at the house of a poor widow. The first witness was the young daughter of the widow, who identified the prisoner as the man who entered the house and smashed her mother's chest. "Do you say that the prisoner at the bar broke your mother's chest?" said the judge, in astonish- ment. "He did, my lord," answered the girl; "he jumped on it till he smashed it entirely." The judge turn- ed to the crown counsel, and said: "How is this? Why is not the prisoner indicted for murder? If he smashed this poor woman's chest in the way the witness has described, he must surely have killed her." "But, my lord," said the counsel, "it was a wood- en chest."

LO, THE POOR INDIAN.

From Omaha comes this incident, an echo of the exposition recently held in that thriving city, of a contest between an Indian and a Boston girl, in which the honors seem to have been carried off by the former:

One of the attractive features of the Mississippi Exposition at Omaha was an Indian department, where the red men dwelt in their tepees, and mimicked their own history in dances and mock fights. After one of the latter exhibi- tions a Boston girl undertook to talk to a young Indian brave sitting beside her. "Heap much fight," she said.

Lo smiled a stoical smile, drew his blanket closer about his stalwart form, and replied:

"Yes; this is indeed a great exposi- tion, and we flatter ourselves that our portion of the entertainment is by no means the least attraction here. May I ask who it is that I have the honor of addressing?"

The dear girl from Boston was thun- derstruck. She blushed a rosy red— even Boston girls can blush when they thaw out—and hastily fled.

She had been addressing one of the Carlisle Indian School graduates.

HARDNESS NOT TO BE ENDURED.

A British volunteer has had the hard- hood, according to "The London Week- ly Telegraph," to make the following confession. He says:

Some time ago I spent a week with a garrison battery in a South Coast fort. On the last day the sergeants sat down to an exceptionally fine din- ner, the crowning glory of which was a large plum pudding. I had made the pudding two days before, had it boiled, and now, reheated, it made its appear- ance amid the welcome shouts of my brother warriors; and I naturally felt a bit proud of it, for I hadn't been a ship's cook for nothing.

"Seems mighty hard," remarked the sergeant major, as he vainly tried to stick his fork into it. "Have you boiled us a cannon ball, Browney?"

"Or the regimental football?" asked another.

"Where did you get the flour from?" questioned Sergeant Smith.

"Where from?" I retorted. "From store No. 5, of course."

"The deuce you did!" roared the quartermaster sergeant. "Then, hang you, you've made the pudding with Portland cement!"

And so it proved. The pudding is now preserved in the battery museum.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE IN ERROR.

Representative-elect John L. Bur- nett, of Gadsden, Ala., who will suc- ceed Milford W. Howard, the Popu- list, will probably be the smallest man in the Next House of Congress. He is, nevertheless, an able lawyer. A story is told of him, and one of the Alabama delegation vouches for its truth. When he first appeared in the Supreme Court of the State to argue a case, he stood up in front of a high bench, which it is the custom there to place in front of the seats of the judges. On this bench the lawyers rest their books and their papers while making arguments.

Mr. Burnett, according to the story, arose and addressed the court, pro- ceeding with his argument. The judges peered out toward the high bench, and were unable to perceive the attorney. He was so short that his head was not apparent over the high bench.

"Mr. Burnett," remarked the chief justice, in dignified tones, "it is cus- tomary for lawyers to arise in address- ing this court."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON III, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JAN. 15.

Text of the Lesson, John 4, 1-11.
Memory Verse, 11—Golden Text, John 4, 11—Comments—Prepared
by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1888, by D. M. Stearns.]

1. "And the third day there was a marriage in Cana of Galilee, and the mother of Jesus was there." The third day's work in Gen. 1 was the appearing of the dry land and its being covered with grass, herbs and fruit trees. It was on the third day that Abraham received Isaac back from the dead in a figure (Gen. xxi, 4; Heb. xi, 19). On the third day Jonah, being delivered from the belly of the fish, started for Nineveh as God's messenger. These, with many other third day stories, are very suggestive of the resurrection of our Lord on the third day, and as, apart from His resurrection preaching, faith, baptism and all ordinances are in vain we cannot wonder that the Scriptures make so much of the truth of His resurrection. It is also most interesting to note that the Bible begins with a marriage in Eden and ends with the marriage of the Lamb, and the first miracle wrought by the Lamb of God was at this marriage in Cana.

2. "And both Jesus was called and His disciples to the marriage." One of the very first institutions in the Scriptures, and the one that expresses most fully our oneness with God and with Christ, the one also that shall usher in the glorious kingdom on the earth. He said of Israel, "I am married unto you" (Jer. iii, 14), and of us who now believe in Him it is said that we are married to the Lord that we should bring forth fruit unto God (Rom. vii, 4). The words used by Adam concerning Eve in Gen. ii, 23, 24, are used in reference to Christ and the church in Eph. v, 30-32, and in Heb. xiii, 4, it is said that marriage is honorable in all.

3. "And when they wanted wine, the mother of Jesus saith unto Him, 'They have no wine.'" There is a want found at this marriage—they have not enough of wine. Whether more people had come than they had expected or whether some one had been mistaken in the quantity needed we are not told.

4. "Jesus saith unto her: 'Woman, what have I to do with thee? Mine hour is not yet come.'" There is neither unkindness nor any lack of courtesy in this word to His mother. There could not be, for God is love, and love is kind, and He was God manifest in the flesh. He virtually said at least this—I will see to it at the right time. The Lord is a God of judgment or discernment; blessed are all they that wait for Him (Isa. xxx, 18).

5. "His mother saith unto the servants, 'Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it.'" Thus she placed the matter in His hands and quietly left it there. She directed the servants to Him for all further instruction and withdrew from all further responsibility. She knows it will be attended to, and she leaves it. Do we thus cast every care upon Him, every burden and anxiety, and quietly leave it with Him? We are reminded of Pharaoh's word to the Egyptians, Go unto Joseph; what he saith to you do.

6. "And there were set there six water pots of stone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews, containing two or three firkins apiece." The pots were evidently empty, judging from the next verse. When the Lord would use vessels in which to show His power, He requires empty vessels. When He would pay the widow's debt, she was told by the prophet to borrow empty vessels, not a few, and as long as there was an empty vessel the oil flowed to fill it (II Kings iv, 3).

7. "Jesus saith unto them, 'Fill the water pots with water, and they filled them up to the brim.'" Now His hour is about come in which He will on this occasion glorify the Father, and He tells the servants what to do. It is always His to command; it is ours simply to obey. From water everything has come, for in Gen. 1, 2, we see nothing but water. In the first seven chapters of this gospel there is much to be learned from the use of this element. In Eph. v, 26, it is an emblem of the word by which we are cleansed.

8. "And He saith unto them, 'Draw out now and bear unto the governor of the feast. And they bare it.'" The Son of Man came to minister unto others (Math. xx, 28), and He permits us to be the bearers of His bounties. As He permitted the twelve to bear the bread and fish which He multiplied to the hungry thousands and these servants to bear His wine to the governor of the feast, so He permits us to bear the living bread and water and His love, which is better than wine, to all who will receive it.

9. "When the ruler of the feast had tasted the water that was made wine and knew not whence it was (but the servants which drew the water knew), the governor of the feast called the bridegroom." The water was made wine. He did it, and whether it be by the process of the vine and the grapes or directly, as in this case, it is all equally easy to Him. He is the vine; He is the true wine that maketh glad the heart of man. Not a cup of cold water shall lose its reward; therefore those who give much water now shall have much wine or joy in the kingdom. We are the earthen vessels, and if we fill them up to the brim with the water of His word He will change it to wine in us, and we shall be full of joy. The more sorrow for His sake now, the more joy we shall have hereafter.

10. "And saith unto him, 'Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine, and when men have well drunk then that which is worse, but thou hast kept the good wine until now.'" Then it was good wine, the best of wine, which our Lord Jesus made. This testimony is from the ruler of the feast, not knowing whence the wine came. He only makes the best of everything; that which man makes is always inferior. If, as one has said, He keeps His best things for the few, it is not because He is not willing to give His best to many, but rather because only the few are willing to receive them.

11. "This beginning of miracles did Jesus in Cana of Galilee and manifested forth His glory. And His disciples believed on Him." This was His first miracle; therefore all the apocryphal tales of the miracles of His childhood cannot be true. He manifested His glory. How? By changing water into wine or by pointing onward, as in the transfiguration, to the time of His kingdom and glory when as He said at the last passover (Luke 22). He would not drink again of the fruit of the vine until He would drink it anew in the kingdom. His glory must be associated with His kingdom. His disciples, who must have believed on Him before (or they would not have been His disciples), are growing in confidence in and devotion to Him. So should it ever be (II Pet. iii, 18).

His Head Burned Off.

New York, Jan. 9.—As John Ferris, watchman at a lime kiln in Williamsburg, was making his early rounds yesterday, he noticed a man who appeared to be sleeping at the edge of the kiln. Stepping closer to get a better view of the stranger Ferris was horrified to see that the man had no head, it having been burned off completely. He had evidently wandered to the kiln to get warm, and the gases rising from the furnace overcame him. He probably was dead before the fire reached his head. The man was unidentified.

Amos Owen Cherry Trees

The finest cherries and largest cherry tree in the known world grow on the famous Cherry Mountain, near Ellenboro, N. C.

For the past few years trees from this famous orchard have been transplanted in the surrounding country, and have proved a surprise to the people by their rapid growth, enormous size, and delicious fruit. The trees grow very tall, and spread out long, heavy limbs, and are filled with large black heart-shaped cherries. As many as five bushels have been gathered from one tree. The fruit is very fine in flavor, and suitable for canning, pies, drying, etc., and, ripening as they do in May and June, they come in when other fruit is scarce, and sell readily at 10 cents per quart. Besides their great value as fruit trees, they make the finest of shade trees. Mr. John T. Patrick, chief industrial agent of the Seaboard Air Line, after examining them and seeing their great value as a fruit and shade tree, says:

"These trees are rapid growers: they make a good shade, and yield a abundant crop of large, black cherries, that find a ready market. One thousand trees will in five years from planting yield a revenue to the town that puts them out sufficient to pay town taxes, keep up the streets, and work the country roads leading into the town.

"It would be a big advertisement that will be worth thousands of dollars to be able to say 'our town has fruit-bearing trees enough on its sidewalks and public parks to pay the expenses of the town and build good country roads,' and will give you a world-wide reputation for thrift, enterprise, and good judgment."

Mr. Patrick did not only talk, but acted on his judgment, and we furnished to him and his agents over six thousand trees during 1897-'98 season.

The trees can be set any time from October 20th to March 30th, and is a very rare thing for one to die. So rare that we gladly send another in place of any that die the first season, that has been carefully set out. We carefully pack all trees, so as to arrive in good condition. We can furnish them either by mail or express one to three years old. Small trees grow off better, and will make a large tree as quick as a ten-foot one, but we will furnish them any size up to ten feet high. We prepare all trees when cash accompanies the order. So it does not make any difference where you live, they will be delivered at the following prices:

One tree by mail 25c. Twenty tree by express $2.50
Six trees by mail $1.00 Fifty trees by express 5.00
Twelve trees by express 1.75 One hundred trees by express 8.00

One tree free with each order, if you mention the Methodist Recorder.

Send money by registered mail, postoffice, or express money order, or check, making them payable to FRANK BRIGHT, Secretary, and address CHERRY MOUNTAIN SUPPLY COMPANY, Ellenboro, N. C.

Our Motto:

Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction. REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teacher's Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Practice School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent or Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Jan. 15, "Where Am I Going?"
Text, Ps. cxix, 57-64.

"I thought on my ways and turned my feet unto Thy testimonies."

It is a bad sign when we don't want to be alone, when we are determined not to think. There is such a thing as brooding over the past and becoming morbid, despondent and utterly discouraged if we shut ourselves in from the world too long and think only of ourselves. But it is surely as bad for us to stifle all conviction and repress feeling and confuse all purpose in a continual whirl of worldly excitement.

It is also possible that we may be so full of work, even religious work, that we dissipate the deepest spiritual impressions. Time is needed for meditation. No growth in grace is adequate which doesn't base itself on earnest thought. It is particularly irksome to many minds to bring the thought in from wandering, fix it on some one subject and think. Especially is this true when there have been wrongs committed and duties neglected. It is painful to turn the searchlight upon one's own conduct, feelings and intentions. But it is safe, and there is safety in no other course. Take time to know yourself. Analyze your motives, see how much of your zeal is pride, how much of devotion is love of excitement, how much your freedom from temptation is due to shirking God's work, how much self-indulgence has taken the place of self-denial.

Take time to think out the Bible rules and apply to the problems of your own life. Some of the questions are as complicated as any algebraic equation. How can you solve them unless you think soberly and earnestly?

"I made haste and delayed not to keep Thy commandments."

That is the only safe way. "Put not off until tomorrow what today can do as well" is an old adage and a safe one to follow, especially in regard to all religious duties. Intuitions are strongest at the first, and the more they are examined the dimmer they grow. Most of the impulses to right come as intuitions and should be followed immediately. Delay blunts the edge of purpose and loses the opportune moment. While the iron is hot we must strike it or fail to shape it as desired.

An English Leader.

One of the most widely and favorably known of the younger generation of English Wesleyans is Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. Some years since he rose into particular prominence in connection with aggressive mission work in the west end of London, in a field particularly difficult. Services in St. James hall were instituted and the most skillful methods of evangelistic work employed. Associated with him was Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, well known on both sides the ocean by his quaint writings on spiritual themes. Mr. Hughes has an abundance of force and tact and has succeeded where a less positive man would have met absolute failure. He is editor of one of the most influential Methodist weeklies, and altogether one of the most conspicuous members of the Methodist church in England. He has made a visit to this country and became known to a large circle of Epworth Leaguers. The cut represents him as he appears at Grindelwald in his frequent trips among the Swiss Alps.

Start Early.

The new year has opened and active work in all departments of the League should be at once instituted if not already well under way. The end to be aimed at is the development of sincere piety. This should be simple, genuine and intelligent. All departments are needed for the highest success. A regular course of services is the most useful. If a meeting can be held once a week and the books of the reading course used, it will give a good start. There is a book for each department. "The Founding of a New World" is written for the spiritual department and deals with the first 300 years of the Christian church. Let this form the basis for discussion for 30 minutes of the session. A chapter can be read aloud or the events described can be presented in a short paper, address or conversation. Maps, pictures, blackboard and other books can be used to explain more fully the incidents of the early Christian life. Songs, prayers, testimonies and exhortations can fill another half hour and the result of the short hour of service be a quickening of the intellectual and spiritual pulse of every member.

Leaguers at School.

A host of our members are absent from home at school. Remember them specially in prayer this week. Pray that they may be kept from falling. Peculiar temptations surround them. Home restraints are removed. Unwonted freedom of action is given. Experience has not rendered them cautious and wise. Homesickness may press them to seek companionship not of the best. New truth may unsettle old faith. Old habits of devotion may be broken by pressure of new duties. Pray for them!

FATAL HOTEL FIRE.

Three Dead and Five Badly Injured In a Pittsburgh Conflagration.

Pittsburg, Jan. 9.—A fire broke out in the Hotel Richelleu at 3:15 yesterday morning and resulted in a property loss of only about $15,000, but three lives were sacrificed and five people badly hurt. The dead are: Amos S. Landis, Grapeville, Pa.; George A. Walters, Camden, N. J.; Mrs. Katherine Boyle, Pittsburg. The three victims were guests of the hotel and all were suffocated by the dense smoke.

The injured are: Dr. Robert Blackley, of Plymouth, Pa., fracture of vertebrae, caused by falling from third floor window, will probably die; Henry Painter, Grapeville, Pa., small blood vessels of lungs ruptured by inhaling smoke, may recover; John L. Mills, proprietor of the hotel, face and body badly burned; Miss Mills, his daughter, cut by glass while breaking through window to escape; William Garretson, Clearfield, Pa., delegate to miners' national convention, painfully burned about the back and hips.

The fire originated on the second floor from an explosion of gas, and within a few moments the building was a mass of flames and blinding smoke. The noise of the explosion awakened most of the guests, about 20 in number, and a frantic fight for life ensued.

Robert N. Thompson, of Kalaska, Mich., was the means of saving at least six lives. In the first moments after the explosion he rushed into the hallway of the second floor and stumbled over the unconscious form of a woman, whom he dragged into the reception room. Five others, three men and two women, who had been turned back from the stairway by the flames, were shrieking and fighting for some exit. Thompson forced them all into the big room and locked the door. Knowing that it meant death to go into the hall he fought the desperate men back until the arrival of the firemen, when all were rescued.

FOUR TRAINMEN KILLED.

Mistake Caused a Head On Collision on the Southern Railroad.

Knoxville, Tenn., Jan. 9.—Four dead, two injured, one of these perhaps fatally, and the loss of property of the Southern railroad to the amount of about $100,000 is the result of a wreck which occurred yesterday on the Knoxville and Ohio branch of the Knoxville division of the Southern railway, one and a half miles east of Elk Valley.

The dead are Engineer J. D. Maxey, Fireman Frank Reddy (colored), Brake-man Ironsea Hoover (colored) and Flagman W. A. Dillon.

The injured are: Engineer Goff, badly but not fatally cut in the head and bruised; Fireman George Huskinson, badly burned and may die.

A double headed freight train, loaded with coal and merchandise, crashed into a mixed local passenger train while both were running at the rate of 35 miles an hour. The engines met head on, the force of impact being terrific. The coming together of the two trains was so sudden that the trainmen were unable to jump and save their lives. The passenger train was running 15 minutes late, having waited at Knoxville for connection with a western train, and had the right of way. All the freight trains on the division had been notified that the passenger train was on a late run, and the only cause for the accident that can be given is that Engineer Maxey, of the freight train, misread orders.

THE "PEACEFUL" CZAR.

He Is Constantly Strengthening His Own Fighting Forces.

London, Jan. 9.—The Sebastopol correspondent of The Times, who has been touring in European Russia for two months to discover, if possible, some evidence on the part of the Russian government to give effect to the disarmament proposals of Emperor Nicholas, says all his observations were quite to the contrary. The correspondent says:

"At the naval dockyards I found feverish activity. Not a man has been withdrawn from the frontiers. The ministers of war and marine have been inspecting all the important military and naval stations, urging an acceleration of the preparations for defense, but apparently never mentioning the czar's manifesto. The number of men enrolled in the army and navy during the months of October and November last were larger than ever before. Reinforcements are being sent to the far east as fast as they can be transported, and all the garrisons along the Russo-Turkish frontier are being largely increased."

The Flower of the American Army.

Chicago, Jan. 9.—Major General H. W. Lawton, who was recently assigned to the command of the military forces in the Philippines, arrived in Chicago yesterday on a tour of inspection of the troops that have been ordered to Manila. A rigid examination of the Fourth Infantry at Fort Sheridan was made during the day, with the result that 40 or 50 of the soldiers were disapproved and will not accompany their regiment to the Orient. General Lawton said his command would be made of the flower of the American army. "The United States," he said, "will be on exhibition before the powers of Europe, and it is important that we have the finest type of American manhood represented in our army."

CITY TREASURER SLAIN.

Found Dying in His Office, Which Had Been Robbed.

New Castle, Pa., Jan. 9.—John Blevins, city treasurer of New Castle, was found Saturday midnight in his office unconscious and dying. His head had been beaten to a jelly, the safe broken open and perhaps $200 in money taken. Saturday evening Blevins went to the tailor's for a new suit of clothes. The garments were not ready, and he went to his office, which is over the jail, to wait until the tailor had finished. When at midnight he had not returned home his son went to his office. He found his father lying on the floor, unconscious in a pool of blood. He died soon afterward. The robbers and murderers left no clew to their identity. The prisoners in the jail said they heard a sound as of something falling about 9 o'clock, and that was about the time Blevins went to his office.

The Per Diem Pension Bill.

Columbus, O., Jan. 9.—The committee appointed by the National Encampment of the Union Veterans' Legion to pass on the merits of the pension measure known as the "per diem bill" has completed its report and forwarded it to Adjutant General Hay. The committee reaches the conclusion, after an extended and exhaustive examination of the bill, that an annual saving to the government of $31,000,000 can be accomplished under its operation, and an additional saving of over $12,000,000 in the event examining boards are abolished. The bill is not framed so that the Union Veterans' Legion alone will enjoy its benefits, but every Union soldier can come under its provisions.

Wanted the Title.

A correspondent of the Toronto Globe at Washington says that at a luncheon given to the Canadian commissioners the women present kept the menu cards and got the commissioners to write their names upon them, that they might have a souvenir of the occasion. One woman saw with undisguised concern her card filling up with plain everyday names. She was astonished that Sir Wilfrid and the other Canadian knights signed their names without the prefix of Sir, but as she neared Lord Herschel she felt that things would be different, for was he not a lord high chancellor of England?

Her astonishment turned to dismay when the card again came back, this time with the single word Herschel. "Herschel!" she said. "Herschel! Why doesn't he sign it 'Lord Herschel'?" In vain it was explained to her that peers signed only their titles, and that it would be very bad form to put Lord before it. She had been bunkoed and knew it.

CLING TO THE CROSS.

DR. TALMAGE PREACHES A POWERFUL SERMON.

Men of Talent Have Special Opportunities For Doing Good—Heroes at Home as Well as on the Battlefield. The Greatest Warrior of All.

(Copyright, 1899, by American Press Association.)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—From a text probably never before discoursed upon Dr. Talmage in this sermon shows how some people multiply their resources for usefulness and in a novel way urges the putting forth of more energy in right directions; text, II Samuel xviii, 3, "Thou art worth 10,000 of us."

One of the most wondrous characters of his time was David. A red haired boy, he could shepherd a flock or carry "ten loaves and ten slices of milk cheese to his brothers in the regiment," or with lathern thong, stone loaded, bring down a giant whose armor weighed two hundredweight of metal, or cause a lion which roared at him in rage to roar with pain as he flung it, dying, to the roadside, or could marshal a host, or rule an empire, or thumb a harp so skillfully that it cured Saul's dementia—a harp from whose strings dripped pastorals, elegies, lyrics, triumphal marches, benedictions. Now, this man, a combination of music and heroics, of dithyrambs and battlefields, of country quietudes and statesmanship, is to fit out a military expedition. Four thousand troops, according to Josephus, were sent into the field. The captains were put in command of the companies, and the colonels in command of the regiments, which were disposed into right wing, left wing and center. General Joab, General Abishai and General Ittai are to lead these three divisions. But who shall take the field as commander in chief? David offers his services and proposes to go to the front. He will lead them in the awful charge, for he has not a cowardly nerve in all his body. He did not propose to have his troops go into perils which he himself would not brave, and the battlefield required as much courage then as now, for the opposing forces must, in order to do any execution at all, come up to within positive reach of saber and spear. But there came up from the troops and from civilians a mighty protest against David's taking the field. His life was too important to the nation. If he went down, the empire went down; whereas, if the whole 4,000 of the ranks were slain another army might be marshaled and the defeat turned into victory. The army and the nation practically cried out: "No! No! You cannot go to the front! We estimate you as 10,000 men! 'Thou art worth 10,000 of us!'"

That army and that nation then and there reminded David and now remind us of the fact which we forget or never appreciate at all that some people are morally or spiritually worth far more than others, and some worth far less. The census and statistics of neighborhoods, of churches, of nations, serve their purpose, but they can never accurately express the real state of things. The practical subject that I want to present today is that those who have especial opportunity, especial graces, especial wealth, especial talent, especial eloquence, ought to make up by especial assiduity and consecration for those who have less opportunities and less gifts. You ought to do ten times more for God and human uplifting than those who have only a tenth of your equipment. The rank and the file of the 4,000 of the text told the truth when they said, "Thou art worth 10,000 of us."

In no city of its size are there so many men of talent as are gathered in this capital of the American nation.

Some of the states are at times represented by men who have neither talents nor good morals. Their political party compensates them for partisan services by securing them to congress or by securing for them position in the war or navy or pension or printing departments. They were nobodies before they left home, and they are nobodies here, but they are exceptional. All the states of the Union generally send their most talented men and men of exemplary lives and noble purposes. Some of them have the gifts and qualifications of ten men, of a hundred men—yea, of a thousand men—and their constituents could truthfully employ the words of my text and say, "Thou art worth 10,000 of us."

Power For Good.

With such opportunity, are they augmenting their usefulness in every possible direction? Many of them are, some of them are not. It is a stupendous thing to have power—political power, social power, official power. It has often been printed and often quoted as one of the wise sayings of the ancients, "Knowledge is power." Yet it may as certainly be power for evil as for good. The lightning express rail train has power for good if it is on the track, but horrible power for disaster if it leaves the track and plunges down the embankment. The ocean steamer has power for good, sailing in right direction and in safe waters and under good helmsman and wide awake watchman on the lookout, but indescribable power for evil if under full headway it strikes the breakers. As steam power or electricity or water forces may be stored in boilers, in dynamos, in reservoirs, to be employed all over a town or city, so God sometimes puts in one man enough faith to supply thousands of men with courage. If a man happens to be thus endowed, let him realize his opportunity and improve it. At this time millions of men are a-tremble lest this nation make a mistake and enter upon some policy of government for the islands of the sea that will founder the republic. God will give to a few men on both sides of this question faith and courage for all the rest. There are two false positions many are now taking, false as false can be. The one is that if we decline to take under full charge Cuba and Porto Rico and the Philippines we make a declaration that will be disastrous to our nation, and other nations will take control of those archipelagoes and rule them, and perhaps to our humiliation and destruction. The other theory is that if we take possession of those once Spanish colonies we invite foreign interference and enter upon a career that will finally be the demolition of this government. Both positions are immeasurable mistakes. God has set apart this continent for free government and the triumphs of Christianity, and we may take either the first or the second course without ruin. We may say to those islands: "We do not want you, but we have set you free. Now stay free, while we see that the Spanish panther never again puts its paw on your neck." Or we may invite the annexation of Cuba and Porto Rico and say to the Philippines, "Get ready by education and good morals for free government, and at the right time you shall be one of our territories, on the way to be one of our states."

And there is no power in Europe, Asia or Africa, or all combined, that could harm this nation in its world-wide endeavor. God is on the side of the right, and by earnest imploration for divine guidance on the part of this nation we will be led to do the right. We are on the brink of nothing. There is no frightful crisis. This train of Republican and Democratic institutions is a throughtrain, and all we want is to have the engineer and the brakemen and the conductor attend to their business and the passengers keep their places. We want men in this nation with faith enough for all. We want here and there a David worth 10,000 men.

Confidence Lacking.

A vast majority of men have no surplus of confidence for others and hardly enough confidence for themselves. They go through life saying depressing things and doing depressing things. They chill prayer meetings, discourage charitable institutions, injure commerce and kill churches. They blow out lights when they ought to be kindling them. They hover around a dull fire on their own hearth and take up so much room that no one can catch the least calorific, instead of stirring the hearth into a blaze, the crackle of whose backlog would invite the whole neighborhood to come in to feel the abounding warmth and see the transfiguration of the faces. As we all have to guess a great deal about the future, let us guess something good, for it will be more encouraging, and the guess will be just as apt to come true. What a lot of ingrates the Lord has at his table! People who have had three meals a day for 50 years and yet fear that they will soon have to rattle their knife and fork on an empty dinner plate. How many have had—winter and spring and summer and fall—clothing for 60 years, but expect an empty wardrobe shortly! How many have lived under free institutions all their days, but fear that the United States may be telescoped in some foreign collision! Oh, but the taxes have gone up! Yes, but thank God, it is easier with money to pay the taxes now than they are up than it was without money to pay the taxes when they were down. We want a few men who have faith in God and that mighty future which holds several things, among them a millennium. Columbanus said to his friend, "Deicolus, why are you always smiling?" The reply was, "Because no one can take my God from me!" We want more men to feel that they have a mission to cheer others and to draw up the corners of people's mouths which have a long while been drawn down, more Davids who can shepherd whole flocks of bright hopes, and can play a harp of encouragement, and strike down a Goliath of despair, and of whom we can say, "Thou art worth 10,000 of us."

I admit that this thought of my text fully carried out would change many of the world's statistics. Suppose a village is said to have 1,000 inhabitants, and that one-half of them—namely, 500—have for years been becoming less in body, and through niggardliness and grumbling less in soul. Each one of these is only one-half of what he once was or one-half of what she once was. That original 500 have been reduced one-half in moral quality and are really only 250. Suppose that the other 500 have maintained their original status and are neither better nor worse. Then the entire population of that village is 750. But suppose another village of 1,000, and 500 of them, as the years go by, through mental and spiritual culture, augment themselves until they are really twice the men and women they originally were, and the other 500 remain unchanged and are neither better nor worse, then the population of that village is 1,500. Meanness is subtraction and nobility is addition. According as you rise in the scale of holiness and generosity and consecration, you are worth 5 or 10 or 50 or 100 or 1,000 or 10,000 others.

Humble Heroes.

Notice, my friend, that this David, warrior, strategist, minstrel, master of blank verse and stone slinger at the giant, whom the soldiers of the text estimated clear up into the thousandfold of usefulness on this particular occasion, staid at home or in his place of temporary residence. General Joab, General Abishai and General Ittai, who commanded the boys in the right wing and left wing and center, did their work bravely and left 25,000 of the Lord's enemies dead on the field, and many of the survivors got entangled in the woods of Ephraim and mixed up in the bushes and stumbled over the stumps of trees and fell into bogs and were devoured of wild beasts which seized them in the thickets. But David did his work at home. We all huzza for heroes who have been in battle and on their return what processions we form and what triumphal arches we spring and what banquets we spread and what garlands we wreath and what orations we deliver and what bells we ring and what cannonades we fire! But do we do justice to the stay at homes? David, who was worth 10,000 of those who went out to meet the Lord's enemies in the woods of Ephraim, that day did his work in retirement.

Oh, the world needs a day of judgment, to give many of the stay at homes proper recognition. In the different wars the sons went to the front and on ship's deck or battlefield exposed their lives and earned the admiration of the country, but how about the mothers and fathers who through long years taught those sons the noble sentiments that inspired them to go and then gave them up when perhaps a few words of earnest protest would have kept them on the farm and in the homestead? The day of final reward will reveal the self sacrifice and the fidelity of thousands who never in all their lives received one word of praise. Oh, ye unknown, ye faithful and Christian and all enduring stay at homes! I have no power now to do you justice, but I tell you of one who has the power and of the day when he will put it forth. It will be the day when the thimble, and the laddle, and the darning needle, and the washtub, and the spinning wheel, and the scythe, and the thrashing machine, and the hammer, and the trowel, and the plow, will come to as high an appreciation as a 74 pounder, or the sword, or the battering ram that pounded down the wall or the flag that was hoisted on the scaled parapets.

A Great Soldier.

The warrior David of my text showed more self control and moral prowess in staying at home than he could have shown commanding in the field. He was a natural warrior. Martial airs stirred him. The glitter of opposing shields fired him. He was one of those men who feel at home in the saddle, patting the neck of a pawing cavalry horse. But he suppressed himself. He obeyed the command of the troops whom he would like to have commanded. Some of the greatest Sedans and Austertitzes have been in backwoods kitchens or in nurseries, with three children down with scarlet fever, soon to join the two already in the churchyard, or amid domestic wrongs and outrages enough to transform angels into devils, or in commercial life within their own counting rooms in time of Black Friday panics, or in mechanical life in their own carpenter shop or on the scaffolding of walls, swept by cold or smitten by heat. No telegraphic wires reported the crisis of the conflict, no banner was ever waved to celebrate their victory, but God knows, and God will remember, and God will adjust, and by him the falling of a tear is as certainly noticed as the burning of a world, and the flutter of a sparrow's wing as the flight of the apocalyptic archangel.

Oh, what a God we have for small things as well as big things! David no more helped at the front than helped at home. The four regiments mobilized for the defense of the throne of Israel were right in protesting against David's exposure of his life at the front. Had he been pierced of an arrow or cloven down with a battleax or fatally slung from snorting war charger, what a disaster for the throne of Israel! Absalom, his son, was a low fellow and unfit to reign; his two chief characteristics were his handsome face and his long hair—so long that when he had it out that which was scissored off weighed "200 shekels, after the king's weight," and when a man has nothing but a handsome face and an exuberance of hair there is not much of him. The capture or slaying of David would have been a calamity irreparable. Unnecessary exposure would have been a crime for David, as it is a crime for you.

Some people think it is a bright thing to put themselves in unnecessary peril. They like to walk up to the edge of a precipice and look off, defying vertigo, or go among contagions when they can be of no use but to demonstrate their own bravado, or with glee drive horses which are only harnessed whirlwinds, or see how close they can walk in front of a trolley car without being crushed, or spring on a rail train after it has started, or leap off a rail train before it has stopped. Their life is a series of narrow escapes, careless of what predicament their family would suffer at their sudden taking off or of the misfortune that might come to their business partners or the complete failure of their life work, if a coroner's jury must be called in to decide the style of their exit. They do not take into consideration what their life is worth to others. Taken off through such recklessness they go criminals. There was not one man among those four full regiments of 4,000 Israelites that would have so much enjoyed being in the fight as David, but he saw that he could serve his nation best by not putting on helmet and shield and sword, and so he took the advice of the armed men and said, "What seemeth to you best I will do." I warrant that you will die soon enough, without teasing and bantering casually to see if it can launch you into the next world.

Keep Out of Peril.

In nine cases out of ten the fatalities every day reported are not the fault of engineers or brakemen or conductors or cab drivers, but of the stupidity and recklessness of people at street or railroad crossing. They would like to have the Chicago limited express train, with 300 passengers and advertised to arrive at a certain hour in a certain city, slow up to let them get two minutes sooner to their destination, not one farthing of their own or any one else's welfare dependent on whether they arrive one minute before 12 o'clock or one minute after. You ought to get permission from a railroad superintendent to mount beside the engineer on a locomotive to realize how many evils of recklessness there are in the world—funeral processions whipping up to get across before the cowcatcher strikes the hearse; man of family, with wife and children beside him in a wagon, evidently having made close calculation as to whether a stroke from the locomotive would put them backward or forward in the journey to the village grocery; traveler on a railroad bridge, hoping that he could get to the end of the bridge before the train reaches it. You have no right to put your life in peril unless by such exposure something is to be gained for others. What imbecility in thousands of Americans during our recent American-Spanish war, disappointed because the surrender came so soon and they could not have the advantage of being shot at San Juan hill or brought down with the yellow fever and carried on a litter to transport steamers already so many floating lazarettos instead of thanking God that they got no nearer to the slaughter than Tampa or Chattanooga or the encampment at their own state capital; mad at the government, mad at God, because they could not get to the front in time to join the 4,000 corpses that are now being transported from the tropics to the national cemeteries of the United States. Exposure and daring are admirable when duty calls, but keep out of peril when nothing practical and useful is to be gained for your family or your country or your God. I admire the David of my text as he suppresses himself and enters the gate of his castle as much as I admire him when with his four fingers and thumb clutched into the grisly locks of Goliath's head, which he had decapitated, and Saul admiringly asks, "Whose son art thou, young man?" and David, blushing with genuine modesty, responds, "I am the son of thy servant, Jesse, the Bethlehemite."

Help Others.

Now, here is another important point. As there are so many people in the world who amount to little or nothing you ought to augment yourself, and if not able, like David, to be worth 10,000 times more than others, you can command God's re-enforcing grace to make yourself four times or three times or twice as much as some others. Pray twice as much, read twice as much, give twice as much, go to church twice as much. Instead of spending your time finding fault with others, substitute your superior fidelity for their dereliction and default. In any church there are ten members worth all the other thousand. In every great business firm there is one man worth the other three partners. In every legislative hall, state or national, there are five men worth all the other 50 or 100. Take the suggestion of my text and augment yourself. Make your one talent do the work of two, or your five talents do the work of ten, or your ten talents do the work of 20. Multiply your words of encouragement. Multiply the number of boosts you can give to those who are trying to climb. Instead of being one man in a battalion by your faith in God and new consecration be a whole regiment. I like the question of a general of a small army, when some one was counting the number of officers and soldiers of the opposing forces and the small number of their own army, and the general cried out in indignation, "How many do you take me to be?" David was 10,000 men. You ought to be at least two men in this battle for God and righteousness.

The daily papers say that my old friend Jeremiah C. Lanphier of New York is dead at 90 years of age. But they are mistaken. That man can never die. He will live as long as heaven lives. He was the father of vitalized, vivified and arousing prayer meetings. He established the noonday Fulton street prayer meeting, famous throughout Christendom and more honored of God than any devotional meeting since the world began. He introduced the little bell on the prayer meeting table which always tapped when prayers were too prolix or exhortations too long winded. Finding that many business men are from 12 noon to 1 o'clock at comparative leisure, he widely announced that at 12 o'clock of 23d of September, 1857, there would begin a prayer meeting of one hour in the small upper room of the Reformed church, on Fulton street, New York. Lanphier went to that room at 12 o'clock and sat alone. At half past 12 a man entered, and others came until there were six worshippers present. The meeting on the following noonday numbered 20, and the next day 40. Then the meeting became too large for the room, and it was taken into the main auditorium, and for 41 years that service has been the religious center of Christendom. Requests for prayer from all parts of the earth have come there, and the prayers offered been answered sometimes with a resound that was heard throughout Christendom. Hundreds of thousands of souls have stepped into that Bethesda and been healed. That meeting started the great revival of 1858, in which it is estimated 500,000 souls were converted. When Monday morning, Dec. 26, his soul ascended, I think he was met at the gate of heaven by a welcoming throng as mighty as that which has greeted any admitted soul for five centuries. Humble and without any pretension and without anything brilliant in his make up, through faith in God and concentrated prayer he shook the earth and enraptured the heavens. He was worth 10,000, yea 100,000, ordinary Christian workers. Dear old friend Lanphier, how I loved you!

Worth Ten Thousand.

When the consul general came in his official rowboat to take us off our great steamer in the harbor of Constantinople, there were many things I wanted to see in that city of multiform enchantments, but most of all I was anxious to see that architectural charm of the ages, the St. Sophia—once a church, but now a mosque. I do not wonder that when Lamartine saw it he thanked God, and Pouqueville felt himself lifted into some other world. What pillars of porphyry, and walls of malachite, and hovering arches, and galleries which seemed to have alighted from heaven instead of being built up from earth! Mosaics and mother of pearl, and seraphim with wings bediamonded, and dome which scoops the sky and staggers with its height and circumference all those who gaze into it until they can look no more, but each succeeding time you look it seems higher and wider and grander and more supernatural. All the then known world taxed to furnish the splendor of the mosque, and many of the great blocks of stone brought from Alexandria, from Athens, from Thebes, from Baalbec. Marbles veined and starred and striped and interlaced, and the whole building adorned with depths of blue, and whiteness of snow, and glow of fire, until all terms of magnificence are a depreciation, and years after your most extravagant dreams struggle to rebuild it. But, after all, I cannot forget that it is a destroyed church, and that one day that building, which had been dedicated to God, was transferred to that religion which has Mohammed for its prophet. One day, centuries ago, 100,000 people had fled between its walls from the devastating war of the Turk, but all in vain, for Mohammed II, on horseback and followed by infuriate mobs, rode into that church, the hoofs clattering the sacred floors, while the conqueror shouted the victory of superstition and invoked Allah, the god of Arabs and Turks, to accept the stupendous pile in dedication. What a desecration and what worldwide despair! But that which the nations now most need is a hero, a leader, a champion, an incarnated God, to turn all the mosques of superstition and all the basilicas of sin into temples of righteousness, and to rededicate this world, so long given up to wickedness and sin, to the God who in the beginning pronounced it very good. Such a hero, such a leader, such a champion, such an incarnated God we have. He comes riding in upon the white horse of eternal victory, and we can, in more exalted sense than that which the soldiers of David felt, cry out, "Thou art worth 10,000 of us."

Conqueror of Worlds.

The world has had other conquerors, yet they subdued only a nation or a continent, but here is one who is to be a conqueror of hemispheres. Other physicians have cured sufferings, but here is a Doctor who gave sight to those who were born blind and without surgery straightened the crooked back and changed the numbness of paralysis into warm circulation, and who will yet extirpate all the ailments of the world, until the last cry of the world's distress shall change into a song of convalescence. Other kings have ruled wide realms, but here is a King that will yet reign in all the earth as he now reigns in heaven. There have been other historians who told the story of nations.

but here is one who tells us of things that occurred before the world was. There have been other generals who commanded men, but here was a General who commanded seas and hurricanes. There have been other prophets, but here is one out of whose life and career Moses and David and Jeremiah and Ezekiel and Micah and Malachi and Zechariah dipped their inspiration. There have been other merciful hearts all up and down through the ages, but here is one who loves us with an everlasting love and whose mercy antedates the birth of the first mountain, and the wash of the first sea, and the radiance of the first aurora, and the chant of the morning stars at the creation and will continue after the last rock has melted in the final conflagration, and Atlantic and Pacific oceans have rolled out of their beds, and the last night shall have folded up its shadow, and our Lord shall have cried out in the same words that sounded through the night of John's banishment on Patmos, "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last." Then all the mightiest of heaven will gather around the incarnated God of whom I preach, each one saying it for himself, but all together uttering it in mighty chorus, "Thou Son of David, thou Son of Mary, thou Son of God, thou art worth 10,000 of us."

But I must not close without commending to you this wonderful Christ here and now as your pardon for all sin and your solace for all grief and your triumph in all struggle. Down at Norfolk a few days ago, a gentleman was telling me of one of our warships in Cuban waters. Before it left a northern harbor some Christian ladies at much expense and with fine taste bought and furnished for that war vessel a pulpit, from which the chaplain might read the service and preach while on shipboard. The pulpit was made in the shape of a cross and it was beautifully damasked and tasseled. The ship got into the battle before Santiago, and the vessels of the enemy began to sink, and their crew were struggling in the waters, when, from this ship I speak of, the officers and sailors began to throw over chairs, planks, tables, to help the drowning save themselves. After awhile everything movable had been thrown overboard, except the pulpit in the shape of a cross. After objection by some that it was too beautiful and valuable to be cast into the waters, the cross was dropped into the sea. One of the drowning men seized it, but let go, and another seized, and the shout went from many on deck to those struggling in the waves: "Cling to the cross! Cling to the cross!" Several of the drowning took the advice and held on until they were rescued and brought in safety to deck and shore and home, and I say to all the souls today sinking in sin and sorrow, now swept this way and now that: Though the guns of temptation and disaster may splinter and knock from under you all other standing, and everything else goes down, take hold the cross and cling to it for your present and everlasting safety. Cling to the cross, for he who died upon it will save to the uttermost, and he is so good and so lovely and so mighty that he is worth infinitely more than 10,000 of us.

Filipinos Deny Charges of Massacre.

Hong Kong, Jan. 9.—According to the statements of people who have just arrived here from the Island of Balabac, south of the Island of Palawan, there is no truth in the report that the Spaniards there have been massacred by the Filipinos. They say that the story is an invention of the priests to prejudice the Filipino cause.

WORDS OF WARNING.

The Late Colonel Waring on the Reeking Filth of Havana.

NECESSITY FOR PROMPT ACTION.

The Investigator Who Sacrificed His Life While Serving the War Department Completed an Exhaustive Report Before His Death.

Washington, Jan. 9.—The war department, division of customs and insular affairs, makes public a very full synopsis of the late Colonel George A. Waring's report of his visit to Havana under the special instructions of the war department, given him early last autumn, to thoroughly inspect the sanitary condition of the city and to make such recommendations for the future improvement of the town as might be suggested by said inspection. Colonel Waring's investigation was most thorough, and in pursuing it he contracted an illness which resulted in his death a few days after his return to his home in New York.

Colonel Waring says he found the street cleaning without an adequate organization or funds and the markets offensive and dangerously filthy for the distribution of American food with the exception of two, Tacon and Colon markets. He also found the machinery used for sweeping the streets ineffective, the garbage being thrown into the streets in entire disregard of the ordinance requiring it to be set in proper receptacles. The work of the contractor was all done in the latter part of the night, and absolutely in the dark.

Foul pools were found in the streets in which rubbish and filth had been deposited, which the contractor was not required to clean. This filth was turned over to the buzzards. Some of the streets in the compact part of the city are paved with large stone blocks, others with Belgian blocks and the remainder are unpaved. These streets are filled with dirty holes, which in turn are filled up with house garbage. There is practically no sewerage. In many cases households connect their private vaults with loose brick or stone drains just under the pavement along their frontage. These allow the liquid filth to leach out into the ground close to the surface, enabling the householder to get out of much hiring of night scavengers to bail out and carry away accumulations.

Slaughtering pens, while superficially clean, are brutally disgusting while the work is going on. Blood and offal are washed by copious floodings from the water supply into an adjoining creek and harbor, reeking with putrid filth. There is no systematic disposal of garbage and sweepings. It is deposited on the surface in and near the town, where the buzzards feast upon it to their full satisfaction. Dead dogs, cats and chickens are left in the streets until the buzzards pick them to the skeleton. And all this is done under an intense sun. Bad as these conditions are, they are not comparable with the disgusting conditions of the domestic life.

The water supply of Havana, says Colonel Waring, is of the purest and most excellent character. This, with the winds of the gulf, save the city from being absolutely and unqualifiedly bad. The city is a veritable plague spot. Its own people, largely immune though they are to yellow fever, which has prevailed in Havana without interruption for 163 years, fall constant victims to the pernicious malaria and depressing influences to which they are always subjected. It needs only the immigration of fresh material, which the enterprise of an American population is sure to bring in, to create a sacrifice such as has not yet been known. Commerce, says Colonel Waring, will carry the terrible scourge of yellow fever to our shores, until we rise again in a war of humanity and at all costs wipe out an enemy with which no military valor can cope.

Colonel Waring suggests many improvements as absolutely essential to the health of Havana. The cost of these improvements, Colonel Waring declares, will not exceed $10,000,000. It has been estimated, continues Colonel Waring, that single epidemics introduced into the United States from Havana have cost in the Mississippi valley alone $100,000,000 in loss to industries and to commerce, aside from the loss of life, amounting in 1878 and 1879 to 13,911, in addition to the enormous cost of the sickness of those who recovered. Colonel Waring further states that in his judgment the complete execution of the work indicated would completely eradicate yellow fever from Havana for all time, would relieve it from the malaria, which is now so fatal, and would reduce its normal death rate from its present high figure (not far from 50 per thousand) to about 20 per thousand. He says the work must all be done before June 1, 1899. If it is not all done there is reason to fear that yellow fever will be rife in Havana next season, because of the large number of unprotected persons who would go there.

Interested Queen Victoria.

Queen Victoria took a good deal of kindly interest in the recent marriage of the niece of the late John Brown. Miss Brown was one of her majesty's many goddaughters and was named Victoria. As a child she often accompanied her uncle to the castle, and the queen gave her hosts of pretty toys. For a wedding gift her majesty sent her a silver teapot inscribed "V. B., From Victoria, R. I., November 8, 1898," as well as presenting her with a handsome wedding dress and a bridal veil with orange blossoms and lucky white heather.

The Seat of the Soul.

"These are the times that try men's soles," he called to a passing friend. He threw a heavy emphasis on the "soles" and the friend smiled.

INSURGENTS' THREATS.

Prepared to Burn Iloilo at the First American Shot.

ALL THE STREETS BARRICADED.

Colonel Potter, General Otis' Special Envoy, Believes Our Troops Will Establish a Camp on Guimaras Island—Aguinaldo's Proclamation.

Manila, Jan. 9.—Colonel Potter, the special emissary of General Otis between Manila and Iloilo, arrived yesterday afternoon with dispatches from the latter point. The situation when he left there was practically unchanged. The streets were barricaded, and it was reported that the principal buildings had been "kerosened," the insurgents having threatened to destroy the whole business section by fire at the first shot of bombardment. The banks were shipping their treasure to the United States transport Newport and other vessels. The family of the American vice consul has gone on board the Newport.

Colonel Potter reports that President McKinley's proclamation had to be typewritten aboard ship, as the printers on shore declined to work, and when the text of the proclamation was read to them ridiculed the notion that conciliation was possible.

Privates Harry Silvey and Frank Kirkpatrick, of the Sixth United States artillery, while guarding a water boat astern of the Newport, were attacked by the natives of the crew. Private Silvey's skull was fractured fatally and Private Kirkpatrick fell overboard, but escaped with a flesh wound.

The United States gunboat Petrel arrived at Iloilo on Friday, and Colonel Potter reports that the United States troops will probably land on Guimaras Island, about midway between the Island of Panay and the Island of Negros, where a camp will be established.

There is no change in the situation here. On Friday night public demonstrations were held in Pampangas province, in ratification of Aguinaldo's proclamation, and the excitement was intense. In this proclamation Aguinaldo declares that he has natives and foreigners as witnesses that the American forces recognized, not only by acts, that the Filipinos were belligerents, but by publicly saluting the Filipino flag "as it triumphantly sailed these seas before the eyes of all nations." The revolutionary leader then calls upon all his followers to work together with force, and assures them he is convinced that they will obtain absolute independence, and urging them never to return "from the glorious road" on which they have "already so far advanced."

A Diabolical Invention.

Details are given of an invention which fills us with dismay. According to the account furnished by the inventor, his new phonographic voice trumpet magnifies musical and vocal sounds in such volume as to render them unendurable in a room and satisfactorily distinct two miles off. In time he hopes to extend the stentoraphonic capacity of this terrible trumpet to thrice that distance. His first idea was to enable ship captains to converse in a heavy sea fog or at night. Now, however, he has realized that by the aid of his sound magnifier telephones can be made which will allow a political speaker or professional vocalist to entertain three or four audiences seated in halls wide apart at one and the same time.

The power which is thus placed in the hands of those who are fond of hearing their own voices is nothing short of devastating. Imagine again the inflammatory effect of a debate in the French chamber being "switched" on to the working quarters, or of Sir Ellis Ashmead-Bartlett simultaneously ravishing the ears of the house of commons and of a "demonstration" in Hyde park. Seriously, it is impossible to profess enthusiasm for an invention calculated to enhance the dominion of him under which modern dwellers in cities incessantly groan. —London Spectator

Mr. Dingley Somewhat Better.

Washington, Jan. 9.—The reports from Representative Dingley's bedside are a trifle more encouraging, and his family believe there is still a chance for him to rally. Extreme weakness and the poison in his system, as a result of his sickness, are the principal symptoms which the physicians now have to combat, which in a man of Mr. Dingley's age make the outcome uncertain. The nervousness and delirium have partially subsided, and the periods of consciousness are much more frequent. Mr. Dingley's two sons have arrived from Kalamazoo, Mich., but have not yet been permitted to see him.

Delaware Deadlock Ended.

Dover, Del., Jan. 7.—The deadlock which had been hanging in the Delaware house of representatives since Tuesday was broken yesterday, after 91 ballots had been taken, by electing Theodore F. Clark, of Delaware City, as speaker. Benjamin F. Sheppard, of New Castle county, was elected clerk on the first ballot. Andrew Esham was elected sergeant-at-arms on the fifth ballot. Rev. Joseph Brown Turner (Presbyterian) was elected chaplain on the fourth ballot.

An Expensive French Soldier.

It is open to question whether France has had her money's worth out of Private Petit, who was recently serving in the One Hundred and Fifty-eighth infantry regiment at Lyons. Petit was born in the republic of Paraguay, of French parents, who neglected to make the necessary declaration at the consulate. Ignorant of this, he came to France and was promptly arrested as a deserter and sentenced to a term of imprisonment. When this was over, he did his three years' service, at the expiration of which he demanded, in accordance with the law, his expenses for his journey home. Attempts were made to persuade him that France was a more desirable country to reside in than Paraguay, but he refused to be convinced and insisted on the sum to which he was entitled being paid him. Expenses being allowed at the rate of so much per kilometer, Petit's little bill came to 4,125 francs. It may be doubted if his services to his country were worth this amount. —Paris Letter.

SENATE HAS TREATY.

The Peace of Paris Sent In For Ratification.

VOLUMINOUS CORRESPONDENCE.

It Shows That Our Consuls Encouraged the Insurgents in the Belief That Our Government Would Aid Them in Establishing Their Independence.

Washington, Jan. 6.—The peacetreaty of Paris was transmitted to the senate at yesterday's executive session, with the following brief message from the president:

"I transmit herewith, with a view to its ratification, a treaty of peace between the United States and Spain signed at the city of Paris on Dec. 10, 1898, together with the protocols and papers indicated in the list accompanying the report of the secretary of state."

Accompanying the treaty, all the points of which have been already published, is a great mass of correspondence, making a printed volume of 675 pages. This includes among other things all of the credentials of the American commissioners to Paris and the protocols, which are the records of the daily proceedings of the commissioners that lead up to the final treaty of peace. There is also included all the correspondence that passed between the French embassy here and the department of state.

There is included all of the Philippines correspondence that passed between the department of state and the United States consuls at Manila, Hong Kong and Singapore. Consul Williams, at Manila, before the actual outbreak of war, reported a series of most horrible outrages by the Spaniards upon the Filipinos. He declared that 5 per cent of the latter are loyal to Spain.

Consul Williams, at Hong Kong on Nov. 3, telegraphed that General Agoncillo was coming to Washington. He said: "He has power to make treaties with foreign governments, and has proposed an offensive and defensive alliance with the United States." Agoncillo asked for arms to aid the rebellion. Acting Secretary Cridler, on Dec. 15, replied, telling Wildman to advise Agoncillo that the United States does not negotiate treaties, and it is not possible to forward arms. A long letter of date of July 18 from Consul Wildman defends Agoncillo as a man who has been systematically blackened. Says he: "According to his own statement, he has been approached by Spain and Germany, and has tempting offers from the Catholic church."

April 28 Consul Pratt telegraphed from Singapore: "Aguinaldo gone my instance Hong Kong arrange with Dewey co-operation insurgents Manila."

June 20 Secretary Day telegraphed Pratt: "Avoid any negotiations with Philippine insurgents."

Pratt replied that he had no intentions of negotiating. Says he: "Left that to Dewey, who desires Aguinaldo to come."

All of the statements made by General Merritt before the American commission at Paris appear in the document. In substance he said the insurgents would fight if the attempt was made to surrender Luzon to Spain. Spain could not produce the islands unaided. Asked whether the insurgents were capable of government he replied that it would take time; they would have to be educated up to it. Senator Frye asked if the natives would enlist under the American flag if Aguinaldo could be given a command, and Merritt replied in the affirmative to both questions. Further he said that Major Bell's report showed that the insurgents had 39,500 stand of arms. Aguinaldo had $300,000 in bank in Hong Kong and $220,000 of public funds in Bacoor. Major Bell expressed the opinion that if the United States should govern the islands for a year Aguinaldo would have no army left.

General Greene's statement is also produced. He said there were 13,000 Spanish prisoners in the Philippines, including 400 officers, with 22,000 arms and 22,000,000 rounds of ammunition. He described Aguinaldo's character, and said much tact would be required in dealing with Aguinaldo. In his opinion that chieftain did not command the support of a large body of Filipinos. Then it must be remembered that the insurgents were all Tagalos, only one of the 30 races in the Philippines. At the time he spoke none of the 2,000,000 Visayas, a people of equal abilities, had taken any part. He was asked what chance there would be for native government, to which he replied: "No native government can maintain itself without the active support of a strong foreign government."

The Union Central Life Insurance Co., of Cincinnati, is now thirty-one years old, and has $20,000,000 assets, with a surplus of $3,000,000. The company is now doubling in size every five years, and the insurance reports show that it makes the highest interest rate and lowest death rate for its policy holders of all the old line companies; hence it is one of the best managed financial institutions in this country to-day, and can but make the best returns to policy holders. Its size, location, management make it an ideal company for investment, besides furnishing the very best protection to the loved ones in the event that death overtakes you early, or, as a saving to come to you in your old age, should an All-Wise Providence spare you that long.

To-day is the time to insure. Tomorrow may never come. Death may overtake you, bad health may claim you as a victim at any moment; hence, do not put off such an important step, but take your insurance right away.

Call or write to R. S. Tuck, General Agent, Chamber of Commerce Building, Richmond, Va., at once, and learn of the matchless advantages of the Union Central and investigate the new guaranty policy they write, which is unquestionably the most model policy contract issued by any company, and if you need any assistance the company will always help you in carrying it. R. L. CLIBORNE, Local Agent, Blackstone, Va.

RECOMMENDATION: The editor of the Recorder believes the Union Central to be one of the best companies in the country, and is as well pleased with his policy as with the one he holds in the Equitable. Northwestern Insurance Co., Ltd.

DIXIE

CHICKEN AND HOG POWDER.

Farmers can cure the sick ones and prevent the well animals from taking the disease by giving freely by directions found on each package of the Dixie Chicken and Hog Powder. Don't delay giving this valuable Powder until your Hogs are sick, but as soon as the Cholera appears in your neighborhood begin at once to give it as a preventive.

The "Dixie Chicken and Hog Powder" is equally as good for Cholera in Fowls, and the careful housewife will not wait until the disease has made havoc in her flock, but upon the first symptoms she will give at once and thus prevent the spread of the disease to the whole flock.

Hens will lay more and look better, and become perfectly healthy if given "Dixie Chicken and Hog Powder." It is well to give to the young chicks, in corn meal dough, a little "Dixie Chicken and Hog Powder" twice a week, and thus prevent disease and make them healthy and strong.

Price, 25 cents a package; $2.50 per dozen.

GENERAL SOUTHERN NEWS.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 4.—News is received from Lexington that the superintendent of the Virginia Military Institute yesterday issued an order dismissing the entire first class of that institution, consisting of 35 cadets. The young men dismissed represent 12 states, and their offense was a breach of discipline committed New Year's eve in the face of special warning.

Irvington, Va., Jan. 3.—Mrs. Sarah Norris, an aged white lady, living near Millenbeck, committed suicide Saturday by drowning in the western branch of the Corrotoman river. No cause is assigned. Her daughter, who was living near her, saw her rush out of the house and jump into the river. The body was recovered before death, but the services of two physicians failed to resuscitate it.

Charlottesville, Jan. 4.—Some weeks ago a young farmer named Vanosdoll was brutally assaulted in his bed and robbed of a small sum of money. Frank Hargrove, colored, who lived in the neighborhood, was charged with the crime, and on the trial of the case, which was concluded this morning, Vanosdoll testified that Hargrove was his assailant. As the evidence, however, proved an alibi, the prisoner was acquitted.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 5.—Governor Tyler is much interested in the fate of the 35 students dismissed from the Virginia military institute, at Lexington. While he is a firm believer in discipline, the executive hopes the board will reinstate the dismissed students. These young men, Governor Tyler thinks, have been taught a lesson of obedience. If they will apologize and promise to do better the board, the governor is inclined to believe, will reinstate them.

Louisville, Ky., Jan. 3.—The little daughter of John Cardwel, of New Albany, has received the following characteristic letter from Admiral Dewey: "My Dear Little Friend: I have received and enjoyed your letter so much. I am very much obliged to you for your picture, and it is the very nicest present you could have sent me. I am very sorry that I have nothing to send you, for I would like to very much. So many people have already asked me for buttons and pictures that I have a long time ago given them all away. I don't have enough buttons left now even to button my coat."

Winchester, Va., Jan. 5.—The city of Winchester has just received another large instalment of the specific bequest of the will of the late Judge John Handley, of Scranton, Pa. The amount already received is $60,000, which was promptly invested in Virginia bonds. One hundred and ninety thousand dollars more will likely be received during the next few months, and this amount will also be invested for the city's benefit. When the $250,000 above named shall have accumulated a like amount, then the $500,000 will be used for the erection of industrial schools and a public library in this city.

Savannah, Ga., Jan. 9.—A severe cyclone is reported to have passed over a section of Liberty county, some 20 miles south of this city, Saturday afternoon. The wind attained a velocity of not less than 75 to 80 miles an hour. At Johnston Station, between here and Waycross, it is estimated the wind blew 90 miles an hour for ten minutes. In the village considerable damage was done. The storm swept through a turpentine country, and the trees were leveled in the path of the wind for miles. The path, however, was fortunately narrow, being not more than one or two hundred yards wide.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 7.—Rev. Dr. Moses D. Hoge, pastor of the Second Presbyterian church, died yesterday, aged 81 years. He was one of the best known citizens of Richmond, and his death is universally mourned. The recognized approach of death was unable to rob him of the measure of dignity that characterized his life. Two weeks or more ago he himself dictated a notice for use in the local papers concerning his condition, which forecast his death. He not only set his own house in order for the grim visitor, but consulted the officers of his church as to his successor, and calmly awaited the inevitable.

Huntington, W. Va., Jan. 3.—On Sunday night last William Robinson, a teamster of this place, had trouble with his 13-year-old son, and dealt him several blows with a cane. The lad finally escaped from his father's wrath, and fearing to return home climbed into a barn loft to sleep for the night. Yesterday morning the lad's mother found him in an unconscious condition, he being almost frozen to death. Physicians were summoned, but he did not regain consciousness until late this afternoon, and his recovery is yet extremely doubtful. Particulars of the occurrence did not become known until tonight, and indignation is great among to resuscitate her.

Alexandria, Va., Jan. 5.—The United States court, Judge Waddell, had an interesting case today. Edward M. Lewis, a boy 15 years old, neat, handsome and aristocratic looking, and nicely dressed, was at the bar of the court charged with stealing a letter from the Fredicksburg postoffice. The youth is of excellent family. The case was mainly heard on the statement of the accused, and the jury, after 20 minutes' absence, returned a verdict of guilty on two of the counts of the indictment. The lad had nothing to say why sentence should not be pronounced. He was sentenced to the reform school of the District of Columbia for two years.

Charleston, W. Va., Jan. 9.—The legislature assembles on Wednesday, and party leaders are already here for the preliminary work in the organization of that body. Although the balloting for a successor to Senator Faulkner does not begin till Monday, Jan. 23, the most important action will be taken within the next three days. The legislature is so close politically that its control will depend upon its organization, as that will carry with it the probable settlement of contested seats. Among these contests are two for the seats of Republican members who served in the army during the Spanish war. Although they did not resign, the Democrats elected members in their places and have entered proceedings in the courts to secure the seats.

CHAPTER 1.

1 The genealogy of Jesus Christ: 13 Mary's miraculous conception; Jesus born: 21, 23 his names.

1 Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham.

2 Abraham begat Isaac; and Isaac begat Jacob; and Jacob begat Judah and his brethren;

3 And Judah begat Phares and Zarah of Thamar; and Phares begat Esrom;

4 And Esrom begat Arah;

5 And Arah begat Amminadab; and Amminadab begat Nahshon; and Nahshon begat Salmon;

6 And Salmon begat Booz of Rahab; and Booz begat Obed of Ruth; and Obed begat Jesse;

7 And Jesse begat David the king; and David the king begat Solomon of her that had been the wife of Uriah;

8 And Solomon begat Roboam; and Roboam begat Abiam; and Abiam begat Asa;

9 And Asa begat Josaphat; and Josaphat begat Joram; and Joram begat Ozias;

10 And Ozias begat Joash; and Joash begat Jeroboam; and Jeroboam begat Zedekiah; and Zedekiah begat Shallum;

11 And Shallum begat Sennacherib; and Sennacherib begat Manasse; and Manasse begat Amon; and Amon begat Josiah;

12 And Josiah begat Jechonias and his brethren, about the time they were carried away to Babylon;

13 And after they were brought to Babylon, Jechonias the king begat Salathiel; and Salathiel begat Zorobabel;

14 And Zorobabel begat Abiud; and Abiud begat Eliakim; and Eliakim begat Azor;

15 And Azor begat Sadoc; and Sadoc begat Achim; and Achim begat Eliud;

16 And Eliud begat Eleazar; and Eleazar begat Matthan; and Matthan begat Jacob;

17 And Jacob begat Joseph the husband of Mary, of whom was born Jesus, who is called Christ.

18 So all the generations from Abraham to David are fourteen generations; and from David until the carrying away into Babylon are fourteen generations; and from the carrying away into Babylon unto Christ are fourteen generations.

19 Now the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise: When as his mother

Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost.

19 Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily.

20 But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost.

21 And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins.

22 Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying,

23 Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us.

24 Then Joseph being raised from sleep did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife:

25 And knew her not till she had brought forth her firstborn son: and he called his name JESUS.

CHAPTER 2.

1 Wise men enquire after Christ. 13 Joseph fleeth into Egypt. 16 Herod slayeth the children: 19 Christ brought out of Egypt.

NOW when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judaea in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem,

2 Saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him.

3 When Herod the king had heard these things, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him.

4 And when he had gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Christ should be born.

5 And they said unto him, In Bethlehem of Judaea: for thus it is written by the prophet,

6 And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda: for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Israel.

7 Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, enquired of them diligently what time the star appeared.

8 And he sent them to Bethlehem, and

FOR

Parents and Pastors.

"It is not enough to educate. We must put an idea into our education if it is to be saved. That idea is the Son of God."—Dr. J. C. Kilgo in address before Virginia Conference.

- (1) Fatally Defective! What? All education that lacks the thought quoted above as its corner stone.
- (2) You desire your daughter to become a well educated woman. But do you not desire most of all that she shall be a well educated CHRISTIAN woman?
- (3) The spiritual character of the school which your daughter attends will greatly influence her work in this world and her location in the world to come.
- (4) As a christian man, do you not believe that God expects you to use the very best care in this important matter, and will hold you responsible for the selection you make? Have you a right to place her in any school which does not say with emphasis that growth in grace is above social polish and mere intellectual culture?
- (5) Can you conscientiously place her in a State school, which from its very nature ignores religious training, even if by so doing you should save $20 a year? If you can raise $122 to develop her intellect can you not raise $20 more to develop her soul at the same time?
- (6) The Methodist Church in the Virginia Conference has now a system of schools to which parents can safely entrust their children, "Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." They belong absolutely to the Church. They have been built solely to meet the needs of our people. They are not private schools in any sense of the word. They do not have that serious defect of private schools—LACK OF PERMANENCY. They do not die or pass into the hands of the State or of other parties when the owner dies, or gets tired of teaching, or fails to make a success of his work. In a nut-shell, they were, not established in order to make a fortune or as a means of making a living. They have only one aim—THOROUGH INSTRUCTION UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.
- (7) This system was established for your children. Will you give them the benefit of it? The Randolph-Macon Woman's College has been established for the higher education of women.

The Blackstone Female Institute

Is one of the two schools in the Conference for younger girls which belongs ABSOLUTELY to the Church. Its success has been great from the start. Of it the Board of Education of the Annual Conference spoke as follows:

"The Blackstone Institute is owned entirely by our Church. It is not in any sense a private corporation or stock company, but stands in the same relation to the Church as the Randolph-Macon system. While not in the Randolph-Macon system, the course of study is correlated with the Woman's College, and stands related to the latter as the academies to the college at Ashland. The Institute is in a most prosperous condition, having now, at the beginning of its fourth year, a patronage of 170. It is thoroughly Methodist in ownership and spirit, every officer and teacher being an active member of our Church."

At a meeting of the Trustees of Randolph-Macon College, held June 17, 1896, the following resolution was adopted—viz:

"RESOLVED, That next to the institutions under our special care, we feel deepest interest in the Blackstone Female Institute, under the superintendency of Rev. James Cannon, Jr., which is owned entirely by our Church; and that we regard it and commend it to our people as holding a tributary relation to our Woman's College at Lynchburg, akin to that of our Academies to our College at Ashland."

Send Your Daughter to a Christian School!

THREE-FOLD WORK OF THE INSTITUTE.

- (1.) Gives Diploma of Graduation to all who complete the work of the Institute
- (2.) Prepares for the Randolph-Macon Woman's College those desiring to take the higher work of that institution,
- (3.) Teachers' course—giving special training to those desiring to fit themselves to teach either in private or public schools.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

To be possessed by the spirit of love is to be pure in heart, and purity of heart brings the beatific vision of God himself.—Rev. George W. Stone, Unitarian, Kansas City.

Whom God Likes.

God likes the one who changes from his old views and narrow views to a newer and grander view of God, man and life.—Rev. W. W. West, Baptist, Pittsburgh.

Perfect Manhood.

If there is desired a Christian manhood—and that alone is perfect manhood—there must be implicit faith in the Son of God, through whom alone human perfection is attainable.—Rev. F. G. Coxson, Methodist, Philadelphia.

Basis of Matrimony.

The basis of matrimony is, first, then, a community of feeling or love; secondly, a community of sentiment or religion, and, thirdly, a community of thought or reverence.—Rev. J. Leonard Levy, Rabbi, Philadelphia.

Mission of Americans.

With other Christian nations our mission is to open the world to the ingress of the gospel, which has made us free and has exalted us to a first place among the sisterhood of nations.—Rev. J. G. Butler, Lutheran, Washington.

Man and His Victories.

Man is constructed almost without limitations, and each victory he acquires through the best use of his remarkable God given powers is an accomplishment in testimony of his Maker.—Rev. A. J. Van Cleft, Methodist, Scranton, Pa.

Application of the Gospel.

Today while we apply the principles of the gospel not less than formerly to the salvation of the individual we are yet turning our thoughts more and more to the gospel's application to society.—Rev. J. G. Butler, Lutheran, Washington.

True Preacher's Mission.

The mission of the true preacher is to build up and develop believers in the deep things of the gospel. This is the Pauline idea, and on this stands every divinely equipped proclaimer of the Word.—Rev. Edward McHugh, Methodist, Cincinnati.

Gospel of Prospection.

Jesus taught a gospel not of introspection, but of prospection. Look out, look forward, look up, behold the future. His method was to fix the human eye on high ideals, to win man to a higher life by showing him the charm and beauty of that life.—Rev. Dr. Bristol, Methodist, Washington.

Our Own Development.

We have got to develop our home markets. We have got to raise the standard of living among our own people so as to increase our production and consumption. We cannot rule subject races because we have not yet mastered the art of ruling ourselves.—Professor Felix Adler, Ethical Culture, New York.

God's Care For Us.

We are not alone in our most difficult times. God cares for us individually. By the fine inspiration of his presence in our lives we are able to withstand temptation, to endure delay in good enterprises, to stand steady in the tide of sorrow and to attain a disciplined character.—Rev. C. E. St. John, Unitarian, Pittsburgh.

Wisdom of God.

God's wisdom is displayed in nature. This wisdom appears in the sun diffusing light and heat, atmosphere sustaining life. In "stars forever singing as they shine the band that made us is divine." But the manifold wisdom of God is seen only in redemption. In the incarnation life, death, resurrection and ascension of Jesus it is unfolded.—Rev. Dr. L. Y. Graham, Reformed, Philadelphia.

God Is Always Near.

If you would be at peace, if you would love this beautiful world and would make the most out of its discipline, if you would look forward with something like happy anticipation to the morning after death, because you and your dear ones will meet again, you must think of God as always near, always helpful and always surrounding you with infinite love and sympathy.—Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

Heroic Ideal For Our Age.

The only wise, noble, heroic thing for our age is to go forth to make real the higher moral ideals; to think justice until justice becomes the life of man, the life of the people, the life of labor, business, the glory, the honor of government. Thus the dualism will be gone. Man will stand here and justice stand far off out there. Man and justice will be one in the jury of a great brotherhood of love on earth.—Dr. H. W. Thomas, People's Church, Chicago.

Preparations For a Heavenly Life.

The best way to fit men for a perfect life in heaven is to fit them first for life here. The church is concerned with everything on earth that pertains to man's mental, moral and physical self, just as much as with the spiritual. If the church is willing to deem Christianity as something narrower than philanthropy, it will occupy a very little space in the world's future. It is the duty of the church to instruct conscience; therefore the sphere of the church is as broad as life itself.—Dr. Josiah Strong, Broadway Tabernacle, New York.

Our Duty Toward Others.

It is our duty to look after the interests of the working people. Those who are working over hours or are underpaid need our aid in order that their wrongs may be righted. The system of working too many hours per day is bad for the people who are overworked, and it also operates as an injustice to other persons who are idle and need employment. The work should be more evenly distributed in order that the welfare of the whole community may be subserved. It is only in making others happy that we can have real happiness for ourselves.—Rev. Dr. John P. Peters, Episcopal, New York.

MAGDALENA—A TRUE INCIDENT.

(By Earl Williams, M. D.)

In the temple of the Master
Spoke, with burning words, the pastor,
Of the sinner's awful danger and of Jesus' love and power.
Soon in sorrow at the altar
Many souls were seen to falter
As they felt the gracious presence of the Spirit in that hour.

One among the "mourners" kneeling,
Trembled with excess of feeling;
All her soul, so guilty, moaning, crying for the cleansing blood.
She was young and dowered with beauty;
But, from paths of right and duty
She had wandered; sin had swept her in the torrent of its flood.

As she kneels, her tears fast falling,
Lo! a voice comes, sweetly calling:
"I forgive thee freely, fully; go in peace, and sin no more."
In new life, spotless, holy,
Came she pleading, meek and lowly.
For communion with the blood-washed to the open, thronged church door.

But, her plea most coldly spurning,
With contemptuous anger burning,
Pharisaic, heartless members barred the way lest she come in.
Then she bows her head in sadness;
In her heart the new-found gladness.
Dies in shame, forlorn, rejected; must she turn once more to sin?

Cursed be the Godless people
That, beneath the sky-tossed steeple, Mock the Master with their soulless, selfish ministry of pride;
Blood-red stains are on their fingers,
And the wrath of God but lingers
For such hypocritic worship, where the Christ is crucified.

In the article in last week's Recorder on the Presiding Eldership, the writer wrote "beloveds," and not "blonds," as it appeared in the Recorder.

CHURCH STATISTICS.

In accordance with our usual custom, we copy from the Independent the general summary of statistics of the churches. These give the gains for the denominations without showing the gain or losses of the various branches of the same denomination. The greatest gain, as usual, is that of the Roman Catholic Church—219,791—but this is to be contrasted not with any single Protestant denomination, but with all the Protestant churches, the gain in which is 633,000.

The gain in all the churches reaches 862,300, and the total number of Church members is 27,714,523, of which the Romanists have between one-third and one-fourth, the Methodists between one-fourth and one-fifth, and the Baptists about one-seventh. The two great Protestant denominations, Baptists and Methodists, make up a total of about 10,250,000, or somewhat over one-half of all the Protestants in the United States.

SOUTHERN METHODISM.

Methodism still leads Protestant churches in numbers and in gains, but to our sorrow, our own denomination has no part in this triumph. Southern Methodism for the first time in years is reported as not only not swelling the grand total of gains, but as diminishing it by nearly 25,000. For five years this editor has been publishing this summary, and never before has he been obliged to look with sorrow at the figures of his own Church. But this time there is not only sorrow, but there is shame. The letter written for the Independent by the Rev. Dr. Hoss, as our representative, is given on another page. In that letter he gives the matter of the "war claim" as the reason for our failure to reap our usual harvest of souls. He says: "The hurt and damage have been immense. It is certain that an honorable settlement will be reached sooner or later, but nothing can cure all the ill consequences from which we have already suffered." Those who have been inclined to make light of this matter, and who have desired to hush it up, must by this time see the folly of such conduct.

"Be sure your sin will find you out," said the leader of Israel, and his word has been true for all the ages. Southern Methodism has sinned officially, through its Book Committee and book agents, and defeat has followed. God will not honor a tainted Church. Although the great bulk of the Church is pure, and the great Conferences have repudiated the sin, yet the Church is dishonored and weak, so long as these repudiated leaders hold up their shameless heads, and dare to call themselves representatives of the Church. Dr. Hoss is "certain" that an honorable settlement will be effected sooner or later."

It is greatly to be desired, but many have come to believe that an "honorable settlement," as defined by Dr. Hoss, will not restore the honor of our Church before the world and before Almighty God. The only "honorable" settlement of this matter is that the present representatives be retired, both Book Committee and agents. The great bulk of our people wonder why the bishops sit so quietly, with folded hands, and allow the present disgraceful situation to continue. Book Committee and book agents know that they no longer represent the Church, but they do not retire. What is to be done?

The bishops should call a meeting of the Book Committee and demand their resignations, one by one. As each one is retired let a new man be nominated and elected, and thus a new committee be formed. Then let the new committee call for the retirement of the agents, and if the agents will not retire, let them be put on trial for their official administration, and be suspended from office and new agents appointed. If, however, the Book Committee will not resign at the request of the bishops, then let a General Conference be called, and the whole matter brought before that body and judgment be rendered.

Until every possible effort is put forth to cut off the official heads of these "false guides" (which strained at a goat and swallowed a camel, as, for example, the trial of Dr. Steel and the defence of Barbee & Smith), the Church is responsible for them; and just now the responsibility is resting squarely on the shoulders of the bishops. The Church is waiting to see what they will do. The time has come when they must act. They cannot shirk it. NOT TO ACT IS, IN THIS CASE, TO ACT. Non-action will line them up side by side with the disgraced representatives of the Church. It is, indeed, a matter of supreme importance that the Bishops do not waver in this matter. The loyalty of our people has been put to a severe strain by the strenuous efforts of OFFICIALISM to palliate and condone the violation of God's law by some of the officials. The people are beginning to ask, with bated breath as yet, "Are the bishops going to purge the Church from this foul public sin, or are they also going to adopt the 'hush' policy? Are they going to stand by and protect officialism, or will they stand by the high and lofty standard of morality taught in God's law?" This is the question to-day. To do nothing is to defend Barbee & Smith and the Book Committee. To do nothing is to invite a repetition of the past disgraceful year. Church statistics cannot always be relied upon, but the lesson from the statistics of the past year seems to be plain.

THE CHURCH MUST BE ABOVE SUSPICION OF WRONGDOING. If not, she has no power with the sinful world. God will not live in and work through an impure Church. If all other action and resolutions have failed, will not this bring the Book Committee and book agents to their senses?

Does not this decrease in the harvest of souls appall them? Do they not yet realize how they and their conduct stand in the pulpit with every preacher in Southern Methodism, and weakens every word he utters, as he tries to denounce sin and to call sinners to repentance? It has the same effect that a presiding elder's travelling on Sunday trains has upon the preaching of the pastor on Sabbath observance. The pastor may demonstrate his point, but the presiding elder steps off the Sunday train and preaches at night, and those who had been convicted of breaking the fourth commandment in the morning at once comfort themselves by the thought that the presiding elder must be a good man and understand the Bible, and that if the preachers disagree it cannot be very sinful. So all our preaching on honesty and fair dealing in business is neutralized by the conduct of our doctors of divinity, book agents, etc.

May the Great Head of the Church relieve us in some way and bring us out of this disgrace! Certainly there are thousands of our preachers and laymen who cannot pass the matter off in the easy style of Dr. Hoss in his letter, given later on, and say: "On the whole, we are in good position, thankful for God's guidance in past years, and trusting Him for time to come." It is placidity of this sort in OFFICIAL circles which renders our situation so dangerous and disgraceful.

In addition to the statistics published on another page, the letters to the Independent by the representatives of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the Salvation Army, and the American Volunteers are given as likely to be of interest to our readers.

The following letters are from the Independent:

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

(By Bishop John F. Hurst, D. D., LL. D.)

The Methodist Episcopal Church, as a distinct ecclesiastical organism, is one hundred and fourteen years old; as an integral part of the revival of evangelical Christianity known as Wesleyanism or Methodism, it is in its one hundred and fifty-ninth year, and as a spiritual succession of primitive Christianity, it is rounding out its nineteenth century.

The year now closing has been one of steady and quiet but energetic activity in all the various departments and channels through which the diversified beneficence of the large body is carried on. The operations of the Missionary Society, both in the home and foreign fields, have been unusually productive of spiritual results. This has been notably true in the North India field, where the conversions have been numbered by the thousands, and where the call for teachers and helpers is most urgent to take care of the multitudes of young but genuine disciples. The interest of the home Church in this world-wide work is most beautifully evidenced by the extinguishment of the debt of $186,000 which rested upon the Missionary Society on November 1, 1897. This great achievement has been made under the pressure of the great financial stress which has prevailed for the past four years; and side by side with this annihilation of the debt, a substantial increase has been made to the regular income over that of a year ago. The annual meeting of the General Missionary Committee, recently held in Providence, was one of profound interest and far-reaching issues. Actual operations have been begun in Alaska under the leadership of the Rev. C. J. Larsen, provision has been made for beginning work in Porto Rico, and tentative efforts are now being directed to the opening of missions in the Philippine Islands.

The successful operations of the Church Extension Society have continued, and 406 churches have been aided either by gift or loan, or by both, during the past year. This makes a total of 10,888 churches which have been helped during the last thirty-three years.

Early in the month of January a most significant event was the meeting in Washington, D. C., of the Joint Commission on Federation, from the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The harmonious and cordial sessions resulted in several unanimous recommendations to the General Conferences of their respective bodies. These were, in brief: The preparation of a common catechism, hymn-book, and order of public worship; the recognition and regulation of the International Epworth League conventions; the joint administration of publishing interests in China and Japan; the co-operative administration of foreign missions; that new work be not organized by either Church where the other is established and supplying the needs of the people without the consent of the bishop having jurisdiction, and co-operation in the work of higher education, especially during the years 1900 and 1901, and the commendation of the American University at Washington, D. C., for special contributions during those years.

Among movements affecting the polity of the Church, the most important and significant is the pronounced vote, about four to one, among the ministers in favor of the constitutional change proposed by the Rock River Conference, making the numerical representation of the laity equal to that of the ministry in the General Conference. The change will probably go into effect at the next session of that legislative body of May, 1900, which, by the recent action of the special commission on location, will be held in Chicago.

The year has been marked by the initial steps taken by many of the Annual Conferences toward some monumental action at the turn of the centuries, and by the Board of Bishops, who at their recent meeting in Springfield, Mass., gave the movement both a new momentum and a very appropriate name—the Twentieth Century Thank Offering. In an appeal to the members and friends of the Church, the bishops call for a new consecration of "body, soul, and substance to Him who loved us and gave Himself for us," and that in addition to all ordinary gifts the sum of $20,000,000 be contributed within three years from January 1, 1899—$10,000,000 of which should be given for our educational institutions, and $10,000,000 for charitable institutions and the payment of debts on Church property. Each contributor is left free to designate to which object his special gift shall be applied, and all undesignated gifts are to be held in trust by the agents of the book concern and be appropriated by the General Conference of 1900 for the aid of educational institutions. A General Executive Commission of seven bishops, eight ministers, and fifteen laymen was appointed to take charge of and to give direction to this extraordinary enterprise. Large and abundant fruit may be expected from this general movement, which has already awakened universal interest.

Washington, D. C.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

(By the Rev. E. E. Hoss, LL. D., Editor of the Christian Advocate.)

The year just closing is one that will not speedily be forgotten among Southern Methodists. It opened with very bright prospects. Writing to another journal at that time, I said: "There is not a fleck of cloud upon our sky." The expectation was general that we should witness a decided forward movement in all the forms of Christian enterprise. Up to the meeting of the General Conference in May, nothing had been done to disappoint that expectation. From all quarters of the Church came tidings of good cheer. The delegates assembled in the historic city of Baltimore under the most encouraging auspices, and transacted their business with scarcely any friction.

Before adjournment, however, the air began to be filled with rumors concerning the methods employed to collect the long-standing claim of $288,000 against the government for the occupancy, use, and damage of our publishing house during the civil war. Ever since that date this matter has been a burning issue among us, distracting and diverting the minds of ministers and laymen from all other concerns. The hurt and damage have been immense. It is certain that an honorable settlement will be reached sooner or later, but nothing can cure all the ill consequences from which we have already suffered.

In spite of such untoward facts, there have been large gains in many of the Annual Conferences, more than enough to offset the losses in other sections, but not enough to furnish a basis for jubilation. The old missionary debt of $148,000 has been entirely wiped out without diminishing the regular collections. Within the past few years there has been a most remarkable growth of the missionary spirit among us. Bishop Warren A. Chandler and Dr. Walter R. Lambuth, the senior secretary of our Board of Missions, have just returned from a tour of inspection in Cuba, and are making a loud call for funds to open the work on a large scale in that island. We have a number of trained and capable Cubans who have been doing mission work for several years among their fellow patriots at Tampa and Key West. Chief of these is the Rev. H. B. Someillan. He and others will doubtless be sent forward at a very early day as a sort of advance guard of the coming hosts.

Our educational work is prospering. Trinity College, North Carolina, has received another gift of $100,000 from Mr. Washington Duke, making in all $850,000 that he has given to that institution. The Southwestern University at Georgetown, Texas, is putting up a magnificent building of white stone, at a cost of $50,000 or $75,000. A great many minor improvements are noted. On the whole, we are in good position, thankful for God's guidance in past years, and trusting Him for time to come.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

(By Commander Fred. Booth Tucker.)

The Salvation Army in the United States has now 735 corps or stations, where daily meetings are conducted under the management of 2,800 officers, with an unpaid force of more than 20,000 active workers, and a regular body of worshipers, numbering about 375,000, while it is calculated that every week not less than one and a half million persons are directly reached by the indoor services, and at least twice that number by the meetings held in the open air.

The membership and congregations of the Salvation Army consist almost entirely of those who do not attend any other place of worship, but special demonstrations are continually conducted, illustrating the work of the Army, when persons of every denomination attend the meetings and join in supporting the work.

The last year has been one of rapid and substantial advance. Fifty thousand persons have publicly professed conversion, many most notorious characters being included. Especially marked has been the extension of the social relief operations among the poorest of the poor. A year ago there were 81 institutions of this character; there are now 120. The officers and employees in charge of the same have increased from 250 to 400, while the actual accommodation has been multiplied from a capacity of 3,800 to over 6,000 nightly.

The occupants have contributed in cash about $100,000 during the year toward the expenses.

The most important departure in this direction has been the establishment of three farm colonies, for the removal of the surplus population of the great cities to small homestead farms, of which they shall ultimately become the owners. The colonies are in California, Colorado, and Ohio. At an outlay of $43,000, fifty cottages have been built, in addition to barns, out-houses, stores, etc. Some fifty families, consisting of about two hundred men, women, and children, have been located; 1,400 acres of land have been obtained on favorable terms, and the prospects before these colonies are of the most encouraging character. It has been substantially proven that the people are willing to go, willing to stay, willing to work, and willing to pay. A committee of business gentlemen who have investigated the working of the plan have given it cordial support.

During the progress of the recent war active work was carried on among the soldiers and sailors in the army and navy; tents were erected and regular services conducted at Camp Alger, Tampa, and Chattanooga, while a representative of the Salvation Army sailed with the forces to Manila.

The literature of the Salvation Army in the United States has a paid circulation of about one hundred and five

SMITH'S DICTIONARY

—OF THE—

BIBLE,

Comprising its Antiquities, Biography
Geography and Natural History.

Edited by WM. SMITH, LL. D.,
Classical Examiner of University of London.

By a special arrangement with the publishers, we will send the Southern Methodist Recorder for one year and Smith's Bible Dictionary for $2.00. Every family should have a copy of this great work. For description, see below:

The simple explanation of this work, unlike the expositions of a commentary, admit of no denominational or sectarian coloring, and it is therefore equally valuable to Bible readers of every diversity of belief.

This is, undoubtedly, the best work of its kind in the English language, and has no rival in importance for the elucidation of the scenes and facts of Scripture.

The work contains 1024 large octavo pages, over 150 illustrations and maps engraved especially for this work, and is handsomely and strongly bound in cloth. Price, $4.50.

thousand copies weekly, and includes a New York, a San Francisco, a German and Scandinavian edition of the War Cry, monthly magazine named Harbor Lights, a children's paper, and a small sheet named Social News.

There are now about one hundred rescue homes for fallen women. Through these pass about five thousand girls annually, 75 per cent. of them being permanently restored to lives of virtue. Twelve of these homes are in the United States, and about one thousand women have passed through them during the last twelve months.

The world-wide operations of the Salvation Army embrace forty-five different countries and colonies, where work is carried on in twenty-eight different languages by more than 15,000 officers, with a weekly circulation of 1,000,000 copies of literature. About 250,000 persons have professed conversion at the meetings conducted by the Army throughout the whole world during the twelve months.

VOLUNTEERS OF AMERICA.

(By Col. J. G. Hallimond, National Secretary.)

Within twenty-four hours of the closing of our financial year, on November 30th, it was our pleasure to have an annual report and financial statement off the press and in the hands of many of our friends and people. We cannot but feel a little pardonable pride in this almost unique promptitude in "giving an account of stewardship."

With regard to the finances, we have abundant cause for gratitude to God, and have not the slightest doubt but that all our contributors, the great bulk of whom are among the lower and working classes, will be thoroughly satisfied with the way their money has been spent. It was no small task to inaugurate a new movement, over such a necessarily wide geographical area, on a few hundred dollars borrowed capital, but this has been done, and our balance sheet shows an excess of resources over liabilities of $19,639.

We are also gratified at what we believe to be almost a phenomenon in the way of economy, a little over $10,000 having been expended on general work, and $7,715 on social work.

Such a result has not been accomplished without the greatest amount of self-sacrifice on the part of our devoted people, cheerfully, even eagerly, rendered by all, including our brave and trusted leaders, General Ballington and Mrs. Booth, who have given seven days a week, with an average of fourteen hours per day, and taken absolutely no salary or remuneration of any kind.

As far as statistics go, and they give but an inadequate idea of the real work done, but, such as they are, we are pleased to give:

Number of posts, 205; number of commissioned officers, 590; number of members (workers), 2,000; conversions during the year, 15,000; open-air meetings during the year, 23,400; indoor meetings during the year, 70,000; attendance at indoor meetings during the year, 2,000,000; attendance at outdoor meetings during the year, estimated very carefully at 2,000,000.

The last year's work in our general spiritual work has done much toward helping the Christian public to realize the true attitude of the Volunteer movement to the churches.

The most recent utterance of General Ballington Booth leaves no doubt as to it:

"The aim is not so much to build up a new organization as it is to carry the Christ message of hope and love to the unreached; and whether the souls saved join us or not matters little compared with their being safely united to our Lord and divine leader."

The officer in charge of each post is instructed and furnished with the proper machinery for carrying out this idea by promptly handing over to the care of the nearest pastor any person converted in our meetings who expresses a desire to join a church.

In further prosecution of this affiliation with the churches a staff of evangelistic workers is always held in readiness at headquarters, under the direction of the commander-in-chief, who, as time and opportunity permit, assist the pastors of the churches.

The Volunteer Prison League, under Mrs. Ballington Booth, is now established in nine of the largest convict prisons. Over 3,000 men have enrolled in the League, several hundred have graduated, and are now useful members of society again. There are three prison homes (Hope Halls) in existence, and much excellent work has been done in the families of the prisoners. Prison wardens and chaplains, newspaper men, and governors of States unite in endorsing Mrs. Booth's work in the warmest and most glowing terms.

The children of the cities have not been neglected. Sunday schools in many parts have been opened, tens of thousands of little ones have been fed and cared for during the holiday seasons, and this will be a very prominent feature of Volunteer work in future.

Poor men's homes have been opened in twelve cities for homeless, workless, or starving men.

We delight to regard ourselves as the sheepdogs of the churches. Our business is out on the dark mountains, the highways and hedges, the factories and docks, the saloons and the streets, not only reclaiming the fallen and degraded, but stretching out a loving hand and flashing out a warning light to prevent the innocent and the upright from falling at all. Surely the field is wide enough, the need deep enough, the demand loud enough for a hundred such societies as ours.

NOT STINGY.

Editor Recorder.—Please allow me space in the Recorder for brief reply to point 3, in the article headed, "The Presiding Eldership," and signed, "Twenty-Year Pastor." My observation and experience is so different from "Twenty-Year Pastor," I feel that I must relate for his benefit, as well as in justice to the elders with whom I have been associated, some things in particular and some things in general. The presiding elders with whom I have been associated, whenever opportunity presented, have been liberal in their contributions to the various causes of the Church. By reference to my books, I find that four elders, Drs. Brown and Whitehead, Revs. O. Littleton and William E. Payne, the latter of precious memory and now a saint in glory have contributed fifty-seven dollars to benevolent collections of the Church, and on charges served by the undersigned.

One of the above-named elders, last year, gave to a worthy cause nearly one-tenth of the entire assessment on individual churches for his support.

One of the above-named elders sent the poor of my church in the city last Christmas a year one barrel of flour.

One of the above-named elders gave me a most liberal cash subscription to aid in completing a beautiful house of worship.

One of the above-named elders, on blank charge because the cash was not sufficient for my support, would not allow a division to be made, but turned it all over to me, and waited till the close of the year for his proportional amount.

These men are not close-fisted. These men are not stingy. I have found them ever ready, ever willing to respond to all worthy causes and objects. I have so learned them. I write this in simple justice to the benevolence of the elders with whom I have been associated the past eleven years.

NORFOLK LETTER.

McKendree and Epworth churches adopted resolutions requesting the district stewards to cut the presiding elder's salary on this district down to $1,200, but his salary was fixed at the same amount as before—$1,800—and as far as known the above churches are the only ones that wanted the change. There may have been some other district stewards present who were in sympathy with the move; if so, they did not have the backbone to vote as they felt.

The salary ought to have been reduced, as $1,200 for this district is on the basis of $1,800 for a full district of thirty churches. It is astonishing how long our laymen have put up with this presiding-elder business. The small districts in this Conference makes the work very easy. The General Conference ought to have made the districts unlimited, allowing the size of them to be determined by the circumstances. The districts in this Conference that include the cities ought to contain forty to fifty churches; even then the work would not equal that of a minister in charge of an average size congregation. He is entirely relieved of all pastoral work, and our ministers know that visiting, attending the sick, and consoling the bereaved, etc., etc., is more wearing than preaching. The Philadelphia District of the Methodist Episcopal Church has ninety charges, and one in Chicago has a hundred. Of course these presiding elders can't possibly preach four times at each church; in fact, they don't preach at all during the year at some of the charges. By the way, why is it our presiding elders seem to think it their bounden duty to preach four times at each church? There is no law requiring it, and it would often be a great relief to a number of our churches if they would omit some of these appointments, or all of them, as the pastor is far more acceptable. Isn't it strange that not a single one of our presiding elders have ever thought of this? It seems that they would make their four appointments if they knew they would have only five people present!

The presiding elder's Sunday in some of our churches has become the subject of many jokes, and is generally regarded as a dull day. If any of our presiding elders should slight Epworth in their rounds I will guarantee they will on that account be thought none the less of by that congregation.

Going back to the salary question—it would have been no hardship to have reduced the salary on our district at this time, as it is understood that Dr. Brown expects to reside where he is—in Ashland—hence he will be at no expense of moving or renting a house here in the city; besides he has income from other sources to help out.

By making Wednesday night appointments, the entire round on this district can be made in six weeks; hence the work can be done, and half of the time devoted to other interests.

I wish to say I am not opposed to paying our ministers good salaries. I think in many cases they are underpaid, and I would rejoice to see the rank and file better paid, because they have plenty of work to do; and when our districts are enlarged so that the work equals that of an average pastorate, then I favor paying the presiding elders accordingly. Epworth church also sent to the district stewards a strong protest against the unjust discrimination against it in apportioning the assessments, and this protest was heeded to some extent, as the presiding elder's salary was cut down from $364 to $330. This amount is still over 18 per cent. of the presiding elder's salary, and carries with it the same percentage of the assessments on this district.

Our stewards had about decided that if their protest was unheeded that they would cut the assessments down to suit themselves. Some years ago McKendree church, Nashville, Tenn., was treated in this way, until one year they sent a blank sheet to Conference as far as the assessments were concerned, and they never had any trouble after that.

There are some other matters I had intended to write about, but this is long enough, and must do for the present.

WHO IS THE FANATIC?

(By Rev. J. W. Heckman.)

At the Annual Conferences for the last few years I have heard some of the ministers give tobacco the black eye, but the speaker almost invariably would apologize with, "I am no fanatic on tobacco."

Now, let us see what constitutes a fanatic. In a nut-shell, a fanatic is one who is "wild and extravagant in opinions." It is generally conceded by nearly all the leading physicians of today that tobacco is very poisonous, and therefore injurious, producing disease and death in a great many cases. It is not recommended by the doctors as being a good medicine. It is conceded that hundreds of boys are hastening to premature graves from the cigarette habit. The writer was a slave to the habit, chewing the filthy weed for about twenty-two years. He saw that it was injuring him in more ways than one—first, his health; secondly, his influence in Christian work; and thirdly, his soul. Was he a fanatic to give it up? Would he not have been a fool to have kept on? Surely a man must have wild opinions who advocates a habit condemned by the best medical authority in the world.

When I see many boys killing themselves by indulging in the habit of cigarette smoking, am I a fanatic to "cry aloud and spare not"? But suppose I warn the boys of their danger, and they see me with a cigar or quid in my mouth, would they not say, "Physician, heal thyself"? Would I not rather by example encourage them to go ahead? Is it not a sin to deliberately commit suicide? We should not defile the temple," and our bodies "are temples of the Holy Ghost." It is our duty to take care of our bodies. Who, then, is a fanatic, the man who opposes such a deadly, soul-destroying evil, or the man who by example and word encourages the habit? I would as soon encourage the opium habit. I believe it is killing more people than the liquor habit. The Lord save us! If I were in any way to encourage the evil, I would consider myself more than a fanatic—I would be a fool, as I see the light now.

Would the writer have been saved if he had not given it up? Before he saw the evil, yes; but after the Holy Spirit lead him into the light, no. He would be as certainly lost as for any other evil. "He that is filthy, let him be filthy still."

Again, a man who indulges in the habit in any of its forms becomes as much a slave to it as the man who is addicted to the opium habit. Jesus says: "No man can serve two masters." Is tobacco one of your masters? Do you love the cigar or quid? Can you give it up? If so, why not do so now?

Hundreds of Christians have no faith in a smoking or chewing preacher. Has such a minister any influence over such? Does he not cause his brother to offend? "If meat," much less tobacco, "make my brother to offend, I will eat no more meat while I live."

Look at the waste of money for a useless, injurious, filthy weed. Would it not be better to give the money to missions? Who is the fanatic? Let common sense answer.

Brother, are you a slave? Do you want to be free? "If Christ shall make you free, you shall be free indeed." The writer knows this. He got deliverance in a day through the blood of Jesus, and has been free more than three years. Glory to His name! Amen.

A Michigan boy, the son of a Baptist clergyman, has inherited all the baptism-by-immersion principles, and by close attention given to the ceremony as performed by his fond parent is able to repeat it word for word. A few days ago he filled a tub with water in the back kitchen, and, catching the family cat and her two kittens, proceeded to teach them the essential rites of the Baptist church. The kittens underwent the ordeal without protest, but the cat showed her displeasure by scratching the boy's face. Throwing the offending animal down, he said in disgust: "Go it, then, and be a shouting Methodist still, if you want to."—Exchange.

A CONVERTED GRIP.

A commercial traveller of our acquaintance was converted about a year ago. He had been a man of the world. Not a hard drinker, yet he frequently took a glass with a customer to seal a sale. And sometimes he took a glass without a sale or a customer either. He was not a gambler, yet he always carried a pack of cards in a certain corner of his grip. But through a good wife's prayers and solicitations he was converted. Then came the test of the first trip out.

It is a common saying among commercial men that "when you are in Rome you must do as Romans do." They declare that you cannot sell goods without taking a drink with the customer who drinks, or without passing over the cigars for the customer who smokes—and most of them do.

Our friend had said these things so often himself that he almost believed them. But here he was, converted and dedicated to God unconditionally. Now he was about to go out again over the same old territory, to meet the same old companions with whom he had smoked and drunk many a time. What should he do? It made him perspire to turn the interrogation over in his mind.

But he packed his grip with a firm resolve. He took the train with a prayer upon his lips. The first town he "made" knew that something had happened. When he opened his grip there was no pipe there. There were no cigars. There was no flask of liquor. And in the corner where the well-worn deck of cards always lay, was a small Bible.

The grip had met with a change of heart!

The first customer laughed. Ha, ha! Good joke! capital!" roared he. The second customer whistled and looked quizzically at the drummer. The third customer said: "Why, my dear fellow, what's up? Haven't turned preacher, have you?" But our friend met them all alike. Pleasantly, but earnestly, he spoke it right out: "Boys, I've turned around!" The fourth customer was a Christian man. He looked the drummer in the eye without saying a word, and pointed to the Bible. The converted man said, slowly, but positively: "I mean it." The tears sprang to the customer's eyes in a flash, and the two men grasped hands with the warmth and tenderness of friends meeting in a strange land.

Everybody found it out. They talked of it all along the road. Everybody who knew the young fellow knew that something had happened—something wonderful. The converted grip told the story. And then he backed up its testimony with his own.

Hard? Well, yes, at first. But it is not so now. He cut a clean swath the first trip, and it has been easy ever since. And the brother knights of the grip profoundly respected him for it. "The fellow is in earnest," they say, "and lives up to his principles; we believe in that."—Epworth Herald.

CHEERFUL PESSIMISM.

A preacher on board of a vessel during a storm was annoying the captain with his inquiries about the ship's danger. He took the gentleman to the fore-castle and showed him a party of sailors playing cards and swearing. "Look at that," said he; "they never do that when there is any danger of the ship's going down." The storm continued to rage, but every now and then the good man would greet the captain with: "Thank God, they are swearing still." We in this land of liberty take up our morning paper and say with a smile on our faces: "Thank God, the country is going to the dogs still."—Exchange.

JOKES ON THE BISHOPS.

The Bishop's Thanksgiving Sermon.

Bishop Blank was holding an Annual Conference on the occasion of Thanksgiving. The Conference invited him to preach the usual Thanksgiving sermon. When the time arrived, instead of giving a recess in the proceedings before preaching, the Bishop just quoted his text, and went straight along talking. He had been talking for fifteen or twenty minutes, when one of the members of the Conference could keep still no longer. He rose and said:

Excuse me, Bishop. I don't want to interrupt you. But the hour for preaching has come some time ago; I move we adjourn for worship."

The effect on the audience may be imagined. The Bishop was non-plussed. He looked at the brother for a moment, and said:

"Well, sir, if I ain't preaching now, what do you think I'm doing?"

The brother will probably wait till he quits next time.

CLOSE THE DOOR.

Bishop Blank is a great sufferer from that most annoying malady, "hay fever." When his hay fever is on, he is not always in the saintliest mood, but being a conscientious, faithful man, he does not let it keep him from his post of duty. On this occasion, he was presiding in a District Conference, and dividing his time between wiping "his weeping eyes" and wielding his gavel to keep the saints in order. At length, a loquacious brother got the floor, and held it. In vain the tearful bishop tried to quiet him. He knew his rights and kept on. At length the Bishop looked around and discovered the door was open, so he said to a brother standing near it:

"Brother, I wish you would close that door. I can't stand wind blowing on me from both sides at once."

The laugh that followed closed the speech as well as the door.

HAY FEVER.

Speaking of the Bishop's hay fever, they tell a good one on him out West. The Bishop is noted for his keen wit and satire. He sometimes scores delinquent preachers with his sarcasm. In a Conference in Texas, so the story runs, the Bishop had been "rubbing it in" on one of the preachers, whose reports were not what he thought they ought to be. The brother was on the floor, and made some statement in which he referred to a lady as a "grass-widow."

"What do you mean by a grass-widow?" asked the Bishop. "I have been hearing that term all my life, but I don't know that I ever heard it explained. Can you enlighten me?"

The brother appeared as meek as Moses, but modestly replied:

"I'm not sure that I can, Bishop; but I understand it is a woman whose husband died with the hay fever."

The effect of this sally can be better imagined than described, but Bishop Blank let him alone after that.

THE BISHOP AND THE CHINA-MAN.

Here is another good one on Bishop Blank. It happened while he was travelling in Mexico. The railroad had given him and his travelling companion special permits, and made them good for meals at the eating houses along the route, so that they travelled at half rates. Chinamen are employed in these railroad eating houses. After a good dinner at one of the stations, the Bishop approached the counter to settle. He presented his permit, and said, "Do you understand that, John?" The Chinaman looked at it, and made the paralyzing reply: "Ump, halfee pay, halfee man."

A DEFINITION OF A LIE.

A bishop—let him be nameless, too—was making an address to a Sunday school, and asking the children questions.

"Now can you tell me what a lie is?" he asked.

Up went several little hands. The Bishop recognized a little girl, and said:

"Well, let this little girl tell us what a lie is."

"It is an abomination to the Lord, and a very pleasant help in time of trouble," she said; and never knew what made the people laugh so loud.

Here are two good ones from "Over the Wine and Walnuts" in "Current Literature" for December:

A Bishop's Hat.—We are all sensitive to our personal identity. Smith doesn't like to be called Jones, and Adams shows a good deal of "the old Adam" when he is mistaken for the expressman. The "London Realm" tells a story illustrative of this sensitiveness:

The late Lord Aylesbury was standing bareheaded in a well-known hatter's shop in Piccadilly, while his hat was being ironed. A bishop who, being still alive, has not reached his time for posthumous anecdotes, and must consequently be nameless—entered the shop in full attire, and seeing Lord Aylesbury bareheaded, mistook him for the shop man. Taking off his own head covering, the Bishop said: "I want to know if you have a hat like this?" Lord Aylesbury surveyed the hat and its owner, and turned on his heel with the curt remark: "No, I haven't; and if I had, I'd be hung before I'd wear it."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON V, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL S. S. JAN. 22.

Text of the Lesson, John iii, 1-16.
Memory Verses, 14-16—Golden Text,
John iii, 16. Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. W. Stearns.

[Copy] L. "Now therefore is the Son of Man glorified, and the Son of Man has given life unto himself, that he might know God for this is greater than riches or wisdom or might (Jer. ix, 23)."

1. "Now therefore is the Son of Man glorified, and the Son of Man has given life unto himself, that he might know God for this is greater than riches or wisdom or might (Jer. ix, 23)."

2. Nicodemus knew that Jesus was at least sent of God and that God was with him, and his soul was hungering for more of God, and he felt that Jesus had power to help him, yet, being a ruler and Jesus being evidently a very humble person, not having been taught in any of the schools, nor having like Samson, been brought up at the feet of Gamaliel or any great teacher of the day, he seems to think it wise not to come at first to Him too publicly.

3. Jesus passes by the seeming compliment and, recognizing the longing in the heart of Nicodemus, tells him briefly the only way to see the kingdom for which he longs. To be born of God (1-13) or from above (margin) is the only way. No human wisdom nor royal lineage nor position among men can entitle any one to see or enter the kingdom of God. It must be a work of God in the heart—nothing less than the receiving of the Son of God (chapter i, 12).

4. Nicodemus, though very religious and a ruler of the Jews, was only a natural man and understood not spiritual things. He could only think of a natural birth.

5. A little more fully Jesus now states it, saying that to be born of God means to be born of water and of the Spirit. By calling up three witnesses—Peter, James and Paul—and by comparing I Pet. i, 23; Jas. i, 18; Eph. v, 26; John vi, 63, we learn that water suggests the Word of God, by which the Spirit always works.

6. The flesh is the natural man, the man not subject to nor controlled by God. He may be intellectual, educated, talented, wealthy, a good citizen, moral, philanthropic and in every way all that could be desired as a loving father, son or brother, yet if only that never see the kingdom of God. He that hath the Son hath life, but he that hath not the Son of God hath not life, whatever else he may have (I John v, 12).

7. "Ye must be born again." There is much teaching nowadays to the effect that there is a spark of the divine nature in every one and that it only needs to be developed, but such is not the teaching of the Word of God, which says that the carnal or natural mind is enmity against God, for it is not subject to the law of God, neither, indeed, can be (Rom. viii, 7).

8. We can feel the wind as it blows upon us, but we cannot tell whence it came nor whither its destination. Thus the Spirit moves and works. In the darkness of Gen. i, 2, the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, and God spake, and there was light. So God, by His word and Spirit, shines in hearts and gives the knowledge of Himself, causing life and fruitfulness where all before was waste and void (II Cor. iv, 6, 7).

9. "How can these things be?" The blind was groping for the light and but very dimly perceiving. These spiritual things, so simple to the Spirit taught, were too much for the natural man, even though he be a ruler. I have wondered if one reason why the wisdom of this world dislikes the book of Daniel and would fain have done with it is that there, as perhaps nowhere else, is shown the utter impotence of such wisdom to deal with the things of God.

10. A master of Israel should know something of these things, for in Ezek. xxxvi, 26, 27, it was written: "A new heart also will I give you and a new spirit will I put within you. I will put My Spirit within you and cause you to walk in My statutes." Gabriel was sent from heaven to cause Daniel to know, but here is a greater than Gabriel, and yet Nicodemus does not understand.

11. This is the third verily, verily of our lesson. Only in this gospel do we find the double verily or amen or in truth, and He who uses it is Himself the Truth. He knows all things and all men, even their utmost imaginings. He said through Jeremiah: "I, the Lord, search the heart; I try the reins" (Jer. xvii, 10).

12. There are celestial and terrestrial things as well as bodily, but the glory of the one differs greatly from that of the other (I Cor. xv, 40). The kingdom, although not of this world, is to be set upon this earth and will include the whole world (John xviii, 36; Dan. vii, 27; Hab. ii, 14), but there is a New Jerusalem to come down out of heaven from God, in the light of which the nations of the earth are to walk.

13. What wondrous sayings are here! While He was on earth He was in heaven; He came down from heaven, and does He say that as man He had ascended up to heaven? If so, we must believe it. But what about John xx, 17, "I am not yet ascended to my Father?" That was in His resurrection body.

14. Our Lord Jesus never made light of or in any way discounted any record in the Scriptures, but spoke of them as realities. Here He refers to the incident of Num. xxi, 6-9, where the people, dying from the bite of fiery serpents, were to look upon a brazen serpent which Moses, at God's command, lifted up upon a pole high enough for all to see, and when any dying one beheld the serpent of brass he lived.

15. The Israelites bitten were as good as dead unless they looked. They were utterly helpless. Nicodemus was as helpless to save himself as a bitten Israelite; so, we, when a bitten and dying one looked where he was told, he saw the resemblance of that which was causing his suffering and probable death, but it was fastened to a pole and thus in the place of death to itself.

16. In Jesus Christ on the cross for our sins we see the love of God as it never was seen elsewhere. We see the fulfillment of Gen. iii, 15, 21; Ps. xxii; Isa. liii, and every other Scripture concerning His sufferings and death. We are not asked to understand it nor to grasp its full significance, for that would be impossible, but, like the bitten Israelite, we are asked to behold Him and believe He is for me. Then we are assured that through Him we have life and can never perish. All who are helpless and turn to Him and simply receive Him are born of God. It is evident from chapter xix, 39, that Nicodemus received Him, and the secret disciple became the bold confessor.

The Evacuation of Cienfuegos.

Cienfuegos, Jan. 16.—The entire military department of Santa Clara, Major General J. C. Bates commanding, is quiet. Twenty-seven thousand Spaniards still remain in the vicinity of Cienfuegos but one transport is now loading and 12 others are expected to arrive at an early date. It is improbable, however, that the evacuation will be completed much before the middle of February. The Spanish soldiers are poorly fed and have had no pay for months.

Amos Owen Cherry Trees!

The finest cherries and largest cherry tree in the known world grow on the famous Cherry Mountain, near Ellenboro, N. C.

For the past few years trees from this famous orchard have been transplanted in the surrounding country, and have proved a surprise to the people by their rapid growth, enormous size, and delicious fruit. The trees grow very tall, and spread out long, heavy limbs, and are filled with large, black heart-shaped cherries. As many as five bushels have been gathered from one tree. The fruit is very fine in flavor, and suitable for canning, pies, drying, etc., and, ripening as they do in May and June, they come in when other fruit is scarce, and sell readily at 10 cents per quart. Besides their great value as fruit trees, they make the finest of shade trees. Mr. John T. Patrick, chief industrial agent of the Seaboard Air Line, after examining them and seeing their great value as a fruit and shade tree, says:

"These trees are rapid growers; they make a good shade, and yield an abundant crop of large, black cherries, that find a ready market. One thousand trees will in five years from planting yield a revenue to the town that puts them out sufficient to pay town taxes, keep up the streets, and work the country roads leading into the town.

"It would be a big advertisement that will be worth thousands of dollars to be able to say 'our town has fruit-bearing trees enough on its sidewalks and public parks to pay the expenses of the town and build good county roads,' and will give you a world-wide reputation for thrift, enterprise, and good judgment."

Mr. Patrick did not only talk, but acted on his judgment, and we furnished to him and his agents over six thousand trees during 1897-'98 season.

The trees can be set any time from October 20th to March 30th, and it is a very rare thing for one to die. So rare that we gladly send another in place of any that die the first season, that has been carefully set out. We carefully pack all trees, so as to arrive in good condition. We can furnish them either by mail or express one to three years old. Small trees grow off better, and will make a large tree as quick as a ten-foot one, but we will furnish them any size up to ten feet high. We prepay all trees when cash accompanies the order. So it does not make any difference where you live, they will be delivered at the following prices:

One tree by mail	25c.	Twenty tree by express	$2 50
Six trees by mail	$1 00	Fifty trees by express	5 00
Twelve trees by express	1 75	One hundred trees by express ..	8 00

One tree free with each order, if you mention the Methodist Recorder.

Send money by registered mail, postoffice, or express money order, or check, making them payable to FRANK BRIGHT, Secretary, and address:

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Jan. 22, "Growth in Grace."
Text, Ps. xx, 1-9.

"In the name of our God we will set up our banners."

Flags and emblems are most frequently decorative in their use, but their greatest value lies in a different direction. They stand for principles and serve as rallying points in conflicts where those principles are at stake. In armies there is not only the national ensign, but each corps, division and regiment has its own special emblem which on a banner designates the headquarters and serves to guide the organizations in their movements.

Nothing will more stir the sentiment than the sight of the flag of one's native land, especially when under its leadership forces are massed for the protection of one's life and liberties. March, camp and battle incidents illustrate the power of the flag to move men to endurance and deeds of valor.

So the psalmist feels toward God and His work. The cross of Christ had not in the times of David become the sacred emblem of God's people, and the significance of self sacrifice as the essence of religion was not known as it is now, but the rulership of God and the need that men should obey His laws were known. David, with all his faults, clearly saw the necessity for divine leading. He felt intensely the nearness of God. The Hebrew consciousness of communion with the eternal spirit of righteousness was highly developed in him. God was king. Men were servants and soldiers of Jehovah. They acted under His eye. Earthly events were under guidance of God and executed His plans. God moved to battle against evil everywhere. His banners led the human host to sure victory. Goodness and godliness alone were powerful. Sin and evil were weak as well as wrong and must be overthrown. God was invisible but all powerful. As Zion, the citadel of Judah in Jerusalem, was the stronghold of the earthly king, so God was conceived of as dwelling in the impregnable Zion of heavenly power, glory and grace.

Growth in grace means several things

It means first of all to see in actual increase in individual uprightness and goodness. As one grows older in Christian life the hold on spiritual things should be firmer. One should actually know and love God better, be purer in speech, gentler in action, more helpful and generous, more loving and lovable. Then God actually can love more and bless with greater prosperity.

Appetite and Digestion.

Dyspeptics abound on the street, in the home and in the church. Devotional exercises are painful, and there is no relish for sermons, songs, prayer nor even for the collection. If a morsel of truth is got hold of, the chances are that if it doesn't choke one in the swallowing it lies like lead, undigested, after it is down and makes life miserable or else is wholly cast up and rejected. The low condition of piety generally is recognized quite fully, its causes are sought and remedy inquired for. It is well to note the symptoms and carefully diagnose the disease that cause and cure may more surely be found.

If you wish to know your condition of soul health, note if you have hearty relish for the means of grace. Do you enjoy reading the Bible? Is it food for your hunger that you relish, or do you force it down because you ought to do so and with no real appetite?

Is prayer a task or a delightful banquet with God? Do the church services seem stale or full of exquisite flavor? Do you delight in speaking of Christ and for Him, or do you find yourself weak and trembling? No digestion without appetite and no growth but by good digestion. If your piety is consumptive or dyspeptic, better go to the Great Physician at once. There is a sure cure.

Our Special Blessings.

As a nation we have special reasons for thankfulness to God at this time. During the past year we have seen an army created, a navy equipped, a war prosecuted to successful end and political changes of great magnitude concluded to our advantage. A year ago the most sanguine prophet could not have predicted the wonderful events of Manila, Cuba and Porto Rico. For the success of our arms by sea and land we owe praise to Almighty God. For the bounteous harvests, producing wealth beyond that of mines of gems and gold, for business prosperity and employment for the working people we owe thanks to the Lord.

Beyond all these material benefits is the sure indication of the dawning of a better era of soul life. The peace proposition of the czar of Russia is a token of advancing Christianity. The very troubles in China are an augury of better civilization coming up the centuries.

The raising of the missionary debt gives promise of better things in the church. Prosperity should be celebrated in greatly increased liberality as well as in songs and sermons. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

The Lord Needeth Thee.

Jesus, Thou needest me.
Even me, Thou Light divine!
O Son of God, Thou needest me—
Thou needest sins like mine!

Thy fullness needs my want,
Thy wealth my poverty;
Thy healing skill my sickness needs,
Thy joy my misery.

Thy strength my weakness needs,
Thy grace my worthlessness;
Thy greatness needs a worm like me
To cherish and to bless.

Thy fullness, Son of God,
Thy needy maketh Thee!
Thy glory, O Thou Blessed One,
Seeketh its rest in me!

It was Thy need of me
That brought Thee from above;
It is my need of Thee, O Lord,
That draws me to Thy love!

NELSON DINGLEY DEAD.

Had Not Strength to Withstand an Attack of Double Pneumonia.

Washington, Jan. 14.—Hon. Nelson Dingley, of Maine, leader of the Republican side on the floor of the house of representatives, and representing the Second congressional district of Maine in that body, died here last night at 10:30 of heart failure, resulting from extreme weakness due to double pneumonia. He was unconscious during most of the day, and death came quietly without consciousness being regained. There were present at the time Mrs. Dingley, Miss Edith Dingley, Messrs. E. N. and A. H. Dingley, sons of the deceased; Mr. James C. Hooe, an intimate friend of the family; Dr. Deale and the two nurses. To within a few hours before his death the family firmly believed, as they have throughout his illness, that Mr. Dingley would recover, and it was only when it became apparent that he was dying that they gathered at his bedside.

Nelson Dingley, Jr., was born in Durham, Me., Feb. 15, 1833. When 17 years old he taught a winter school in the town of China, 14 miles from his home, and continued to teach every winter while fitting for college. He graduated from Dartmouth college in 1855, studied law, and in 1856 was admitted to the bar, but chose to enter journalism instead of the legal profession. He purchased the Lewiston Journal, and retained the ownership until his death. He was elected to the state legislature in 1861, was elected governor in 1873 and 1874, and declined a third nomination. In 1881 he was elected to congress, and was re-elected nine times. President McKinley tendered the position of secretary of the treasury to Mr. Dingley, but he declined the offer, preferring to remain in his position as chairman of the ways and means committee and floor leader of the Republican majority of the house.

LIKE CHATTEL SLAVERY.

Importing Chinese Coolies to Work on Plantations in Mexico.

Vancouver, B. C., Jan. 16.—The steamship Empress of Japan, from Hong Kong, brought 408 Asiatic steerage passengers, many of whom were low caste Chinese coolies. One hundred and ninety-one of the men were destined for Tampico, Mex. It is stated that they have been engaged under contract to work on plantations and on railway construction, their wages are to be sent to their families in China, and they are to be permitted to return to China after two years of work. It is stated that a Chinaman named Ma Gop is arranging to import 1,300 of these coolies from Hong Kong.

While the first contingent for Mexico were being loaded into a special train of coaches which were lined up along the steamer dock some San Francisco Chinese residents of this city created a panic among the newly arrived countrymen by telling them they had been sold into slavery, and would never be permitted to return to China. A stampede followed, and the officials were obliged to resort to violence in order to check the rush of the men, which was in the direction of the water. A score of them were knocked down with clubs, and the crowd was only stopped in time to prevent its plunging over the docks.

The Chinese here are circulating a story that the men have been sold at sums ranging from $500 to $1,000, and that they will never be permitted to return to China.

Disconsolate Young Woman's Suicide

Baltimore, Jan. 16.—Miss Anna Mary Hoke Schley, 25 years old, daughter of the late Colonel William Louis Schley, poet, lawyer and veteran of two wars, and second cousin of Rear Admiral Schley, committed suicide yesterday in her home here. Since the death of her father, to whom she was much attached, Miss Schley had been inconsolable. A week since her mental condition became alarming to her friends, and attendants were almost constantly at her bedside. Yesterday afternoon her sister went below stairs for a few moments, and when she returned found Miss Schley dead. She had shot herself through the heart with one of her father's revolvers.

The Czar's Peace Proposals.

London, Jan. 16.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Times, who confirms the statement as to the issuance of a circular from St. Petersburg to the powers embodying a program to be considered at the proposed conference on the limitation of armaments, asserts that the suggested bases of discussion are given with great detail. He cites, for example, the prohibition of employment of new inventions, of the use of explosives submarine vessels and the practice of ramming vessels. The program also proposes, he says, a discussion of the avoidance of war by recourse to arbitration wherever possible.

Would Not Sell Herself For Title.

London, Jan. 16.—The Vienna correspondent of The Daily Mail says: "Countess Rosemont de Rouge-Aix, daughter of Mr. Steward, a Boston millionaire, has been living in this city incognito as a governess in a gentleman's house. Within a few minutes after her wedding she learned by chance that the count had only married her because her father had promised to pay his debts, amounting to £300,000. Overcome by this disclosure, she ran away as a protest against being sold in this way, and she intends to earn her living here until she can divorce her mercenary husband."

Sanguily Coming With a Protest.

Havana, Jan. 16.—General Julio Sanguily, accompanied by four aides, sailed for Tampa, Fla., on Saturday, whence he proposes to proceed to Washington to protest against the attitude assumed toward him by Major General Ludlow, military governor of the department of Havana. Last Friday General Sanguily called upon General Brooke and gave his version of the Albisu theater affair. He showed General Brooke General Ludlow's letter ordering him (Sanguily) to stay out of the city and not to wear his uniform. General Brooke gave Sanguily a note of introduction to General Ludlow, but the latter refused to receive the Cuban officer.

Dreyfus to be Again Examined.

London, Jan. 16.—According to the correspondent of The Daily Telegraph at Cayenne, French Guiana, the court of cassation has ordered a second interrogation of Dreyfus regarding his alleged confession of guilt to Captain Lebrun-Renault, in whose charge he was placed at the time of his degradation.

NOBLE WOMANHOOD.

DR. TALMAGE TELLS OF THE VALUE OF GOOD WIVES.

Hundreds of Men Are Successful Only Because of Wise Helpmates—Great in Piety, Kindness and Hospitality.

[Copyright, 1899, by American Press Association.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—A Scripture character whose name is not given becomes the subject of Dr. Talmage's sermon in which he here sets forth the qualities of good and noble womanhood; text, II Kings iv. 8. "Elisha passed to Shunem, where was a great woman."

The hotel of our time had no counterpart in any entertainment of olden time. The vast majority of travelers must then be entertained at private abode. Here comes Elisha, a servant of the Lord, on a divine mission, and he must find shelter. A balcony overlooking the valley of Esdraelon is offered him in a private house, and it is especially furnished for his occupancy—a chair to sit on, a table from which to eat, a candlestick by which to read and a bed on which to slumber, the whole establishment belonging to a great and good woman. Her husband, it seems, was a godly man, but he was entirely overshadowed by his wife's excellences; just as now you sometimes find in a household the wife the center of dignity and influence and power, not by any arrogance or presumption, but by superior intellect and force of moral nature, wielding domestic affairs and at the same time supervising all financial and business affairs—the wife's hand on the shuttle or the banking house or the worldly business.

You see hundreds of men who are successful only because there is a reason at home why they are successful. If a man marry a good, honest soul, he makes his fortune. If he marry a fool, the Lord help him. The wife may be the silent partner in the firm, there may be only masculine voices down on Exchange, but there oftentimes comes from the home circle a potential and elevating influence. This woman of my text was the superior of her husband. He, as far as I can understand, was what we often see in our day, a man of large fortune and only a modicum of brain, intensely quiet, sitting a long while in the same place without moving hand or foot. If you say "Yes" responding "Yes;" if you say "No," responding "No!"—inane, eyes half shut, mouth wide open, maintaining his position in society only because he has a large patrimony. But his wife, my text says, was a great woman. Her name has not come down to us. She belonged to that collection of people who need no name to distinguish them. What would title of duchess or princess or queen—what would escutcheon or gleaming diadem be to this woman of my text, who by her intelligence and her behavior challenges the admiration of all ages? Long after the brilliant women of the court of Louis XV have been forgotten and the brilliant women of the court of Spain have been forgotten and the brilliant women who sat on the throne of Russia have been forgotten some grandfather will put on his spectacles, and holding the book the other side the light read to his grandchildren the story of this great woman of Shunem who was so kind and courteous and Christian to the good prophet Elisha. Yes, she was a great woman.

Practice Hospitality.

In the first place, she was great in her hospitalities. Uncivilized and barbarous nations have this virtue. Jupiter had the surname of the Hospitable, and he was said especially to avenge the wrongs of strangers. Homer extolled it in his verse. The Arabs are punctilious on this subject, and among some of their tribes it is not until the ninth day or tarrying that the occupant has a right to ask his guest, "Who and whence art thou?" If this virtue is so honored among barbarians, how ought it to be honored among those of us who believe in the Bible, which commands us to use hospitality one toward another without grudging!

Of course I do not mean under this cover to give any idea that I approve of that vagrant class who go around from place to place, ranging their whole lifetime, perhaps under the auspices of some benevolent or philanthropic society, quartering themselves on Christian families with a great pile of trunks in the hall and carpetbag portentous of tarrying. There is many a country parsonage that looks out week by week upon the ominous arrival of wagon with creaking wheel and lank horse and dilapidated driver, come under the auspices of some charitable institution to spend a few weeks and canvass the neighborhood. Let no such religious tramps take advantage of this beautiful virtue of Christian hospitality. Not so much the sumptuousness of your diet and the regality of your abode will impress the friend or the stranger that steps across your threshold as the warmth of your greeting, the informality of your reception, the reiteration by grasp, and by look, and by a thousand attentions, insignificant attentions, of your earnestness of welcome. There will be high appreciation of your welcome, though you have nothing but the brazen candlestick and the plain chair to offer Elisha when he comes to Shunem. Most beautiful is this grace of hospitality when shown in the house of God. I am thankful that I have always been pastor of churches where strangers are welcome. But I have entered churches where there was no hospitality. A stranger would stand in the vestibule for awhile and then make a pilgrimage up the long aisle. No door opened to him until, flushed and excited and embarrassed, he started back again and, coming to some half filled pew, with apologetic air entered it, while the occupant glared on him with a look which seemed to say, "Well, if I must, I must. Away with such accused indecency from the house of God. Let every church that would maintain large Christian influence in community culture Sabbath by Sabbath this beautiful grace of Christian hospitality."

A good man traveling in the far west, in the wilderness, was overtaken by night and storm, and he put in at a cabin. He saw firearms along the beams of the cabin, and he felt alarmed. He did not know but that he had fallen into a den of thieves. He sat there greatly perturbed. After awhile the man of the house came home with a gun on his shoulder and set it down in a corner. The stranger was still more alarmed. After awhile the man of the house whispered with his wife, and the stranger thought his destruction was being planned. Then the man of the house came forward and said to the stranger "Stranger, we are a rough and rude people out here, and we work hard for a living. We make our living by hunting, and when we come to the nightfall we are tired and we are apt to go to bed early and before retiring we are always in the habit of reading a chapter from the word of God and making a prayer. If you don't like such things, if you will just step outside the door until we get through I'll be greatly obliged to you." Of course the stranger tarried in the room, and the old hunter took hold of the horns of the altar and brought down the blessing of God upon his household and upon the stranger within their gates. Rude but glorious Christian hospitality!

Woman's Sympathy.

Again, this woman of my text was great in her kindness toward God's messenger. Elisha may have been a stranger in that household, but as she found out he had come on a divine mission he was cordially welcomed. We have a great many books in our day about the hardships of ministers and the trials of Christian ministers. I wish somebody would write a book about the joys of the Christian minister, about the sympathies all around about him, about the kindness, about the genial considerations of him. Does sorrow come to our home, and is there a shadow on the cradle, there are hundreds of hands to help and many who weary not through the night watching and hundreds of prayers going up that God would restore the sick. Is there a burning, brimming cup of calamity placed on the pastor's table, are there not many to help him drink of that cup and who will not be comforted because he is stricken? Oh, for somebody to write a book about the rewards of the Christian ministry—about his surroundings of Christian sympathy!

This woman of the text was only a type of thousands of men and women who come down from mansion and from cot to do kindness to the Lord's servants. I could tell you of something that you might think a romance. A young man graduated from New Brunswick Theological seminary was called to a village church. He had not the means to furnish the parsonage. After three or four weeks of preaching a committee of the officers of the church waited on him and told him he looked tired and thought he had better take a vacation of a few days. The young pastor took it as an intimation that his work was done or not acceptable. He took the vacation, and at the end of a few days came back, when an old elder said "Here is the key of the parsonage. We have been cleaning it up. You had better go up and look at it." So the young pastor took the key, went up to the parsonage, opened the door, and lo, it was carpeted, and there was the hatrack all ready for the canes and the umbrellas and the overcoats, and on the left hand of the hall was the parlor, sofaed, chaired, pictured. He passed on to the other side of the hall, and there was the study table in the center of the floor with stationery upon it, bookshelves built, long ranges of new volumes, far beyond the reach of the means of the young pastor, many of these volumes. The young pastor went up stairs and found all the sleeping apartments furnished, came down stairs and entered the pantry, and there were the spices, and the coffees, and the sugars, and the groceries for six months. He went down into the cellar, and there was the coal for all the coming winter. He went into the dining hall, and there was the table already set—the glass and the silver-ware. He went into the kitchen, and there were all the culinary implements and a great stove. The young pastor lifted one lid of the stove, and he found the fuel all ready for ignition. Putting back the cover of the stove, he saw in another part of it a lucifer match, and all that young man had to do in starting to keep house was to strike the match. You tell me that is apocryphal. Oh, no, that was my own experience. Oh, the kindnesses, oh, the enlarged sympathies sometimes clustered around those who enter the gospel ministry! I suppose the man of Shunem had to pay the bills, but it was the large hearted Christian sympathies of the woman of Shunem that looked after the Lord's messenger.

Strong to Bear Trouble.

Again, this woman of the text was great in her behavior under trouble. Her only son had died on her lap. A very bright light went out in that household. The sacred writer puts it very tersely when he says, "He sat on her knee until noon, and then he died." Yet the writer goes on to say that she exclaimed, "It is well!" Great in prosperity this woman was great in trouble.

Where are the feet that have not been blistered on the hot sands of this great Sahara? Where are the soldiers that have not bent under the burden of grief? Where is the ship sailing over glassy sea that has not after awhile been caught in a cyclone? Where is the garden of earthly comfort, but trouble hath hitched up its fiery and panting team and gone through it with burning plowshare of disaster? Under the pelt- ing of ages of suffering the great heart of the world has burst with woe. Navigators tell us about the rivers, and the Amazon, and the Danube, and the Mississippi have been explored, but who can tell the depth or the length of the great river of sorrow, made up of tears and blood, rolling through all lands and all ages, bearing the wreck of families, and of communities, and of empires, foaming, writhing, boiling with the agonies of 6,000 years. Etna, Cotopaxi and Vesuvius have been described, but who has ever sketched the volcano of suffering retching up from its depths the lava and scoria, and pouring them down the sides to whelm the nations? Oh, if I could gather all the heart-strings, the broken heartstrings, into a harp I would play on it a dirge such as was never sounded. Mythologists tell us of gorgon and centaur and Titan, and geologists tell us of extinct species of monsters, but greater than gorgon or megatherium, and not belonging to the realm of fable, and not of an extinct species, a monster with an iron jaw and a hundred iron hoofs has walked across the nations, and history and poetry and sculpture, in their attempt to sketch it and describe it, have seemed to sweat great drops of blood. But, thank God, there are those who can conquer as this woman of the text conquered, and say "It is well. Though my property be gone, though my children be gone, though my home be broken up, though my health be sacrificed, it is well; it is well!" There is no storm on the sea but Christ is ready to rise in the hinder part of the ship and hush it. There is no darkness but the constellation of God's eternal love can illumine, and, though the winter comes out of the northern sky, you have sometimes seen that northern sky all ablaze with auroras which seem to say: "Come up this way. Up this way are thrones of light and seas of sapphire and the splendor of an eternal heaven. Come up this way."

We may, like the ships, by tempest be tossed
On perilous deeps, but cannot be lost.
Though satan enrage the wind and the tide,
The promise assures us the Lord will provide.

Home Duties.

Again, this woman of my text was great in her application to domestic duties. Every picture is a home picture, whether she is entertaining an Elisha or whether she is giving careful attention to her sick boy or whether she is appealing for the restoration of her property. Every picture in her case is one of domesticity. Those are not disciples of this Shunemite woman who, going out to attend to outside charities, neglect the duty of home—the duty of wife, of mother, of daughter. No faithfulness in public benefaction can ever atone for domestic negligence. There has been many a mother who by indefatigable toil has reared a large family of children, equipping them for the duties of life with good manners and large intelligence and Christian principle, starting them out, who has done more for the world than many a woman whose name has sounded through all the lands and through the centuries. I remember when Kossuth was in this country there were some ladies who got honorable reputations by presenting him very gracefully with bouquets of flowers on public occasions, but what was all that compared with the plain Hungarian mother who gave to truth and civilization and the cause of universal liberty a Kossuth? Yes, this woman of my text was great in her simplicity. When this prophet wanted to reward her for her hospitality by asking some preferment from the king, what did she say? She declined it. She said, "I dwell among my own people," as much as to say, "I am satisfied with my lot; all I want is my family and my friends around me; I dwell among my own people."

Oh, what a rebuke to the strife for precedence in all ages! How many there are who want to get great architecture and homes furnished with all art, all painting, all statuary, who have not enough taste to distinguish between Gothic and Byzantine and who could not tell a figure in plaster of Paris from Palmer's "White Captive" and would not know a boy's penciling from Bierstadt's "Yosemite." Men who buy large libraries by the square foot, buying these libraries when they have scarcely enough education to pick out the day of the month in the almanac! Oh, how many there are striving to have things as well as their neighbors or better than their neighbors, and in the struggle vast fortunes are exhausted and business firms thrown into bankruptcy and men of reputed honesty rush into astounding forgeries! Of course, I say nothing against refinement or culture. Splendor of abode, sumptuousness of diet, lavishness in art, neatness in apparel—there is nothing against them in the Bible or out of the Bible. God does not want us to prefer mud hovel to English cottage or untanned sheepskin to French broadcloth or husks to pineapple or the clumsiness of a boor to the manners of a gentleman. God, who strung the beach with tinted shell and the grass of the field with the dew of the night and hath exquisitely tinged morning cloud and robin redbreast, wants us to keep our eye open to all beautiful sights and our ear open to all beautiful cadences and our heart open to all elevating sentiments.

Great in Piety.

But what I want to impress upon you, my hearers, is that you ought not to inventory the luxuries of life among the indispensables, and you ought not to depreciate this woman of the text, who, when offered kingly preferment, responded, "I dwell among my own people." Yes, this woman of the text was great in her piety. Just read the chapter after you go home. Faith in God, and she was not ashamed to talk about it before idolaters. Ah, woman will never appreciate what she owes to Christianity until she knows and sees the degradation of her sex under paganism and Mohammedanism! Her very birth considered a misfortune. Sold like cattle on the shambles. Slave of all work, and at last her body fuel for the funeral pyre of her husband. Above the shriek of the fire worshippers in India, and above the rumbling of the Jugger nauts I hear the million voiced groan of wronged, insulted, broken hearted, downtrodden woman. Her tears have fallen in the Nile and Tigris, the La Plata, and on the steppes of Tartary. She has been dishonored in Turkish garden and Persian palace and Spanish Alhambra. Her little ones have been sacrificed in the Indus and the Ganges. There is not a groan, or a dungeon, or an island, or a mountain, or a river, or a lake, or a sea but could tell a story of the outrages heaped upon her. But, thanks to God, this glorious Christianity comes forth, and all the chains of this vassalage are snapped, and she rises from ignominy to exalted sphere and becomes the affectionate daughter, the gentle wife, the honored mother, the useful Christian. Oh, if Christianity has done so much for woman, surely woman will become its most ardent advocate and its sublimest exemplification!

WAR AND SURGERY.

New Conditions Developed by the Improvements of Recent Years.

It is quite likely that during the progress of the present war there will be entirely new experiences in the character and treatment of the wounds inflicted in battle as compared with those of 30 years ago. Since that time the destructive machinery of the battlefield has been brought to such a degree of perfection in regard to distance of range, accuracy of aim and power of penetration that the percentage of such as may receive slight wounds, from which recovery may be possible, will be exceedingly small in proportion to such as are destined to be killed outright. It will be a question of wholesale slaughter, in which the winner can show the greatest amount of annihilation in the shortest possible time. The mill that has the best grinding power will be the first to receive the prize. The game is to be played with stakes in job lots. It is to be a wholesale business entirely, the mere retail exhibitions of personal bravery, individual tact or military genius being virtually unnecessary for the desired end. The best equipped machine shop will turn out the most goods. Hence it will be impossible to estimate the amount of damage that may be done or the number of lives that may be sacrificed. The wounds will be on a large scale and numerous in proportion. Especially will this be the case on the battleships under fire. Extensive lacerations from exploding shells, submarine mines and torpedoes and splinters of steel and wood will be the rule. The wide areas of tissue involved and the corresponding intensity of shock will necessitate new rules for operative interference and new methods of surgical technique. Comparatively speaking, amputation will be more necessary than resection.

When once the danger of operation itself is past, aseptic surgery will abundantly demonstrate its opportunities. What is lost in one direction will be gained in another. Hospital gangrene, the dreadful bane of wound treatment in our late war, will be virtually impossible, and suppurating stumps will no longer propagate their poisonous influences. Intestinal surgery has also elevated itself almost to a science, and death on the field, virtually inevitable before, is now most effectually thwarted by the modern and ingeniously skillful methods of the present day. Thus, while the war may inflict larger and more dangerous wounds than ever before, there is a comfort in contemplating the compensatory balance of odds in favor of the corresponding advances in operative methods and the improved technique of wound treatment.

The experiences along the new lines of surgical procedure will be of the greatest interest to the profession in demonstrating on a large scale the value of those general principles upon which the recent surgical advances have been based. Every pains will be taken to give all available information on these points to the readers of The Medical Record. Aside from arrangements for special correspondence from the field, we are particularly gratified to state that a representative of this journal, himself one of the operating surgeons on the Solace, the new hospital ambulance ship, will furnish our readers with such surgical data as may be interesting, suggestive or instructive.—Medical Record.

Anæsthetic From South America.

The latest thing in this line is named eucaine, prepared from a South American plant, and in its local action similar to cocaine, but without any of the poisonous effects of the latter, even though employed in much larger doses. The severest test as yet reported, was the amputation at the lower third of the leg of a man 68 years old without the use of chloroform or ether, followed by rapid and painless healing of the stump. As much of the eucaine was put into two or three tablespoonfuls of water as the water would dissolve, and with a hypodermic syringe a few drops of the solution were injected under the skin. About an inch from the center of the incision another was made, then another, until the limb was girdled by them at the place where amputation was intended. After waiting five minutes to allow of the superficial tissues becoming insensible the needle was thrust deeply into the muscles and injections made. In a few minutes all that portion of the leg, including three or four inches above and below the ring of injections, was found to be destitute of feeling, and the operation of cutting on the limb was proceeded with exactly as with chloroform. When the deep tissues were cut into, a slight smarting sensation was experienced a few times, but immediately relieved by the application of a little more of the solution to the seat of the discomfort.

A Coptic Prayer.

I have written with my hand, and the writing bears witness to me, because one day I shall leave it and depart.

With what strength my hand has written, when my hand shall perish my strength is still there.

And there is no scribe that will not pass away, but what his hands have written will remain forever.

Write nothing with thy hand but that which thou wilt be well pleased to see at the resurrection.

I wrote, and I thought there was no harm, because my hand will perish one day, and its writing will remain.

And I knew that God will bring it forth tomorrow. What then—oh, that I had considered—what defense will it make?

The Lord Jesus Christ, may he cause this holy copy to avail for the saving of the soul of the wretched man who wrote it!

And lighten the eyes of his mind to know the mystery of his interpretation and the understanding of his spiritual secret and make him worthy to strive in knowing for himself and him who shall read in it!—From Coptic Version of New Testament.

The Nile Valley.

I do not myself believe that our generation will get much value out of the Nile valley. For in what does the Sudan consist? It is, as it were, a single thread of blue silk drawn across a great brown rug, and even the blue thread itself is brown for many months in the year. Where the waters of the Nile soak into the banks there grow thorn bushes and poisonous weeds. Where the inhabitants splash the water over their scrappy fields—perhaps 50 yards square—there are hard won crops. This belt of vegetation is rarely more than a few hundred yards broad. And the rest is desert—miserable, aching, desolate desert. There is plenty of room to lie down and die in. But it is no place for a man to live in.—"The Fashoda Incident," by Lieutenant Winston Spencer-Churchill, in North American Review.

A New Peach Pest.

Michigan has developed a new peach pest which arrests the growth of the fruit when it is about the size of a hazelnut, thus producing a crop locally known as "little peaches." It was first noticed about two years ago, and this year its ravages were alarmingly extensive. So far no remedy has been found for it, though expert investigation and experiment are not wanting. In Saugatuck township during the present season more than 4,000 trees were affected.

CORNCOB MEAL.

Used For Making Maple Sugar, Coffee and Tobacco.

"We are constantly meeting with fakes and fakirs," said a young Wall street broker the other day, "but one of the slickest schemes that I have ever come across was a corncob mill in Cairo, Ills. The way I became acquainted with the business was through a friend of mine out there, who was interested in the deal and who picked me up, a young chap without any money, and made me the purchasing agent in Chicago."

"It was a long time before I myself knew the wherefore of the mill. It was erected in an inaccessible place, two or three miles out from Cairo, and a board fence ten feet high was built around it. The company had its own private wires to Chicago, Kansas City and New Orleans, and every detail of the business was scrupulously kept secret. The employees themselves did not know what use the corncobs were put to. They merely knew that large quantities of cobs were sent in, but the company gave it out that they were seeking to invent a new process for paper pulp, and that silenced questions."

"This was not the only use for the corncob meal, however. The company furnished it straight to one concern out in Kansas City and to another down in New Orleans. It was part of my business, however, to find out the disposition that was made of the meal, and this is the strange part of my story. The firm out in Kansas City showed me a large vat and a distilling apparatus. In the vat coffee berries were placed and boiled. The drip, which was strong black coffee, passed by means of the distiller over to another vat containing nothing but this corncob meal. The latter became saturated with the coffee juice. Both berries and meal were dried, and the boiled berries were placed upon the market as a cheaper grade of coffee, while the meal was put up in packages and sold for ground coffee."

"The firm in New Orleans had a similar scheme, except that it made use of the stems of tobacco leaves. You know that in cigar and other tobacco factories the leaves are stemmed and the stems are sold to snuff manufacturers. But this firm boiled the stems, distilling them off into a vat containing corncob meal. The result was sold as tobacco under a brand you'd easily recognize were I to mention it."

"Another curious use for corncobs I discovered in Chicago when I was doing the buying. I went around to all the big grain elevators and contracted to take their cobs at $1 per car. All you had to do was to run your car on the siding next to the elevator when they opened a shoot and fill the car with cobs in a very few minutes. So you see there was very little expense attached to it, as the elevator people helped load the cars in order to get rid of the cobs. But I was greatly surprised one day to find that I had a rival who was trying to bull the market. He had gone to the elevator men and offered them $1.25 per car for the cobs. I hunted him up and laughingly told him that I didn't know there was another fool in town looking for corncobs. Later on he told me the use he made of them. He showed me three or four immense kettles in which he made sirup out of the commonest and coarsest brown sugar. Into the sirup he dumped his cobs, broken up into little bits. The result, after straining, was one of the best imitations of maple sirup that I ever struck. It tasted exactly like the genuine."

The firm that I worked for paid $50,000 for its plant and declared a small dividend the first year. The second year it paid 250 per cent dividend. It ran along swimmingly until the Illinois legislature passed a law prohibiting the exportation of adulterated food stuffs.

THE WORDY WARFARE

Between Major General Miles and Commissary General Eagan.

EAGAN SAYS MILES IS A LIAR.

He Declares the Commander of the Army Unfit For Decent Society.
Should Be Put Out of the Army—His Arraignment Carefully Prepared.

Washington, Jan. 13.—Commissary General C. P. Eagan yesterday reappeared before the war investigating commission to answer the charges of General Nelson A. Miles concerning the commissary supplies furnished the army during the recent war. General Eagan's statement furnished the sensation of the war commission's history and was regarded by old army officers as one of the most remarkable attacks ever made in the history of the service.

General Eagan's statement to the commission was a bitter personal attack upon General Miles, so entirely unqualified both as to scope and language that the war commission returned the document to Eagan, instructing him to expunge the objectionable language.

The subject in controversy was General Miles' already famous "embalmed beef" testimony and the letters and documents supporting it. General Miles had charged that the canned and refrigerated meats sent to the army in Cuba and Porto Rico were unfit for use, that they were preserved by the use of chemicals, and that they had "been bought and sent to the army under pretense of an experiment."

This reflection upon both the ability and honesty of the commissary department had angered General Eagan and caused him to request to be recalled to reply to General Miles' charges. That his statements concerning the commanding general were not the result of a sudden outburst of passion was clearly shown by the fact that General Eagan read his remarks from a carefully prepared typewritten copy.

Not the least remarkable phase of General Eagan's statement was the language in which it was couched. There was scarcely a phrase that would not have been characterized as sensational in an ordinary official utterance. After declaring that if General Miles' by every honest man, barred from the clubs, barred from the society of decent people, and so ostracised that the street bootblack would not condescend to speak to him, for he has fouled his own nest, he has aspersed the honor of a brother officer without a particle of evidence or fact to sustain in any degree his scandalous, libelous, malicious falsehood that this beef or anything whatever was furnished the army under 'the pretense of experiment.'"

General Eagan, referring to newspaper attacks, asserting that the secretary of war had nothing whatsoever to do with the furnishing of refrigerated meats or tinned meats. Nor had he attempted to control the contracts, awards or purchases, and in this connection in heated language he attacked three New York newspapers and their editors and proprietors, whom he said should be indicted and tried for treason.

"Having traversed General Miles' statements," he said, "having shown him to be a liar, having demonstrated the animus that pervades the whole matter, I now go back to his statement that in his judgment food was one of the serious causes of so much sickness and distress of the troops. The design to say, to imply, to assert, to insinuate that sickness was caused for such reason in Porto Rico is to make an assertion wholly untrue, devoid of facts, devoid of truth, and can only be prompted by a base motive and under cover of the qualifications, in my judgment."

General Eagan said General Miles legally had no such control of the purse as he assumed in Porto Rico, nor does the law authorize him to set aside food furnished under the law, but it does determine how to hold accountable the party furnishing improper food.

General Eagan concluded as follows: "The damage that has been done by these statements is believed to be very great, but I indulge the hope and the belief that my statement will offset the statements made by General Miles, and will, in some measure at least, do justice to others that have been wronged, maligned and libeled. For myself, I content myself with expressing my profound belief that either General Miles or I should be put out of the service; either he or I am right; either he dishonors his uniform with his false statements and libels or I dishonor mine in feeding soldiers with poisonous beef, causing their sickness, and doing so under 'pretense of experiment.'"

Taking Her Husband's Place.

"It was in The Westminster Gazette, was it not," writes a correspondent, "that I read the other day of Mrs. Creighton's kindly offering to supply her husband's place at a confirmation? From all I know of that good lady I can quite believe the story to be true. But here is a fact: A few years ago, in a certain parish in Herts, the aged and infirm vicar one Sunday began the communion service. He had just consecrated the elements when his wife in her bonnet and shawl appeared within the altar rails. 'Sit down, my dear. Your rheumatism is very bad today. I'll finish the service.' And then and there she administered the bread and wine to the astounded and kneeling communicants and finished up with the proper prayers and the blessing. This actually took place within the last ten years." Westminster Gazette.

Empress Elizabeth's Coffin.

The mortal remains of the late empress of Austria have now been consigned to their final resting place in the gloomy vaults beneath the Capuchin church in the Mehlmarkt of Vienna. The bronze sarcophagus which was specially made to receive the coffin stands beside the tomb of the deceased crown prince and its somber exterior is relieved by wreaths of wrought silver, lions' heads and escutcheons bearing the imperial arms. Upon the richly engraved lid lie a crucifix and a medallion whereon are inscribed in golden letters the name and titles of the empress, with the dates of her birth, marriage and death, the record being in Latin.—London Chronicle.

GENERAL C. P. EAGAN.

statement was true he (Eagan) "should be drummed out of the army and incarcerated in state prison," the commissary general continued:

"If his statement is false, as I assert it to be, then he should be drummed out of the service and incarcerated in prison with other libelers. His statement is a scandalous libel reflecting upon the honor of every officer in the department who has contracted for or purchased this meat, and especially on the commissary general—myself. In doing so General Miles is a liar when he makes this statement. I wish to make it as emphatic and as coarse as the statement itself. I wish to force the lie back into his throat, covered with the contents of a camp latrine.

"I wish to brand it as a falsehood of whole cloth, without a particle of truth to sustain it, and unless he can prove his statement he should be denounced

URGING RECOGNITION.

Aguinaldo's Representative Is Persistent in His Demands.

THE SPANIARDS HAVE NO TITLE,

And Therefore Cannot Transfer the Philippines to the United States. The Insurgents, Declares Agoncillo, Have Had Control For Seven Months.

Washington, Jan. 16. Senor Felipe Agoncillo, the representative of General Aguinaldo in Washington, has filed with the state department a memorandum setting forth at length the reasons for his claim that the Philippine government should be recognized by the United States. Accompanying the memorandum is a letter in which Senor Agoncillo states he has received no reply to his communication of Jan. 6, in which he asks that a suitable time be arranged when he could be presented to the president and heard upon his claims. In view of the position in which the representatives of the American government and the representatives of the Philippine government find themselves upon the island at this time, he urges that the matter be given immediate attention.

The letter and the memorandum have been listed as official documents in the state department, and although the officials have themselves refused to make them public they have nevertheless expressed a willingness for Senor Agoncillo to do so if he desired. The papers are now in the hands of Secretary Hay. The memorandum is along the same lines as statements heretofore made public by the Filipino representative.

Senor Agoncillo asserts the Filipinos established and for seven months have maintained a form of government resembling the American, in that it is based upon the right of the people to rule; that Spain, having at the time of the signing of the treaty of peace possession of only one port, and the remainder of the Philippines except Manila being in possession of the Philippines republic, Spain could give no title to the United States for the islands, and that having no title to give her claim cannot be rendered better by the ratification of the treaty of peace.

ILOILO NATIVES PEACEFUL.

Some Officials Willing to Accept an American Protectorate.

Manila, Jan. 16.—Official dispatches just received here from Iloilo, Island of Panay, indicate that the natives are disposed to be friendly, although absolutely opposed to the landing of the United States forces without orders from Malolos, the seat of the so-called Filipino national government. Some of the officials at Iloilo are not in accord with the revolutionary government, but are willing to accept an American protectorate and to go to state the case to Aguinaldo if furnished transportation by the Americans.

The United States transports Newport, Arizona and Pennsylvania, with the Eighteenth infantry, the Iowa battalion, the Sixth artillery and a detachment of the signal corps, constituting General Miller's expedition, are anchored close to Guimaras Island, between Panay and Negros, where an excellent water supply is obtainable. The natives, though indisposed primarily to furnish the Americans with fresh supplies, now permit the American officers to go ashore, and furnish them with an escort during the day time.

A Disastrous Tornado.

Longview, Tex., Jan. 16.—A tornado passed through this county Friday from the southwest, four miles north-west of Kilgore. The tornado demolished a tenement house on the Moore place, in which were a woman named Mrs. McCune and five children, dangerously injuring all, and perhaps fatally injuring Mrs. McCune. Acres of forest trees were uprooted and everything was swept before the wind's fury. The rain was the heaviest ever witnessed, and the creeks are so swollen that communication is impossible with the southern part of the country.

Reducing Time to Havana.

New York, Jan. 16.—At noon today a train service was started from Jersey City over the Pennsylvania railroad and the Plant system which will reduce the time of travel to Havana by three hours. Hitherto the train making ship connections at Tampa for Havana has left Jersey City at 9 a. m., but the New York and Florida special, which began service today, will by increased speed make the same ship connections, though starting three hours later. All space in this first train is taken, and state rooms are fully engaged until late in February.

Egyptian Forces Defeated.

London, Jan. 16.—The Morning Leader publishes the following dispatch from Cairo: "Rumors are in circulation here that on Dec. 28 the Dervishes under Emir Fedil, on the Blue Nile, defeated the Egyptian forces, the Tenth Soudanese battalion being entirely destroyed. It is reported that reinforcements are being hurried up to the scene and that another battle is imminent."

Bloody Fight With Strikers Feared.

Portland, Ind., Jan. 16.—Bloodshed is feared here if the Red Key Glass company, whose employees are on a strike against a reduction in wages, attempt to start the factory with men imported from Pennsylvania, as the owners assert they will do. The company has applied to the sheriff for protection for the new men, but has been refused.

Bank Teller's Heavy Shortage.

Montreal, Jan. 16.—Albert E. Mussen, teller of the savings department of the Merchants' bank, has been arrested. There is a shortage in his accounts, which, it is said, will amount to $60,000. His relatives are wealthy.

Filipinos Come to See McKinley.

San Francisco, Jan. 16.—Three arrived from Europe on Saturday three emissaries of Aguinaldo—Senor Morto, Senor Lowde and Senor Luid—en route to Washington on a secret mission.

Nearly 102 Years Old.

Utica, N. Y., Jan. 16.—Mrs. Emily J. Mosely, who would have been 102 years old had she lived until April, died at the Home For the Homeless last night.

Could Tell a Good Horse.

While he was presiding elder in this district the late Luke Hitchcock lived at Lee Center, in Lee county, and rode and drove about the circuit. A Mount Morris man, singularly enough, referred to him as a good jockey, not that he was inclined to horse racing, but that he was the best judge of horseflesh in the district.

"Luke Hitchcock rode and drove the best horses I have ever seen in the county," said Major Charles Newcomer to The Record correspondent. "His turn-outs were of the best.

"He was fond of telling jokes on himself. When he first came here, he was quite slender and did not have the dignified bearing which afterward came to him. One day after fording the river near the old lighthouse, riding a fine horse, he heard a furious clattering of hoofs behind him. He turned and saw a backwoodsman riding toward him.

"'Hello!' the stranger shouted. 'Be you the new preacher?'

"'Yes.'

"'Well, I swan! You look awful green!' and the stranger wheeled and rode away."—Chicago Record.

SEVENTEEN LIVES LOST

by the Capsizing of the British Ship Andelina.

WRECKED WHILE AT ANCHOR.

The Vessel, While Waiting to Be Loaded, Was Upset in a Squall While Those on Board Were Sleeping—Not a Soul Rescued.

Tacoma, Wash., Jan. 16.—The British ship Andelina, 2,345 tons, of Nova Scotia, Captain G. W. Stalling, sank in 22 fathoms of water in front of the St.
Paul mill wharf, and the captain, mate and 15 of the crew were drowned. The accident occurred during the night.
The vessel came here in ballast from Shanghai. The ballast had been discharged, and the ship was lying at anchor waiting to be towed into the dock.

A terrific gale raged on the bay, the wind blowing 36 miles an hour. Two great boom logs were placed beside the Andelina, one on each side. During the gale between 2 and 4 in the morning one of the logs went adrift, causing the ship to careen and to capsize with very little warning to the crew. The vessel was entirely without ballast and the hatches were open. All on board were caught like rats in a trap and had no chance to escape. The ship simply turned over, the water poured in the open hatches and she sank.

The full list of those lost by the capsizing of the vessels is as follows:
Captain G. W. Stalling, of Annapolis, Md.; E. H. Crowe, aged 39, Londonerry, N. S., first mate; E. G. Doe, aged 23, Blackpool, Eng.; Memey Jos-lim, Victoria, B. C.; Joseph M. A.
Hollyere, Ostend, apprentice; Richard Reginald Hanze, Ostend, Belgium, son, St. John's, N. F., seaman.

The ship, which was of English build and worth probably $150,000, entered the port several days ago. She was to have loaded wheat for Europe. Friday the Andelina was taken to the dredge dock and all her ballast removed and the hold cleared preparatory to receiving cargo. She was then towed to anchorage several hundred yards northeast of the St. Paul and Tacoma Lumber company's dock, at which point the disaster overtook her.
She had out, according to the best information obtainable, the starboard anchor, weighing at least two tons, drifted to either side of the vessel were attached the ballast logs used to keep the ship upright during the absence of cargo or ballast.

The ship was riding easily when the tippers of other vessels anchored in the bay retired for the night. When daylight dawned no signs of the An-delina were visible. Over the spot where the ship rode at anchor the night before only a danger signal buoy lamp was visible. When the absence of the ship was discovered Captain Doty and Captain Burley took the tug Fairfield and made an investigation, and it was soon determined beyond possibility of doubt that the ship had gone to the bottom. One of the ballast logs was found. To this dangled part of the chain by which it was originally fastened to the ill fated ship. In addition one of the lifeboats, a mattress with the name of the ship on it and several arms were found.

When the Andelina entered this port she was manned by a crew of nearly 40 men. Some deserted and others were discharged until only 18 were left. The only list of victims obtainable is that given by Percy B. Buck, an apprentice, who was injured two days prior to the disaster and taken to one of the Tacoma hospitals.

Fears For a Missing Yacht.

Louisville, Ky., Jan. 16.—The pleasure yacht Paul Jones left Louisville in December for a trip along the Gulf coast via the Ohio and Mississippi rivers.
She carried as passengers Colonel
Harry Yocum and daughter, of St.
Louis; Miss Woodland, of Chicago;
Miss Taggart, of Indianapolis, daughter of Mayor Taggart, and a crew of four men. It was the intention of Colonel Yocum to visit the various winter resorts along the Gulf coast. Louisville people have received intelligence of the yacht passing out of the Mississippi on Jan. 3. Nothing has been heard of the yacht since then, and grave fears are entertained for the party's safety.

The Union Central Life Insurance
Co., of Cincinnati, is now thirty-one years old, and has $20,000,000 assets, with a surplus of $3,000,000. The company is now doubling in size every five years, and the insurance reports show that it makes the highest interest rate and lowest death rate for its policy holders of all the old line companies; hence it is one of the best managed financial institutions in this country to-day, and can but make the best returns to policy holders. Its size, location, management make it an ideal company for investment, besides furnishing the very best protection to the loved ones in the event that death overtakes you early, or, as a saving to come to you in your old age, should an All-Wise Providence spare you that long.

To-day is the time to insure. Tomorrow may never come. Death may overtake you, bad health may claim you as a victim at any moment;
hence, do not put off such an important step, but take your insurance right away.

Call or write to R. S. Tuck, General Agent, Chamber of Commerce Building, Richmond, Va., at once, and learn of the matchless advantages of the Union Central and investigate the new guaranty policy they write, which is unquestionably the most model policy contract issued by any company, and if you need any assistance the company will always help you in carrying it. R. L. CLIBORNE, Local Agent,
Blackstone, Va.

RECOMMENDATION: The editor of the Recorder believes the Union
Central to be one of the best companies in the country, and is as well pleased with his policy as with the one he holds in the Equitable, Northwestern, and New York Life.

WEST VIRGINIA'S DEADLOCK.

Republican Senate Awaits the Action of the Democratic House.

Charleston, W. Va., Jan. 16.—The legislature was in session four days last week without doing anything. This deadlock is due to the senatorial contest, and it will continue all this week. The Democrats hold their senatorial caucus on Wednesday night, and the Republicans on Thursday night, but the balloting in joint session does not begin until Monday, Jan. 23. On the certificates of election the Republicans have a bare majority on joint ballot for senator. The senate is Republican and the house Democratic, so that in unseating minority members in both houses both parties have opportunities for retaliation, and this condition is what prevents both bodies from proceeding with business. The house on Saturday failed on its first contested seat case, because two Democratic members refused to vote and another was paired with a Republican, but it is thought that Logan, Democrat, will be given the seat of Via, Republican, and that other contest cases in the house will be settled immediately afterward. Meantime the Republican majority in the senate is waiting the results in the house.

While this contest is going on at the state house the headquarters of the senatorial candidates are crowded day and night with the enthusiastic contestants. Ex-Congressman McGraw is having things very much his own way on the Democratic side for Senator Faulkner's place. It would be necessary for the house to unseat more members than the senate for McGraw or any Democratic aspirant to have any chance. On the Republican side there are more candidates. Revenue Commissioner N. B. Scott and Governor G. W. Atkinson are the leading candidates, with Caldwell, Peffenbarger, Floyd, Gaines, Hughes and others also in the field. The dark horse is Judge Nathan Goff, who is not a candidate, but whose friends regard as the final solution of the pending complications.

GENERAL SOUTHERN NEWS.

Eminence, Mo., Jan. 11.—O. H. Baker, the wife murderer, was hanged yesterday in the presence of 2,000 persons. On the scaffold he cursed the country and the people until the drop fell.

Roanoke, Va., Jan. 12.—It is reported from Floyd county that a man named Underwood, who was suspected of being an informer on moonshiners, was seized by a gang of the latter and his throat cut. He was then thrown across a log and decapitated with an ax.

Nashville, Tenn., Jan. 11.—Each house of the legislature balloted for United States senator yesterday, with the following result: In the senate: W. B. Bate, Democrat, 25; G. N. Tillman, Republican, 3. In the house: Bate, 69; Tillman, 20. Senator Bate was formally elected in joint convention today.

Gulf, N. C., Jan. 12.—Mrs. Nancy Welch, a white widow and mother of five children residing about three miles from Harper's Cross Roads, in Chatham county, was outraged and murdered about 5 o'clock Tuesday afternoon by Henry Jones, a negro. The negro was found at his home, near Richmond, yesterday. He confessed his guilt and was carried back to the scene of the murder and hanged by a crowd of about 50 men.

Lexington, Ky., Jan. 16.—The war which has been bitterly waged between temperance people and saloon men over the Sunday closing law culminated yesterday. Through the evidence of Bible students who acted as spies the temperance people obtained over a hundred indictments against saloonists before the last grand jury. Last night spies started on their regular Sunday rounds, and met with a warm reception. They were badly beaten and stoned in some places. It is not known what action will result.

Charleston, W. Va., Jan. 14.—Judge Thomas Jefferson Mackey, the South Carolina jurist who was indicted at the November term of the circuit court of this county on the charge of bigamy, left here yesterday in company with Deputy Sheriff S. C. Young for Martinsburg, where he was admitted to bail before Judge Faulkner. He married Katherine Porterfield in July last, and a few weeks after a woman claiming to be his lawful wife turned up in New York. She sued him for a divorce, which has been granted in that place, and now he will be remarried to Miss Porterfield.

Savannah, Ga., Jan. 9.—A severe cyclone is reported to have passed over a section of Liberty county, some 20 miles south of this city, Saturday afternoon. The wind attained a velocity of not less than 75 to 80 miles an hour. At Johnston Station, between here and Waycross, it is estimated the wind blew 90 miles an hour for ten minutes. In the village considerable damage was done. The storm swept through a turpentine country, and the trees were leveled in the path of the wind for miles. The path, however, was fortunately narrow, being not more than one or two hundred yards wide.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 7.—Rev. Dr. Moses H. Hoge, pastor of the Second Presbyterian church, died yesterday, aged 81 years. He was one of the best known citizens of Richmond, and his death is universally mourned. The recognized approach of death was unable to rob him of the measure of dignity that characterized his life. Two weeks or more ago he himself dictated a notice for use in the local papers concerning his condition, which forecast his death. He not only set his own house in order for the grim visitor, but consulted the officers of his church as to his successor, and calmly awaited the inevitable.

Munfordville, Ky., Jan. 12.—It now seems that the murder of Lydia Bracher, who died as the result of a criminal operation over a year ago, will be avenged by the law. Last week Professor McClure, a well known educator of this section, was convicted of performing the operation and given a life sentence in the penitentiary. Yesterday Rev. Gregory Doyle, who was the author of the girl's shame, and who is on trial here for murder, admitted on the witness stand his part in the crime, endeavoring as much as possible to lay the blame on McClure. Doyle was formerly one of the most prominent divines in Hart county.

Reported Desertion of Soldiers.

Hong Kong, Jan. 13.—The Filipinos here say that ten American volunteers jumped overboard from the transports bound from Manila to Iloilo, swam ashore and said they had not volunteered to fight the Filipinos. The report is not confirmed.

Spanish Islands For Sale.

Madrid, Jan. 16.—The government on the reassembling of the cortes will immediately ask, says La Reforma, authority to sell the Marianne (Ladrones), Caroline and the Peel islands, since Spain is powerless to maintain a sufficient force to defend them. The government arrived at this decision in consequence of advices from General Rios that an army of 4,000 men, a man-of-war and two gunboats would be necessary for the purpose.

Chinese Murder Belgian Missionary. Brussels, Jan. 16.—Word has been received here that a Belgian missionary, Father Belbrouck, has been murdered by the Chinese at Hu-Peh, in the province of the same name, central China, and that the mission house has been burned.

CHAPTER 1.

1 The genealogy of Jesus Christ: 13 Mary's miraculous conception; Jesus is born: 21, 23 his names.

THE book of the generation of Jesus Christ, of David the son of David, the son of Abraham.

2 Abraham begat Isaac; and Isaac begat Jacob; and Jacob begat Judah and his brethren;

3 And Judah begat Phares and Zarah of a Canaanite woman; and Phares begat Esrom; and Esrom begat Arah;

4 And Arah begat Amminadab; and Amminadab begat Nahshon; and Nahshon begat Salmon;

5 And Salmon begat Booz of a Canaanite woman; and Booz begat Obed; and Obed begat Jesse;

6 And Jesse begat David the king; and David had a son who was called Solomon;

7 And Solomon begat Roboam; and Roboam begat Abiam; and Abiam begat Asa;

8 And Asa begat Josaphat; and Josaphat begat Joram; and Joram begat Ozias;

9 And Ozias begat Joash; and Joash begat Jeroboam; and Jeroboam begat Zedekiah;

10 And Zedekiah begat Matisias; and Matisias begat Amon; and Amon begat Josias;

11 And Josias begat Jechonias and his brethren about the time they were carried away to Babylon;

12 And after they were brought to Babylon, Jechonias the king begat Salathiel; and Salathiel begat Zorobabel;

13 And Zorobabel begat Abiud; and Abiud begat Eliakim; and Eliakim begat Azor;

14 And Azor begat Sadoc; and Sadoc begat Achim; and Achim begat Eliud;

15 And Eliud begat Eleazar; and Eleazar begat Matthan; and Matthan begat Jacob;

16 And Jacob begat Joseph the husband of Mary, of whom was born Jesus, who is called Christ.

17 So all the generations from Abraham to David are fourteen generations; and from David until the carrying away into Babylon are fourteen generations; and from the carrying away into Babylon unto Christ are fourteen generations.

18 ¶ Now the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise: When as his mother

Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost.

19 Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily.

20 But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost.

21 And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins.

22 All of all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying,

23 Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us.

24 Then Joseph, being raised from sleep, did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife;

25 And knew her not till she had brought forth her first-born son; and he called his name JESUS.

CHAPTER 2.

1 These things were done after Joseph, the husband of Mary, was brought out of Egypt.

NOW when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judaea in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem,

2 Saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him.

3 When Herod the king had heard these things, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him.

4 And when he had gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Christ should be born.

5 And they said unto him, In Bethlehem of Judaea: for thus it is written by the prophet,

6 And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Judah, art not the least among the princes of Judah: for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Israel.

7 Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, enquired of them diligently what time the star appeared.

8 And he sent them to Bethlehem, and

Facts and Questions

FOR

Parents and Pastors.

"It is not enough to educate. We must put an idea into our education if it is to be saved. That idea is the Son of God."—Dr. J. C. Kilgo in address before Virginia Conference.

- (1) Fatally Defective! What? All education that lacks the thought quoted above as its corner stone.
- (2) You desire your daughter to become a well educated woman. But do you not desire most of all that she shall be a well educated CHRISTIAN woman?
- (3) The spiritual character of the school which your daughter attends will greatly influence her work in this world and her location in the world to come.
- (4) As a christian man, do you not believe that God expects you to use the very best care in this important matter, and will hold you responsible for the selection you make? Have you a right to place her in any school which does not say with emphasis that growth in grace is above social polish and mere intellectual culture?
- (5) Can you conscientiously place her in a State school, which from its very nature ignores religious training, even if by so doing you should save $20 a year? If you can raise $122 to develop her intellect can you not raise $20 more to develop her soul at the same time?
- (6) The Methodist Church in the Virginia Conference has now a system of schools to which parents can safely entrust their children, "Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." They belong absolutely to the Church. They have been built solely to meet the needs of our people. They are not private schools in any sense of the word. They do not have that serious defect of private schools—LACK OF PERMANENCY. They do not die or pass into the hands of the State or of other parties when the owner dies, or gets tired of teaching, or fails to make a success of his work. In a nut-shell, they were, not established in order to make a fortune or as a means of making a living. They have only one aim—THOROUGH INSTRUCTION UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.
- (7) This system was established for your children. Will you give them the benefit of it? The Randolph-Macon Woman's College has been established for the higher education of women.

The Blackstone Female Institute

Is one of the two schools in the Conference for younger girls which belongs ABSOLUTELY to the Church. Its success has been great from the start. Of it the Board of Education of the Annual Conference spoke as follows:

"The Blackstone Institute is owned entirely by our Church. It is not in any sense a private corporation or stock company, but stands in the same relation to the Church as the Randolph-Macon system. While not in the Randolph-Macon system, the course of study is correlated with the Woman's College, and stands related to the latter as the academies to the college at Ashland. The Institute is in a most prosperous condition, having now, at the beginning of its fourth year, a patronage of 170. It is thoroughly Methodistic in ownership and spirit, every officer and teacher being an active member of our Church."

At a meeting of the Trustees of Randolph-Macon College, held June 17, 1896, the following resolution was adopted—viz:

"RESOLVED, That next to the institutions under our special care, we feel deepest interest in the Blackstone Female Institute, under the superintendency of Rev. James Cannon, Jr., which is owned entirely by our Church; and that we regard it and commend it to our people as holding a tributary relation to our Woman's College at Lynchburg, akin to that of our Academies to our College at Ashland."

Send Your Daughter to a Christian School!

THREE-FOLD WORK OF THE INSTITUTE.

- (1.) Gives Diploma of Graduation to all who complete the work of the Institute.
- (2.) Prepares for the Randolph-Macon Woman's College those desiring to take the higher work of that institution.
- (3.) Teachers' course—giving special training to those desiring to fit themselves to teach either in private or public schools.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

The greatness of God is a sufficient reason why man should stand in awe of him.—Rev. A. E. Myers, Collegiate, New York.

Mutual Relationship.

The only law of mutual relationship for nations, as well as for individuals, is the golden rule.—Rev. James Reed, Society of New Jerusalem, Boston.

The Thoughtful.

The disputations of theologians and theology do not command the attention or hold the respect of the thoughtful.—Rev. J. L. Jones, Unitarian, Chicago.

The Family and the Church.

Whatever destroys the family necessarily sweeps away the church and the state, and whatever upholds it gives permanence and grandeur to the others.—Rev. George B. Vosburgh, Denver.

Men's Best Happiness.

God offers men the best happiness, and this implies that he does not approve of all happiness. Hands full of dust must be emptied before they can be filled with jewels.—Dr. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago.

Joyous Christianity.

Christ came not to hush the laughter of innocent joy, but to fill our mouths with laughter and set all the joy bells ringing round the whole world and up to the gates of glory.—Rev. P. S. Henson, Baptist, Chicago.

God's Idea.

The idea of God holds a very large place in human life. It matters not how we got this idea. We have it and live in it. The idea emerges whenever we get at the conception of truth.—Dr. Patton, Methodist, Princeton, N. J.

Spiritual Purpose.

There is nothing more important than to have a spiritual purpose, to know why you have it and to be sure that it will pay you to make any sacrifice for its accomplishment.—Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

America a World Power.

From the seed long ago planted on this continent have been produced the highest types of manhood and womanhood the world has ever seen. That is what makes America a world power.—Rev. Dr. George C. Lorimer, Baptist, Boston.

Divine Calling.

The minister who has a true conception of his calling will not measure his success with the common standard of worldly renown, but, faithfully pursuing his divine calling, will strive to work acceptably to the Father of all.—Rev. C. G. Spieker, Lutheran, Scranton, Pa.

Love of Nature.

The universe is God's temple, and those who are alive to this thought cannot lift their eyes without feeling themselves encompassed with God. An infinite joy is lost to the world by want of the culture of the love of nature.—Rev. Dr. Madison C. Peters, Reformed, New York.

Seeking Happiness.

Happiness is the end we seek, and notwithstanding the sorrows and afflictions of this life we believe that when men shall develop the strength and determination to do even so well as they know much of the present sorrow and affliction will disappear.—Rev. George W. Stone, Unitarian, Kansas City.

Christ First.

To the Christian Christ must be first. To follow him is to adopt his methods. Believe in the omnipotence of right. Belong to a minority of righteousness. Train with Christ and the apostles. Trust him for the final outcome—his the scepter, his the crown. Above all, don't fight the devil with fire. He who proceeds on that plan will have an eternal job of it.—Rev. W. H. La Prade, Methodist, Shreveport, La.

Thankfulness.

No sentiment in the scale of human emotions is more important, more fundamentally educational, more spiritually quickening, than thankfulness. It germinates, develops, perfects character. It expresses reverence, assures justice, establishes harmony. "In everything give thanks" is one of Paul's grandest utterances. Impressed on the heart, it becomes the accompanying angel of every national and individual virtue.—Rev. Helen Van Anderson, Church of the Higher Life, Boston.

God's Promised Home.

We read of a celestial city with streets of alabaster and gold inlaid with precious gems, whose gates are of pearl, where music fills the air and the voices chosen are lifted in everlasting praise and all is happiness and joy. It is a glorious promise. But better than all is the assurance that God will be there, filling the place with the divine effulgence of his presence. This is the promise that awakens in man the hope of heaven. It is the longing to see God, to be near him, to feel his presence, that makes us yearn for a home above.—Rev. A. C. Welch, Methodist, Omaha.

The Way of Peace.

Men seek peace through compromise. This is often the path of wisdom. But compromise breaks down where a vital matter is the subject of dispute and one side is wholly right and the other wholly wrong. Henry Clay tried to solve the great questions of slavery and states rights, which divided the north and south by compromise, yet his splendid abilities failed to reach any result. It is useless to try to compromise with God. His claims are absolutely just, and you know they are. To be a half way Christian is to fail to be a Christian, or at any rate to fail of peace. The way of peace is to live as Christ did, who said, "I do always the things which please him." Over against these ways stands the divine way of peace, taking hold of the strength of God. It is the way of complete understanding. It is the way of thoroughness, intimacy, coming right up to God, whose holiness you dread, coming just as you are, and laying hold of the very strength you fear to meet.—Rev. W. T. Merrill, Presbyterian, Chicago.

A MEMORY.

The fire upon the hearth is low,
And there is stillness everywhere;
Like troubled spirits here and there
The firelight shadows fluttering go.
And as the shadows round me creep
A childish treble breaks the gloom.
And softly from a farther room
Comes, "Now I lay me down to sleep."
And somehow, with that little prayer
And that sweet treble in my ears,
My thought goes back to distant years,
And lingers with a dear one there;
Again I hear the child's Amen,
My mother's face comes back to me;
Crouched at her side I seem to be,
And mother holds my hand again.

O, for an hour in that dear place!
O, for the peace of that dear time!
O, for the childish trust sublime!
O, for a glimpse of mother's face!
Yet the shadows round me creep,
I do not seem to be alone,
Sweet magic of that treble tone—
And "Now I lay me down to sleep."

WILL THANK YOU.

REV. W. R. SMITHEY.

Had the death of Brother Smithey been reported a year or so ago, the brethren would not have been greatly surprised, as his health was known to be poor at that time. But it was thought that he had greatly improved, and the news was a great shock. He was in the prime of life, just having passed into the fifties. He had been a member of the Conference twenty-five years. Most of his work had been done in Southside Virginia, and he was greatly admired as a man and as a preacher. His sterling qualities were strong, clear thought; unaffected modesty, and purity of heart. The editor was not thrown with him but twice for any length of time, but was greatly impressed by these qualities then.

He died with the harness on. He preached in the morning, dined, went to his afternoon appointment, began his sermon, but was stricken down, and was taken to his brother-in-law's home, and died on Tuesday morning.

He was conscious but speechless, and wrote that he thought the trouble was acute indigestion.

The following tribute is from the pen of Brother James E. Clarke, of Cumberland, who knew and loved him:

"The characteristics of this dear brother are thoroughly illustrated in the statement of the Master. 'Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom there is no guile.' Brother Smithey was pastor of Cumberland Circuit four years, and it is no reflection on any of his brethren who have served this charge to say he was the beloved disciple. His life was an epistle read by all—quiet, sedate, even shrinking in his manners. His pious walk and conversation seasoned by the grace of God, like the mellow sunshine, stimulated all to higher aims who came in contact with him. He did good, because he was good; his piety and holy living inspired the membership to seek the secrets of Christ in everything. As one thinks so is he; his thinking was as pure as the dew; his vital breath was a prayer for purity. With the humility of the child, he became, under the disciplinary power of the Spirit, as strong in his faith as Elisha. He seemed utterly oblivious of his wonderful mental furnishings in his power of analysis and logical demonstration; he had few equals, yet his child-like simplicity of manners told that all was the gift of the Christ. His philosophy of living was the humiliation of self, that the grace of God, possessing the entire being, might be his glorying in the cross of Christ. His definition of following Christ was sacrifice; he sought not ease or preferment, because this was not his Master's way. He sought to do the will of Christ. Dear, sweet-spirited, loving disciple, your exaltation has come. The world is poorer in your leaving; heaven has an inhabitant qualified by sacrifice to associate with the blood-washed company."

MY FIRST PUPIL.

About four and a half years ago I started out on my first trip as principal of the Blackstone Institute. I had no pupils, and had many misgivings as to my adaptability for such work, and as to the probable results of the summer's labors. I went from the meeting in progress at Fletcher's chapel to the hospitable and godly home of Mrs. M. F. Gee, where I found that saintly man, Brother Thomas M. Beckham. He was then quite feeble, but was enjoying such care and kindness as only such women as Sister Gee knew how to show to the worn-out servants of the Lord. That evening I met all of the family, and among them Susie, the youngest daughter. Her bright face, modest demeanor, and sweet, obliging ways made her a most attractive girl, and I felt that if I could start out in my school work with such girls as she, that it would make the work easier in future years. Upon talking over the matter with her mother, I found that she was willing. If Susie, who was a great home child, could be persuaded to go. And so I talked with Susie, and found that while disliking to leave home, yet she was anxious to do what her mother thought best, and to be fitted to do whatever work God might have for her in the world. She was the first girl who said that she would trust me with the all-important matter of her training for life, and there sprang up between us a peculiar bond of affection, which was strengthened every year. She was my first pupil, and is the first name on the roll of the Blackstone Female Institute. And what a noble one she was to lead the roll. Her sweet and gentle modesty, her cheery smile, her unaffected unselfishness, enshrined her not only in the heart of the principal, but in the hearts of the whole school. No girl ever did more to make the Blackstone Institute a place where sincerity, unselfishness, and Christ-likeness should be the standards of conduct. Her life helped to create an atmosphere in the school, which has made it easier for all who come there to live nobly. In all her four years' work, from entrance until graduation, I never heard a word or saw a look that was not loyal, or that would influence any girl to anything but the best conduct. She received the medal for general deportment by the unanimous vote of the faculty, the ballot being taken secretly, without previous consultation. She stayed with us longer than most of the girls, for she was in low classes when she came, and so her influence has been felt personally by all the girls who have been in the school up to the new students of the present year.

She gave her heart to God when a little child. During her stay at the Institute she was continually preparing herself to work for God here, and to live with Him hereafter. She graduated on June 4, 1898, and had I been asked to pick out the girl most likely to have a long life, I should have settled upon her, because of her apparently strong constitution, her bright, happy disposition, and her noble character. But in less than three weeks she died of pneumonia, and instead of entering upon her work here, she entered into heaven, and became a partaker of the blissful inheritance of the saints on high. For that society she had been preparing. Year by year she had become more in earnest to fit herself to live with God. He thought her to be ready to do the work He had for her to do there, and so called her from her work here to fill her place in heaven. Why should our Father have done this? Was she not just ready to do great service for Him here? Would she not have been so helpful in the Church and Sabbath school, and would she not have elevated the tone of the social circle, and have been the joy and strength of her widowed mother's declining years? How such questions pour in upon us. We sometimes think that we could have planned it better, and could have saved so many tears and heartaches, and our homes would not be so lonely because our best loved ones have gone away, and we shall never see them more on earth. But our Father's love has given to us all our joys and blessings in the past, and that same rich love can so surround us that we can sing songs even in the night time, and can make even the valley of dryness to be a well.

Our first pupil was also the first of our graduates to pass over the river and enter the Father's house. May all that follow her through the halls of the Institute follow her also to the mansion of light.

Below are appended the resolutions adopted by the class of 1898 and by the school:

Whereas, our Heavenly Father, who is too wise to err and too loving to willingly afflict, has sent the angel reaper and gathered from earth to heaven our dear, sweet-spirited classmate, Susie Gee; be it

Resolved, That while our hearts are saddened when we remember that she has gone from us, we rejoice as we used to sing that "She has reached the fairer region, Far away, far away."

That while we extend our heartfelt sympathy to her own immediate family, we also feel that we are especially bereaved because the little circle which was so peculiarly our own is so soon broken.

That while we sorrow that we may never again gather for the sweet intercourse which has characterized our school life, we will all meet our loved one on the golden shore.

That we will let our lives be ruled by our hopes of reunion in the beyond.
Class of '98—Sadie Drummond Rue, Sadie Emory Harmon, Minnie Mapp Wescott, Henrietta Parramore Turner, Hattie Scarborough, Caroline Harris Binford, Annie Robbie Bridgeforth, Jessie Garland Adams, Ellen Irby, Sarah Virginia Irby, Lucy Hamie White, Fannie Worsham Hawthorne, Sue Duncan Hall, Lottie May Williams.

Whereas, our Heavenly Father has, in His love and wisdom, taken to the "better country" our dear young friend and schoolmate, Susie R. Gee; therefore, be it

Resolved, by the faculty and students of Blackstone Female Institute:

1. That while we deeply feel the loss of one who during her stay of four years among us adorned so beautifully the doctrine of our Lord and Saviour, and our hearts are sore that we shall see her face no more on earth, yet we feel that her work on earth was finished and the Lord had need of her above.

2. That we tender our deepest sympathies to her mother and other loved ones, and pray that the Comforter may be with them continually.

3. That this dispensation shall make us more tender and loving, more faithful and earnest; that at His coming we, like she, may be found about our Father's business.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, and that they be published in the Southern Methodist Recorder.

"SAINTS AIDING SATAN."

Mr. Editor.—The editorial with the above caption in the Recorder dated January 12, 1899, was timely, sensible, and true. Having been a country pastor for quite a number of years, I could appreciate your remarks suggested by the experience you had at that church on the occasion you referred to. Common sense in church matters is greatly needed to-day. The exercise of a little of it, together with the giving of a little money and little work, would greatly help the houses of God and His services in the country. The neglect of God's house, especially in rural sections, is a disgrace and a burning shame. Religious services held in cold drafts are not only dangerous to health, but such services cannot in the nature of the case be helpful, as they otherwise would be. That Satan has a great deal to do with the neglect of God's house and the cold drafts and filth which are a result of this neglect on the part of the people is too manifest to need to be argued. The uncomfortable condition of many of our churches in the country has much to do with making our rural congregations small in winter. It is risky to the health of old and feeble people to attend the services in cold weather at some of our churches, and however anxious as pastors we may be to have our people attend church services, when one thinks of the actual condition of things as they exist, no blame can be laid at the door of at least some of the absentees. To go in chilly atmospheres and sit in cold drafts for old and delicate persons is asking more than one ought to ask. Along this line of making comfortable and attractive our rural churches especially, there is an urgent and pressing need for reform. There is no reason existing for the cause of untidy, uncomfortable, and chilly houses of worship. The effect of having houses where people meet comfortable is seen in the good attendance upon the public schools in the country even when the weather is unfavorable.

Let our people of the country churches look and ponder these facts, and turn over a new leaf at once. Comfortable, neat, attractive church buildings mean so much in advancing the Lord's cause.

E. P. PARHAM.

Christie, Va.

The Secretary of the Board of Education has heard from less than one-half of the charges in the Conference. Very few of the town and city pastors have sent in their reports. Brethren are urged to send them in at once.

THE PRESIDING ELDERSHIP.

Please allow me space for a reply to an article which recently appeared in your columns, signed, "Twenty-Year Pastor."

He brings charges against a class of men heretofore regarded as Christian gentlemen, which, if true, ought to cause them to be banished from decent society. His charges are as follows:

1. Unworthy and incompetent.

He says the office, "as at present filled and used and abused in our Conference"—"the unworthy and incompetent men who are put in it," their "dry as dust sermons," etc.

2. Improper motives.

Putting men into office because of their "family connection with a big member of the Cabinet." Fondling one of these favorites, appointing or trying to appoint him to a place he cannot fill."

3. Stingy and mean.

"Close-fisted," "do not remember but one dollar outside of a collection at Conference" given by them. "Some very earnest appeals to be liberal, but they never set an example."

4. Unworthy of respect.

"Who can have any respect for a stingy preacher or member?" "The added burden which they impose upon the people, which no right-feeling or right-thinking man would for a moment think of doing." "Beg and beat" their way. "Sit around the depot all day waiting for an unwilling preacher." "Whistle to himself all the way." "Resume his whistling." "Would barely speak to the preacher at the Quarterly Conference," etc.

The above quotations will give some idea of the offensive epithets he has hurled against a class of men he derisively calls "the blonds," and this language used by a man who for "twenty years" has been preaching that Gospel whose cardinal principle is love, one of whose chief elements being this, that it "beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things." For nearly half a century I have been a Methodist, and from my childhood have learned to respect Methodist preachers. I call to mind the men who have filled, and are now filling, the office of presiding elder, and ask who are these men who are so unworthy and incompetent, so stingy and mean, so unworthy of respect in short, if this writer's judgment is correct, are neither Christians nor gentlemen. I think the quotations given above will fully justify these conclusions. If these things are true, the men ought to be expelled from Conference, and if not so, the writer of the article ought to be held responsible. Does he ever permit these men to visit his family? "Speak not evil one of another, brethren, for he that speaketh evil of his brother speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law." Here is the law, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another." "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples that ye love one another." A METHODIST.

I have read carefully and prayerfully the article in the Recorder of January 12th, on "The Presiding Eldership," signed, "Twenty-Year Pastor." It is cause for deepest grief to every right-thinking man of the Church, and especially of the Virginia Conference, that these things should be so. If they are not so, it is cause for loudest lamentation, that a man of our itinerant body could be found who would affirm them. If they are true to any extent of the men who have filled the office of presiding elder in our Conference, they ought to be known to the appointing power. Men like the "Twenty-Year Pastor," who counts himself at least among "the truest, bravest, most efficient, most loyal members of our Conference," ought to be true enough, efficient enough, and manly enough to go to the bishops of the Church and name the men in the eldership of the Conference of this stamp, and use all manly, Christian effort to rid the Church of such office-bearers. "For," says St. Paul, "if one of the members suffer, all suffer." If the men of the eldership have been guilty of such grievous faults—not to say egregious follies and heinous sins—ought not my brother in a spirit of kindness and brotherly love to call attention to it individually and personally, and not to allow sin on a brother? Ought he not, even at the risk of one's everlasting displeasure, to admonish one as a father, and thus, if possible, avert the dishonor such faults and follies bring in the Church "he loves better than his own life"?

We all commend the example of Nathan, the prophet, because he didn't put in the Imperial Gazette, nor in "The Eastern Star," that the thrones in the East were honeycombed with conjugal infidelity; that there were few of the kings and princes who did not live lives of impurity, and that even in the country between Gennesaret and the Mediterranean the thrones reeked with moral filth. But, knowing where the trouble was, he bravely approached his adulterous monarch, pointed his long, bony finger at him, and without blanching said, "Thou art the man!" What have we done with our Bibles? My Brother "Twenty-Year Pastor," how readest thou? "If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and"—put it in the papers? No—"go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother."

When you saw your presiding elder holding "on to the money the Church had given him to pay his way," keeping it "in his pocket," while the stewards, with long faces, "were devising some way to send" him to the next point, why did you not kindly take him aside and gently remind him that he had the funds "in his pockets" intended to meet this expense, and it was not right thus to divert them and subject the stewards to such embarrassment? Surely, such should be the time for the display of some of the high virtues of the itinerant brotherhood—truth, bravery, and efficiency!

When the "good brother" after "that trip" reported such a dull time with the elder, if you considered it a wrong so grievous as to deserve rebuke, why did you not do so? Was it because Paul had said, "Rebuke not an elder"? And "a worthy brother" who told you the elder pulled out a book, etc., why didn't you kindly let your unsuspecting elder know that the brother considered it discourteous? In the case of the elder who was kindly informed by the preacher that he had an engagement and couldn't meet him, etc., the evidence is heresay, and consequently unreliable, and especially the part of it regarding the elder's barely speaking to him at the Quarterly Conference. A true, brave, efficient Methodist itinerant, "not a sorehead," who "loves the Church better than his own life," who asks for nothing and would not whine if sent to the humblest appointment in the Conference, ought surely to have more regard for his own character than to venture in the public prints such an uncharitable assumption against a presiding elder. "The heart is deceitful and desperately wicked; who can know it?" Not a "Twenty-Year Pastor." "By their fruits"—not the bark, nor twigs—"shall ye know them." "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." "Let God be true and every man a liar"—even a "Twenty-Year Pastor," true as the truest and brave as the bravest; but let my brother "Twenty-Year Pastor" take the Lord's candle and go down into the labyrinthine windings of his heart and make diligent search; if he doesn't find "a root of bitterness" and wounded ambition and envy of presiding elders as big as the elder he is willing to hang on such insufficient testimony, then I'll ask all pardon for this conclusion as soon as he takes off his mask and discloses his real identity. But the judgment of brethren in the office and out will bear me out in the conclusion that no man free from bias and prejudice could give utterance to such statements respecting the eldership of our Church. And a thing that surprises me immeasurably is that men who profess to know these things and roundly affirm them to be true can so stultify themselves, crucify all manly independence, and outrage all sense of decency and propriety by remaining in a body so corrupt, receiving annually an appointment, and thereafter yearly spiritual oversight from men against whom they allege such things. A man, it seems to me, in the position of "Twenty-Year Pastor" must of necessity throw off his mask and step out into the arena and make his statements good; own that he has been mistaken, or step down and out of a body of itinerants so corrupt as to bow submissively to the rule and government of men, who "largely" are guilty of such grievous faults, not to say heinous sins against God and the Church.

"It is" not "for the good of Zion" that these things are written and aired out before the Church in the public prints, and they are mistaken who think they do the Church a service by so publishing these things. The exception of Brother J. T. Moore was well taken at our last Conference, that his elder had made statements regarding him before the open Conference which were admissible nowhere but in the stationing room. The same is true of all, and particularly of what "Twenty-Year Pastor" has to say of the presiding eldership.

Let us look more narrowly at the article. In paragraph three he as much as declares that the trouble is not with the office, but with the men who fill it; and by consequence that his discussion is not of the office, but of the "men who fill it," and more narrowly still, the "inefficient men."

Now, it is proper and promotive of the cause of truth in the public prints to discuss "The Presiding Eldership" in a manly, open, above-board way, as did Rev. W. H. Atwill not long since in the Richmond Christian Advocate. But the "abuses of the office" and the "inefficient men" who fill it are widely different, and it has been demonstrated by many egregious failures that it can't be done without besmirching the Church and her ministry, and "putting them to an open shame," and accordingly it ought not to be done. Besides, the public is not the tribunal before which to arraign the mistakes of the appointing power of the Church and the abuses of office and inefficient men.

Edited by WM. SMITH, LL. D.,
Classical Examiner of University of London.

By a special arrangement with the publishers, we will send the Southern Methodist Recorder for one year and Smith's Bible Dictionary for $2.00. Every family should have a copy of this great work. For description, see below:

The simple explanation of this work, unlike the expositions of a commentary, admit of no denominational or sectarian coloring, and it is therefore equally valuable to Bible readers of every diversity of belief.

This is, undoubtedly, the best work of its kind in the English language, and has no rival in importance for the elucidation of the scenes and facts of Scripture.

The work contains 1024 large octavo pages, over 150 illustrations and maps engraved especially for this work, and is handsomely and strongly bound in cloth. Price, $4.50.

"Twenty-Year Pastor" affirms that the office is filled largely by "inefficient men," "not taken from among the most efficient preachers and pastors," "the majority could not sustain themselves in the pastorate before they were appointed to the office." The statement here made, as explained by himself, is, that the majority of the men in the office are "inefficient;" that "complaint regarding their inefficiency is heard on almost every hand." He hints at wilfulness and deliberation in putting these "inefficient men" into the office, because they can no longer "walk" and "have to be carried." What thoughtful and unprejudiced man in our Conference can admit such a statement! Our bishops and their council, with all the facts before them, deliberately and wilfully choosing to the eldership of the Conference from year to year men the majority of whom they know to be unable to walk and must be carried! Who that accepts the truth of the statement can ever respect a Methodist bishop again? Rev. John C. Granbery, D. D., for fifteen years a Methodist bishop, engaged in that nefarious business and conspiring with Paul Whitehead, D. D., and A. G. Brown, D. D., and J. Powell Garland, D. D., and James H. Riddick, and seven other men who pass everywhere for true and brave men of the body—to pick out, select, and choose from among the Conference eleven men to fill the office of presiding elder, six at least of whom have become "inefficient," can't "walk," and have to be "carried" by "the truest, bravest, most efficient," and most loyal members of our Conference—like "Twenty-Year Pastor"! And think of the preachers and people of the districts enduring the quarterly visits and "dry-as-dust sermons" of these men, and submitting to their rulings, and bestowing their hospitalities and pushing them around (paragraph 7), and complimenting their effusions, and writing them up at District Conferences and in the Church papers, knowing at the same time their inefficiency, their weakness, their unworthiness! What a spectacle! the Bishop and his council setting up idols of wood, and stone, and "sounding brass," and the whole Church bowing down and worshipping them! Angels, turn your eyes away!

Compare the eleven presiding elders of the Conference at the last session with the body of preachers. Let "Twenty-Year Pastor" be made Bishop; let him preside over the Conference, disband the old panel entirely, and appoint every man new. I doubt not he would find it difficult to pick out eleven as good, all-round men, men of good preaching and executive ability, who would cheerfully accept the appointment and enter upon the duties and responsibilities of the office. I have been more than twenty years in the Conference, and in my humble judgment the men who have filled the office during that time have been largely men fully up to, if not above, the average in preaching, and who were far above the average in administrative ability. Among the departed, how many were superior to Joseph Lear, Robert Michaels, William B. Rowzie, Joseph H. Davis, Leo Rosser, D. D., L. S. Reed, E. P. Wilson, D. P. Wills, and P. A. Peterson,

D. D.? Take a few who have been in the presiding eldership and returned to the ranks: R. N. Sledd, D. D., F. M. Edwards, James O. Moss, J. D. Hank, James C. Reed, Joseph A. Proctor, E. M. Peterson, D. D., and W. E. Edwards, D. D.

Take some of the men now in Paul Whitehead, D. D., A. G. Brown, D. D., J. S. Hunter, Joseph H. Riddick, Joseph H. Amiss, etc.

Who will say that Joseph Lear, Robert Michaels, E. P. Wilson, L. S. Reed, and E. M. and P. A. Peterson were not in their day almost incomparable preachers? Who among us can excel Sledd, the Edwards, Moss, Proctor, and Reed in good, solid preaching? And who will deny that the men mentioned as now filling the office are not among our best preachers? And who among us so "wise to know what Israel ought to do"? Who among us were more acceptable pastors than most of the men named before their elevation to the eldership; and who have been more popular in the charges they have served since their return to the pastorate?

Again, "Twenty-Year Pastor" makes serious objection to the eldership on the ground that "the office tends to dry up the fountain of beneficence of the occupants"—i. e., in plainer English, it makes men stingy. He quotes mainly his own observation in proof of his statement. Says he recalls but $1 in twenty years given by a presiding elder except at Conference, "and this $1 I wrung out," etc. "I wrung out"! Gracious heavens! You can see malevolence coiled in the sentence like a snake in the grass, and you can hear it hiss as the words were set down. A man, it seems to me, for twenty years entertaining, harboring, and cultivating such a feeling towards a presiding elder can give no just judgment respecting the office, or of the man who fills it. Were a presiding elder on trial, as his counsel, I would exclude such a man from the jury. I wonder if William McGhee, or D. P. Wills, ex-presiding elders, now living, were never the presiding elders of this man? Can it be possible that this brother, twenty years a pastor of our Conference, does not remember the beneficence of the presiding elders I mentioned—the young men, especially Brother Wills, helped and his distribution of his books were among them at his death. Does he know of no $5 and $10 subscriptions of presiding elders to church buildings in his district? Does he know of no poorly-paid pastor whose salary was supplemented by the presiding elder? Does he recall no debt discharged by the presiding elder in behalf of an embarrassed pastor? Did he never hear of a widow receiving of the presiding elder a $5 bill, of which no record was ever made? A presiding elder once thrust me aside because of my clumsiness in taking a missionary collection, headed the list with $5, and brought the church out, to my great joy. I could name you five or six preachers of a district, who during a term were helped by their presiding elder out of his own purse! And if I were to call on them to do so, preachers would rise up all over the Conference to testify to the beneficence of their presiding elders. It is a source of poignant grief to every right-thinking man that a preacher should for twenty years of itinerant life receive the kind offices and enjoy the confidence and affection of these men of God, and then at the end turn and stab them in the one spot made most vulnerable by their relation to God and the Church. While they are to let their lights so shine, they are not to extol their gifts or to trumpet their virtues. And even modesty forbids the mention of almsdeeds they may have done.

Once more the crowning complaint is "the unkindest cut of all" the impositions of the presiding elder in the matter of getting around. With the money put in his pockets by the Church to meet these expenses, he nevertheless refuses to use it for that purpose, pays only what the railroads and steamboats compel him to, and begs and beats the balance. "Angels and ministers of grace, defend us!" This "Twenty-Year Pastor" cannot certainly, after this and the following statements, decline to give his name. The presiding elders of the Conference have a right to demand it, and should know it. For certainly no self-respecting presiding elder can receive such a pastor's kind offers, or accept his hospitalities without offering him compensation; or visit his charge without keeping a memorandum of mileage, horse and buggy hire, shoe polish, use of books, stationery, etc., attention from preacher and stewards, fees for listening respectfully to his "stale sermons," pushing and pulling, etc., etc., etc., and paying the bill up, all carefully, "like a man," before he leaves. Or will he be pursued to the end of his days with reproaches of crimes "no right-feeling and right-thinking man would think for a moment of doing."

In conclusion, my dear Recorder, it seems to me that no true, brave, loyal Methodist itinerant can say the things this brother has said of "some" at least of the men who have filled, and are now filling, the office of presiding elder in our Conference, without giving his own or their names. The words of the lawyer are applicable: "Thus saying Thou reproachest us also."—Luke, 11: 45. J. E. DESHAZO.

MISSIONARY STATISTICS.

The Almanac of the American Board has just been issued with its usual tables of missionary statistics, prepared by Dr. E. E. Strong, the editorial secretary of the Board. Dr. Strong, as always, has taken the greatest pains to secure the most complete reports obtaining them direct from the best authorities here and in other countries.

The total number of societies represented in the summary is 242. These occupy 4,779 stations and 14,614 outstations, without, however, including in either of these last two items the returns from a large number of minor societies which make no record of them.

The total number of missionaries is 11,839, of whom 6,096 are males and 5,751 females. The total native laborers are 67,754; communicants, 1,448,861; while there are also 810,949 under instruction in the various schools of the missions. Here also there is a deficiency on account of the failure of many of the Continental societies, except those in Germany, and also of minor societies in Asia, Australia, and Africa to report the figures.

The total income of the societies is placed at $16,244,372, a considerable increase over the report of last year. Of this the United States furnishes $825,000 increase, and in Great Britain there is included $2,089,134 expended by organizations, such as Bible, tract, and colonial societies, medical missions, and missions to the Jews for work outside of Great Britain. Taking these up somewhat more in detail, the United States has 32 societies, Canada 6, Great Britain 28, Germany 16, Continental Europe, aside from Germany and including the Netherlands, Scandinavia, France, etc., 61; while in Asia, Australia, and Africa there are 99 societies.

The English societies lead in the number of stations—3,302, out of 4,779, and in out stations, 8,845. The United States comes next with 916 stations and 5,565 out stations. This latter fact indicates probably a more effective organization of the mission work. The number of missionaries for the different countries is as follows: Great Britain, 4,818; United States, 3,398; Continental Europe, aside from Germany, 1,935; Germany, 1,082; Asia, etc., 377; Canada, 229. Of native laborers Great Britain employs 30,133; the United States, 15,562; Asia, Australia, etc., 8,259; Continental Europe, aside from Germany, 7,128; Germany, 6,059; Canada, 613.

In membership the British societies lead with 394,482, but the American societies come very close with 377,030 while Germany follows with 315,064; Continental Europe, 251,200; Asia, etc., 101,675; Canada, 9,412.

The foreign mission income of the distinctively foreign missionary societies in Great Britain is $6,471,840; United States, $5,158,114; Germany $897,182; Continental Europe, $893,825; Asia, etc., $490,650; Canada, $243,627.

Of the specific British societies the largest income reported is that of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, $1,587,560. With regard to this it should be remembered that its expenditures include a considerable amount of colonial work; the distinction between colonial and strictly foreign missionary work not being clearly drawn. The Church Missionary Society comes next with $1,138,370; the London Missionary Society, with $557,455; the Wesleyan Society, $523,536; the Baptist Missionary Society, $392,730; the Free Church of Scotland, $327,430; the Established Church of Scotland, $204,336.

In this country the largest figures are those of the Methodist Episcopal Church, including the Woman's Missionary Society, $946,402; the Presbyterian Board, $835,580; the American Baptist Missionary Union, $782,474; the American Board, $687,200; the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, $354,765; the Protestant Episcopal Church, $280,969. In Germany the largest expenditures are by the Basel Society, $260,899; the Moravian Brethren, $150,681; the Rhenish Society, $129,606. In Canada the Presbyterian Board has the largest income—$131,841.—The Independent.

THE TRUTH ABOUT VACCINATION.

In a recent lecture delivered at Rome, Dr. Bizzozzero made a deep impression by his summing up of the argument for vaccination. He said:

"Germany stands alone in fulfilling in great measure the demands of hygiene, having in consequence of the calamitous smallpox epidemic of 1870-71 enacted the law of 1874, which 'makes vaccination obligatory in the first year of life, and revaccination also obligatory at the tenth year.' What was the result? With a population of 50,000,000, having in 1871 lost 143,000 lives by the smallpox, she found by her law of 1874 the mortality diminished so rapidly that to-day the disease numbers only 116 victims a year. These cases, moreover, occur almost exclusively in towns on the frontier. If it were true that a good vaccination does not protect from smallpox, we ought to find in smallpox epidemics that the disease diffuses itself in the well-vaccinated no less than in the non-vaccinated countries. But it is not so. In 1870-71, during the Franco-German war, the two peoples interpenetrated each other, the German having its civil population vaccinated optionally, but its army completely revaccinated, while the French (population and army alike) were vaccinated perfunctorily. Both were attacked by smallpox; but the French army numbered 23,000 deaths by it, while the German army had only 278; and in the same tent, breathing the same air, the French wounded were heavily visited by the disease, while the German wounded, having been revaccinated, had not a single case."

THE EXPERIENCE OF A SUCKER.

An old sucker lived with other fishes at the bottom of a pond. She was observant, cautious, and wise. A pickerel and a bass made sad havoc with her descendants, for each often took one of them for his dinner; so the old sucker was not sad when the pickerel was gone. His going, as seen by the sucker, happened in this wise:

A large angleworm fell on the surface of the water, and sank toward the bottom; but when part way down it stopped, for something prevented it sinking further. As she watched it she saw the old pickerel dart from its hiding place and catch it, as often before he had caught one of her babies. Then something very strange—the old pickerel lost his self-control; he seemed to want to go back to his safe hiding place, but he did go the other way. Something seemed to be pulling him the wrong way, and it pulled and pulled until he was gone, and he never came back.

Not long after the bass, after a similar experience, was gone, and he never came back.

When the old sucker saw another worm come in the same way, she wanted to understand it, but thought it better to learn by the experience of the pickerel and bass than to have such experience herself; so she left the worm alone; but one of her grandchildren, who was younger and thought himself wiser than she, said: "I will find out about this, grandma." The old sucker replied: "You had better leave it alone, or it may pull you away like it did the others," but the young one said: "I have often sucked angleworms in my mouth. They tasted good, and did me no harm." The old one said: "I advise you to keep away from it." The young one thought to himself, "Oh, she's an old granny! I will just suck it a little, and if I feel it pull, I will let go."

So he sucked it in his mouth, and thought it was nice; but when he started to go back to his grandmother it pulled him the other way. He wanted to let go, but he did not, for he was hooked, and in spite of his wishes, he went to the—fisherman.

Another fisherman uses cigarettes, tobacco, or beer for his bait, and many a sucker sucks them in, thinking he will let go when they pull the wrong way; but after indulging a while, when he wants to go right, he finds himself so hooked and held by the habit that instead of going right, he goes to the—devil.—Ohio Anti-Saloon League.

A FATHER'S DISCOVERY.

They stood together beside the writer in a crowded car, the morning after New Year's. Both men had reached middle life. Their clothing and manners indicated financial ease and refined surroundings. They may have been brothers; at least they were intimate friends, as they addressed each other by their Christian names.

"I made a discovery yesterday, Fred: my girls have grown up!" The friend, Fred, looked at him inquiringly. It was evident that the discovery was one of mixed pleasure and pain, judging by the expression on the speaker's face. "Yes, they have grown up. The greatest possible pleasure is no longer a walk with papa; strange men, I call them cubs, have begun to be interesting companions for a walk."

The listener smiled. "Poor chap!" he said, like one who had gone through the experience; "what else did you expect? That's life."

"The dickens, man! 'Twas only yesterday I was ransacking stores for dolls and teasetts."

"Yes," interrupted his friend, "and to-morrow you'll be doing the same thing for your granddaughters." The first man looked startled. With an amused glance, the one addressed as Fred asked, "What are you going to do about it, old man?"

"Fred, do you realize that that is a serious question? It is very important—what I am going to do about it. I don't want those girls interested in any of those cubs, and I don't want those fellows interested at all in my girls. They grow more charming and companionable every day. I want them let alone."

"No, you don't, my dear fellow. They cannot have a father always; and even if they could, have they no right which you are bound to respect? Would they be what they are, the most charmingly natural girls one meets anywhere, if they did not possess to a remarkable degree strong, womanly natures? You and your wife are to be congratulated that you have in them nearly approached your ideal woman, as you used to describe those ideal women."

It was evident that the father of the girls was deeply touched. "Fred, the men do not live to whom I would surrender those girls."

Both men were quiet a while, when the father said: "That's pretty selfish—a war against life."

"Yes," responded the other, quietly, "it is."

"Fred, if I have to give them up, I'll know the men. Every man they know shall become my friend, if I can make him. Their mother shall know them, every one. I have confidence enough in them to know that the men we cannot have as friends cannot be their friends. I'll fish, golf, tennis, skate, play ball—I've learned basket-ball to play with them—with those cubs that brought the color to the girls' cheeks and the new light to their eyes, yesterday. Yes, I saw then that they had grown up. Why, you're right, man! I have not bought a doll for seven years. The cubs I cannot buy, but I'll know them. Every man who bows to them shall bow to me, and slap me on the back as his chum if—if he passes. Fred, the examination will be severe, but the prize is worth it." The men left the car.

AN UGLY AND DANGEROUS FASHION.

Doubtless hundreds of women are surprised to find that they have yielded to the uncleanly and untidy fashion of trailing dresses on the street. It is unfortunate that the increased knowledge of the sanitary dangers of trailing dresses through our streets, and then over carpets and rugs, should not be understood well enough to forbid this.

No one disputes that a trailing dress in the house is far more beautiful and graceful than one that does not trail, but it is equally certain that no one will dispute, not even those who have yielded to this untidy fashion, that it is far from becoming on the street. To the woman who may throw her dress aside when dampness and dirt have marred it, such fashions are of no moment; but to the woman who must consider her clothes from the standpoint of cost, who must wear her clothes for the longest possible time, this fashion imposes serious burdens. The woman of independence may scorn the thought of self-imposed burdens, but the fact remains that it is a burden to some women, serious and real, to find that their clothes are not up to the fashion. It is unfortunate that fashion and good taste are not synonymous. Much that is ugly would never be known if they were.

With the prevalence of grip, and the declarations of some of the best medical experts that it is contagious; with ordinances relating to the cleaning of street cars to meet special health conditions being issued by health boards; with the widely diffused knowledge of the spread of disease by germs, it seems strange that intelligent women should allow their garments to be so fashioned as to be a means to carry disease into their own homes.

THE HOURS FLY FAST.

Mourn, O rejoicing heart!

The hours are flying;

Each one some treasure takes,

Each one some blossom breaks,

And leaves it dying.

The chill, dark night draws near,

The sun will soon depart,

And leave the sighing;

Then mourn, rejoicing heart!

The hours are flying!

Rejoice, O grieving heart!

The hours fly fast;

With each some sorrow dies,

With each some shadow flies,

Until at last

The red dawn in the east

Bids weary night depart,

And pain is past;

Rejoice, then, grieving heart!

The hours fly fast!

Hard to Find.—The Bishop of never mind where—being a newcomer, and being somewhat troubled with a neglected diocese, thought to inspire his clergy to take occasional services during the week by periodically visiting and taking one himself. On one of these occasions, having found quite a good congregation, and having been moved to much eloquence in his sermon, he felt a little not unnatural desire to know if he had made any impression on the usually unimpressible yokels, and put some leading questions to an old clerk, who was helping him to disrobe in the vestry. "Well, I hope they've been pleased with you," said the old man, patronizingly; "and I'm sure we puts it werry kind o' yer worship to come down and preach to us; but, yer know, a worsser one would ha' done for the like o' us, if he so be," he added, with becoming humility, "one could ha' bin found."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON V, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JAN. 29.

Text of the Lesson. John iv, 5-15.
Memory Verses. 13-15—Golden Text.
John iv, 11—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1898 by D. M. Stearns.]

5. "Then cometh He to a city of Samaria, which is called Sychar, near to the parcel of ground that Jacob gave to his son Joseph." He is anointed with the Holy Ghost and with power and goes about doing good, seeking never His own will, but always the will of His Father, and all His steps as well as all His words and actions are ordered by the Father (Acts x, 38; John vi, 38; xiv, 10; Ps. xxxvii, 23). To live such a life is the business of the Christian, and Christ in us will live that life if we yield fully to Him.

6. "Now Jacob's well was there. Jesus, therefore, being wearied with his journey, sat thus on the well, and it was about the sixth hour." As we said in a previous lesson, probably 6 a. m., according to John's way of counting. He would be journeying early, so as to avoid the heat of the day. He is weary, for He is truly man and in all points tempted like as we are. We have not a high priest who cannot be touched with a feeling of our infirmities. He knoweth our frame; He remembers that we are but dust.

7. "There cometh a woman of Samaria to draw water. Jesus saith unto her, Give me to drink." For our sakes He put Himself in the limitations of a mortal body, liable to weariness, hunger, thirst, suffering and death. He who made all things and upholds all things made Himself dependent upon the ministry of others for the necessities of life. He fed millions with manna for nearly 40 years and brought water from the rock at His pleasure.

8. "For His disciples were gone away unto the city to buy meat." He who said, Come, buy wine and milk without money and without price (Isa. lv, 1) sends his disciples to buy with money things necessary for the body. It is very difficult for us to believe the extent of His humiliation. We cannot understand how rich He was nor how poor He became for our sakes (II Cor. viii, 9), but we can look up gratefully and say, Lord, I thank thee for bearing it for me!

9. "How is it that thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria?" For the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans." Thus answered the woman of Samaria. How different from Rebekah when Eliezer said, Let me drink, I pray thee (Gen. xxiv, 45, 46). See in II Kings, 17, the origin of these Samaritans. Do good unto all, especially to the household of faith, and give to him that asketh thee are good precepts to remember and practice, for not only is it more blessed to give than receive, but not even a cup of cold water given in the name of a disciple shall lose its reward (Acts xx, 35; Math. x, 42).

10. "Jesus answered and said unto her, If thou knewest the gift of God and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink, thou wouldest have asked of Him, and He would have given thee living water." The gift of God is the Son of God, as we saw in last lesson (3-16). If the woman had ever learned what we call Isa. lv, she might now have thought of the words, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters!" and have said, Art thou He of whom Isaiah wrote? If she had known Jer. ii, 13, she might have asked, Art thou a fountain of living water? But she knew not these things; she was not living unto God, yet her soul was precious in God's sight.

11. "The woman saith unto Him, Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep. From whence, then, hast thou that living water?" Whether it be rich, religious flesh, as in Nicodemus, or poor, sinful flesh, as in this woman, it is in either case ignorant of spiritual things. The well is too deep, and the natural man has nothing to draw with. The woman unwittingly described her own condition in her words to our Lord. She thought only of natural water, a rope and a bucket. She did not know the words of Isa. xlii, 3, "With joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation." He testified what he knew and had seen. Those who do believe His testimony proclaim Him as the Truth, but those who receive not His testimony make Him a liar. Let us as faithful witnesses proclaim what we have heard and seen (I John i, 3).

12. "Art thou greater than our father, Jacob, who gave us the well and drank thereof himself and his children and his cattle?" In chapter viii, 53, the rulers ask Him, "Art thou greater than our father Abraham? Greater than Solomon or Jonah (Math. xli, 11, 42), greater than prophets or patriarchs, greater than angels or archangel, one with God the Father, God manifest in the flesh, how meekly He bore it all, to be so unknown, so misunderstood! Are you, for His sake, willing to have some one far beneath you socially or intellectually spoken of as better than you, and can you keep still? Can you bear to hear some other land or city honored above yours and be meekly quiet because your city is now Jerusalem?

13. "Jesus answered and said unto her, Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again." Both literally and figuratively true. The first the woman could grasp, for she came often to draw water, but the second she understood not. But few have yet learned that the waters of this world cannot satisfy, and the multitudes seek the pleasures of sin, which satisfy but for a season. They hew themselves out cisterns that can hold no water (Hob. xi, 25; Jer. ii, 13).

14. "But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst, but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." Christ in us, the hope of glory is a well that not only abundantly satisfies, but is ever springing up to refresh others. It is possible to be satisfied with favor and full with the blessing of the Lord (Deut. xxx, 23), so occupied with God that the pleasures of this world have no power over us. In chapter 1 we have water in connection with the forgiveness of sins, in chapter 2 water in connection with the wine of the kingdom at the marriage of the Lamb, in chapter 3 water in connection with the first step toward the kingdom. Here we have an advance, for every believer may be a well of water if only willing.

15. "The woman saith unto Him, Sir, give me this water, that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw." She still thought only of natural water, but soon, as His love and wisdom continued to deal with her, she began to see herself a sinner. Then she saw Him as the Messiah and her Saviour, she received Him as such, and joy so filled her that she forgot all else but Him and ran to bear the glad tidings to others.

Met Death Fighting Fire.

San Francisco, Jan. 23.—Miss Jennie Moore, daughter of the late I. S. Moore, a prominent society belle, died yesterday at the family residence on Gough street from the effects of fire. The lace curtains of her room became ignited from a gas jet. She attempted to extinguish the blaze, but her clothing caught fire and she rushed into the hall, a mass of flames, which were quenched with difficulty by the family. The young lady, who was about 23 years of age and noted for her beauty and talents, lingered in great agony for several hours, when she expired.

Admitted Guilt, But Was Acquitted.

Evansville, Ind., Jan. 23.—The jury in the Albert Wade embezzlement case brought in a verdict of not guilty after being out 19 hours. Wade admitted that he had falsified the books of the First National bank of Mount Vernon, Ind., but had done so at the order of the president, Asa Williams, now dead, and the cashier, E. W. Rosencranz. The bank's books showed overdrafts of $100,000. Cashier Rosencranz was placed on trial today.

Amos Owen Cherry Trees!

The finest cherries and largest cherry tree in the known world grow on the famous Cherry Mountain, near Ellenboro, N. C.

For the past few years trees from this famous orchard have been transplanted in the surrounding country, and have proved a surprise to the people by their rapid growth, enormous size, and delicious fruit. The trees grow very tall, and spread out long, heavy limbs, and are filled with large, black heart-shaped cherries. As many as five bushels have been gathered from one tree. The fruit is very fine in flavor, and suitable for canning, pies, drying, etc., and, ripening as they do in May and June, they come in when other fruit is scarce, and sell readily at 10 cents per quart. Besides their great value as fruit trees, they make the finest of shade trees. Mr. John T. Patrick, chief industrial agent of the Seaboard Air Line, after examining them and seeing their great value as a fruit and shade tree, says:

"These trees are rapid growers; they make a good shade, and yield an abundant crop of large, black cherries, that find a ready market. One thousand trees will in five years from planting yield a revenue to the town that puts them out sufficient to pay town taxes, keep up the streets, and work the country roads leading into the town.

"It would be a big advertisement that will be worth thousands of dollars to be able to say 'our town has fruit-bearing trees enough on its sidewalks and public parks to pay the expenses of the town and build good county roads,' and will give you a world-wide reputation for thrift, enterprise, and good judgment."

Mr. Patrick did not only talk, but acted on his judgment, and we furnished to him and his agents over six thousand trees during 1897-98 season.

The trees can be set any time from October 20th to March 30th, and it is a very rare thing for one to die. So rare that we gladly send another in place of any that die the first season, that has been carefully set out. We carefully pack all trees, so as to arrive in good condition. We can furnish them either by mail or express one to three years old. Small trees grow off better, and will make a large tree as quick as a ten-foot one, but we will furnish them any size up to ten feet high. We prepay all trees when cash accompanies the order. So it does not make any difference where you live, they will be delivered at the following prices:

One tree by mail	25c.	Twenty tree by express	$2 50
Six trees by mail	$1 00	Fifty trees by express	5 00
Twelve trees by express	1 75	One hundred trees by express ..	8 00

One tree free with each order, if you mention the Methodist Recorder.

Send money by registered mail, postoffice, or express money order, or check, making them payable to FRANK BRIGHT, Secretary, and address: CHERRY MOUNTAIN SUPPLY COMPANY, Ellenboro, N. C.

1. Instruction. REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teacher's Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Practice School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent or Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

Topic For the Week Beginning Jan. 29, "A Student's Prayer."
Text, Ps. xix, 1-14.

"Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my redeemer!"

Prayer for our young people in schools and for the blessing of God upon our institutions of learning is specially appointed for this week, and this psalm is selected as peculiarly appropriate to their condition.

We are in a world of natural and material forces and things. We must study them and learn how to live successfully in their midst. We soon learn that mind is in a great measure dependent on matter, but is superior to it in nature and can control and use it to reach its own purposeful ends. We soon learn that spirit is superior to mind and that mind and matter are to be brought under the rulership of spirit and made to serve the good, the true, the beautiful and perfect ends of the highest nature. All is under the laws of God, and His laws as perfectly regulate the heart and its emotions and volitions as in nature His hand guides the stars in their courses.

Sins are violations of God's law, are the mad leaps of a soul from its true course around the central sun; the flying of a planet from its orbit to become a comet wandering from the light into outer and utter darkness and ruin.

Only in the presence of God can we find His true pleasure and perfection. Not what men call eloquence of speech; not the beauties of rhetoric and elegancies of expression are the most valuable forms of words. Pure and simple and sincere truth, loving terms and Christlike tones are the treasures of language.

In all our search for knowledge we should strive above all else to acquire wisdom. This is higher than mere learning of things and men. It is deeper than understanding of reasons and causes and philosophies. It is the practical power of applying what is known to reaching desirable and definite ends. It is the ability to do the right.

All the gaining of ability in the right use or language depends on the possessing a right spirit. The thoughts must be pure or the words cannot be clean.

The Sweet Singer of Methodism.

Charles Wesley is only less noted in the story of Methodism than his elder brother John. They were intimately associated in all their work. They were students together at Oxford. Both belonged to the little band of devout scholars nicknamed "the Holy Club" and Methodists. Both were ordained as priests in the established church of England. Both engaged heartily in evangelistic efforts which gave rise to the Methodist societies and which have resulted in worldwide Methodism. Charles had less of executive ability than John, less boldness and foresight. He was conservative and slow to adopt any new measure which departed from the traditional practices of the church. He was an able preacher, but was specially useful as the writer of spiritual hymns. He shares with Isaac Watts the distinction of being the most voluminous and devotional writer of sacred lyrics the world has ever seen. His tone is widely different from Watts'. Not less musical or devout, but more fervent and confident of personal communication with God. "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," is a specimen of his verse and is one of the best hymns ever written.

His poetical works, with those of John, fill 13 octavo volumes.

He was in America for a short time in early manhood. Returning to England, the vessel was driven for shelter into Boston harbor. He spent Sunday on shore and preached in King's chapel, which is still standing on Tremont street, overshadowed by the towering structures of more modern days.

He lies buried in London, but not in the grounds at City Road chapel, where John is buried. His face is engraved beside that of his brother on the marble tablet in Westminster Abbey in Poets' corner, which honors the memory of two as worthy sons as Britain ever had.

God's Love of Beauty.

When we think of all the beauty which human eyes seldom behold, but see only often enough to know of its existence, we gain a new thought about our Heavenly Father. Many a brilliant sunset occurs in the far oceans where no ships sail. Many a wonderfully colored flower blooms in the jungle where no human foot has penetrated. Many a striking effect of light and shade, or tender glow of semitwilight, or strange, picturesque formation of mist and cloud, occurs in the remote arctic regions, if what returned explorers tell us be true. There are many forms of beauty here upon our earth of which we, its inhabitants, are almost unaware and which only God sees.

I never yet found pride in a noble nature or humility in an unworthy mind. Nothing procureth love like humility, nothing hate like pride.—Owen Feltham.

BIG BUSINESS DEAL.

A Virginia Company Purchases Two Railroads and Nine Furnaces.

Knoxville, Tenn., Jan. 23.—The largest business transaction made in the south in ten years has just been announced here. It involves an investment of $15,000,000, and is of vital importance to upper east Tennessee and southwestern Virginia. The Virginia Coal Iron and Railway company has bought in the blast furnaces at Max Meadows, Pulaski, Va., and Bristol, Tenn., also the Bristol and Elizabethton and the South Atlantic and Ohio railroads. Cash is paid for all the properties. The company becomes the owner of 125,000 acres of coking coal lands, 60,000 acres of ore land, two railroads and nine furnaces. The railroad extend from Big Stone Gap, Va., to Elizabethton, Tenn., passing Bristol, Tenn., and the rich coal and timber lands of the new company. Colonel E. J. Sanford, of this city, president of the Knoxville and Ohio railroad, C. M. McGhee, of this city, and Benjamin Dulaney, of Bristol, Tenn., promoted the deal. New York financiers were interested in the enterprise, the outcome of which was an organized company with $7,500,000 stock subscribed and the same amount of bonds were issued and sold for cash. E. B. Chapman, of Moore & Schley, the New York brokers, carried the deal through and the firm underwrote the bonds.

GENERAL SOUTHERN NEWS.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 18.—Major Jed Hotchkiss, Stonewall Jackson's celebrated engineer, died at his home in Staunton last night of grip, complicated with meningitis.

Leesburg, Va., Jan. 20.—Miss Fannie Rawlings, daughter of the late J. M. Rawlings, committed suicide a few days ago at her home near Unison, in this county. She was about 35 years of age, and despondency and ill health were the cause of the rash act.

Nashville, Tenn., Jan. 19.—George Call and John Shaw, both colored, and who bore a bad reputation in the community, were shot and killed by unknown persons at Lynchburg Tuesday night. Both had served terms in the penitentiary for robbery and had been whipped by whitecaps and run out of town, but returned. Each was about 18 years old.

Hazlehurst, Miss., Jan. 21.—Joseph Williams, a negro, was hanged here yesterday for assault upon a white woman in August last. Nearly 2,000 people witnessed the execution. Williams ascended the scaffold smoking a cigar, being in no way excited, and spoke several minutes, acknowledging his crime and warning his friends to profit by his awful fate.

Raleigh, N. C., Jan. 17.—In the house of representatives of the general assembly yesterday Mr. Patterson, of Caldwell county, offered a resolution protesting against the seating of Congressman-elect B. H. Roberts, of Utah. The resolutions calls upon the senators and representatives in congress from North Carolina not only to oppose the seating of Mr. Roberts, but to pass a law covering all such cases in the future.

Norfolk, Va., Jan. 23.—The army transport Port Victor arrived at Fort Monroe after nightfall last evening. She comes from Porto Rico and has aboard 138 sick soldiers from the army hospitals in that island. An attempt was made to land the sick troops, but owing to darkness as well as the absence of the quarantine doctor, the men were permitted to remain aboard the transport. Her arrival at this time was unexpected.

Memphis, Tenn., Jan. 20.—Three bodies have been found in the debris of the burned steamer Ouachita, which was destroyed by fire at an early hour yesterday morning. The bodies are charred and burned beyond all recognition, but are believed to be the remains of Mr. and Mrs. Keck, en route from Columbus, O., to Greenville, Miss., and Dr. McGary, of Vicksburg. All of the other passengers have been accounted for.

Huntingdon, W. Va., Jan. 20.—The Asylum for Incurables for the State, located here, was opened for the reception of inmates this morning for the first time. Half a dozen children were admitted during the forenoon, three of whom were from Wood county, two from Ritchie and one from Kanawha. The present legislature will be asked to make another appropriation this year with which to erect other buildings.

Knoxville, Tenn., Jan. 19.—Joel and Charles Necessary, William Freeman and Samuel Duncan, of Scott county, Va., were the victims of a shooting affray Tuesday night in the mountains of that county. The Necessary brothers died yesterday, William Freeman is fatally shot and Duncan is seriously injured. The four victims were trying to arrest an alleged murderer named William Flannery. The latter's friends came to his assistance and he escaped. Flannery is said to have killed one of the Hatfield gang.

Charleston, W. Va., Jan. 20.—N. B. Scott, internal revenue commissioner and member of the Republican national committee, was last night nominated for United States senator by a joint caucus, at which 46 of the 49 Republican members of the legislature were present. Eighteen ballots were taken, the final vote showing 28 for Scott, against 15 for Goff and 3 for Governor Atkinson. While Scott has the caucus nomination his election is not considered a certainty, owing to the close majority of the Republicans and the alleged determination of John McGraw, the Democratic caucus nominee, who has 47 votes, to keep one or two Republicans out of their party ranks.

Charleston, W. Va., Jan. 21.—Both houses of the legislature got down to business yesterday for the first time, after being in session for the second week. The Republican senate at last recognized the Democratic house. In the senate the Republicans introduced resolution for the unseating of Kidd, Democrat, and for the suspension of Ashbury, Democrat, pending investigation into the contest for the seat. The Democrats in the house served notice of contest upon Spencer, Republican. The Democrats in the senate introduced resolutions declaring vacant the seats of Pierson and Getzendanner, alleging that by accepting commissions in the volunteer army they forfeited their right to their seats.

"Teddy" and His Specs.

"Colonel Roosevelt is very nearsighted," said one of the New Orleans boys who saw service at Santiago, "and when the hot fighting was in progress his luggage consisted almost entirely of spectacles. Near sighted people always have an abiding dread of losing their glasses, knowing their absolute helplessness without such aid, and I was told by one of the New York club contingent that Roosevelt took particular pains before leaving home to provide against such a disaster.

"He had been in the habit of wearing nose glasses with a black silk cord attached, but the arrangement was entirely unsuited to a campaign, where the glasses themselves would be liable to fall off constantly and the cord to catch on twigs. So he substituted very large, round spectacles with steel hooks for the ears and had a dozen pairs mounted. These he planted around his person and equipment, trying to distribute them so no one accident could include them all. One pair was sewed in his blouse, another in his belt, another in his hat, two in his saddlebags and so on.

"At the fight at Guasimas his horse was barked by a bullet while held by an orderly and plunged frantically against a tree. Colonel Roosevelt came rushing up, all anxiety, and began prying under the saddle flap. 'They haven't hurt the nag, sir,' said the orderly. 'I know,' replied the colonel with tears in his voice, 'but, blast 'em, they've smashed my specs.'"—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

STRIKING DOWN SIN.

GENIUS NOT NECESSARY TO COMBAT
POWERS OF EVIL.

Rev. Dr. Talmage Admonishes Us to Persevere in Doing Good—Persevere in the Face of Failure—Enthusiasm Will Overcome Difficulties.

[Copyright, 1899, by American Press Association.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—From a scene in ancient story Dr. Talmage, in this discourse, draws lessons as appropriate for this time as they were appropriate for the time when the event occurred many centuries ago; text, Judges iii, 15, "But when the children of Israel cried unto the Lord the Lord raised them up a deliverer, Ehud, the son of Gera, a Benjamite, a man left handed, and by him the children of Israel sent a present unto Eglon, the king of Moab."

Ehud was a ruler in Israel. He was left handed, and what was peculiar about the tribe of Benjamin, to which he belonged, there were in it 700 left handed men, and yet so dexterous had they all become in the use of the left hand that the Bible says they could sling stones at a hairbreadth and not miss. Well, there was a king by the name of Eglon, who was an oppressor of Israel. He imposed upon them a most outrageous tax. Ehud, the man of whom I first spoke, had a divine commission to destroy that oppressor. He came, pretending that he was going to pay the tax, and asked to see King Eglon. He was told he was in the summer house, the place to which the king retired when it was too hot to sit in the palace. This summer house was a place surrounded by flowers and trees and springing fountains and warbling birds. Ehud entered the summer house and said to King Eglon that he had a secret errand with him. Immediately all the attendants were waved out of the royal presence. King Eglon rises up to receive the messenger. Ehud, the left handed man, puts his left hand to his right side, pulls out a dagger and thrusts Eglon through until the haft went after the blade. Eglon falls. Ehud comes forth to blow a trumpet of liberty amid the mountains of Ephraim, and a great host is marshaled, and proud Moab submits to the conqueror, and Israel is free! So, O Lord, let all thine enemies perish. So, O Lord, let all thy friends triumph!

I learn, first, from this subject the power of left handed men. There are some men who, by physical organization, have as much strength in their left hand as in their right hand, but there is something in the writing of this text which implies that Ehud had some defect in his right hand which compelled him to use his left. Oh, the power of left handed men! Genius is often self observant, careful of itself, not given to much toil, burning incense to its own aggrandizement, while many a man with no natural endowments, actually defective in physical and mental organization, has an earnestness for the right, a patient industry, an all consuming perseverance, which achieve marvels for the kingdom of Christ. Though left handed, as Ehud, they can strike down a sin as great and imperial as Eglon.

I have seen men of wealth gathering about them all their treasures, snuffing at the cause of a world lying in wickedness, roughly ordering Lazarus off their doorstep, sending their dogs, not to lick his sores, but to hound him off their premises, catching all the pure rain of God's blessing into the stagnant, roty, frog inhabited pool of their own selfishness—right handed men, worse than useless—while many a man with large heart and little purse has, out of his limited means, made poverty leap for joy and started an influence that over-spans the grave and will swing round and round the throne of God, world without end. Amen!

Ah, me! It is high time that you left handed men, who have been longing for this gift, and that eloquence, and the other man's wealth, should take your left hand out of your pockets. Who made all these railroads? Who set up all these cities? Who started all these churches, and schools, and asylums? Who has done the tugging, and running, and pulling? Men of no wonderful endowments, thousands of them acknowledging themselves to be left handed, and yet they were earnest, and yet they were determined, and yet they were triumphant.

But I do not suppose that Ehud the first time he took a sling in his left hand could throw a stone at a hairbreadth and not miss. I suppose it was practice that gave him the wonderful dexterity. Go forth to your spheres of duty and be not discouraged if in your first attempts you miss the mark. Ehud missed it. Take another stone, put it carefully into the sling, swing it around your head, take better aim, and the next time you will strike the center. The first time a mason rings his trowel upon the brick he does not expect to put up a perfect wall. The first time a carpenter sends the plane over a board or drives a bit through a beam he does not expect to make perfect execution. The first time a boy attempts a rhyme he does not expect to chime a "Lalla Rookh" or a "Lady of the Lake." Do not be surprised if in your first efforts at doing good you are not very largely successful. Understand that usefulness is an art, a science, a trade. There was an oculist performing a very difficult operation on the human eye. A young doctor stood by and said: "How easily you do that. It don't seem to cause you any trouble at all." "Ah," said the old oculist, "it is very easy now, but I spoiled a hatful of eyes to learn that." Be not surprised if it takes some practice before we can help men to moral eyesight and bring them to a vision of the cross. Left handed men, to the work! Take the gospel for a sling and faith and repentance for the smooth stone from the brook. Take sure aim, God direct the weapon, and great Goliaths will tumble before you.

When Garibaldi was going out to battle, he told his troops what he wanted them to do, and after he had described what he wanted them to do they said, "Well, general, what are you going to give us for all this?" "Well," he replied, "I don't know what else you will get, but you will get hunger and cold and wounds and death. How do you like it?" His men stood before him for a little while in silence, and then they threw up their hands and cried: "We are the men! We are the men!" The Lord Jesus Christ calls you to his service. I do not promise you an easy time in this world. You may have persecutions and trials and misrepresentations, but afterward there comes an eternal weight of glory, and you can bear the wounds, and the bruises, and the misrepresentations, if you can have the reward afterward. Have you not enough enthusiasm to cry out: "We are the men! We are the men!"

I learn also from this subject the danger of worldly elevation. This Eglon was what the world called a great man. There were hundreds of people who would have considered it the greatest honor of their life just to have him speak to them, yet although he is so high up in worldly position he is not beyond the reach of Ehud's dagger. I see a great many people trying to climb up in social position, having an idea that there is a safe place somewhere far above, not knowing that the mountain of fame has a top like Mont Blanc, covered with perpetual snow.

We laugh at the children of Shinar for trying to build a tower that could reach to the heavens, but I think if our eyesight were only good enough we could see a Babel in many a dooryard. Oh, the struggle is fierce! It is store against store, house against house, street against street, nation against nation. The goal for which men are running is chairs and chandeliers and mirrors and houses and lands and presidential equipments. If they get what they anticipate, what have they? Men are not safe from calumny while they live, and, worse than that, they are not safe after they are dead, for I have seen swine root up graveyards. One day a man goes up into publicity, and the world does him honor, and people climb up into sycamore trees to watch him as he passes, and as he goes along on the shoulders of the people there is a waving of hats and a wild huzza. Tomorrow the same man is caught between the jaws of the printing press and mangled and bruised, and the very same persons who applauded him before cry: "Down with the traitor! Down with him!"

Belshazzar sits at the feast, the mighty men of Babylon sitting all around him. Wit sparkles like the wine, and the wine like the wit. Music rolls up among the chandeliers; the chandeliers flash down on the decanters. The breath of hanging gardens floats in on the night air; the voice of revelry floats out. Amid wreaths, and tapestry, and folded banners, a finger writes. The march of a host is heard on the stairs. Laughter catches in the throat. A thousand hearts stop beating. The blow is struck. The blood on the floor is richer hued than the wine on the table. The kingdom has departed. Belshazzar was no worse, perhaps, than hundreds of people in Babylon, but his position slew him. Oh, be content with just such a position as God has placed you in. It may not be said of us, "He was a great general," or "He was an honored chieftain," or "He was mighty in worldly attainments," but this thing may be said of you and of me, "He was a good citizen, a faithful Christian, a friend of Jesus." And that in the last day will be the highest of all eulogiums.

I learn further from this subject that death comes to the summer house. Eglon did not expect to die in that fine place. Amid all the flower leaves that drifted like summer snow into the window; in the tinkle and dash of the fountains; in the sound of a thousand leaves fluting on one tree branch; in the cool breeze that came up to shake feverish trouble out of the king's locks—there was nothing that spake of death, but there he died! In the winter, when the snow is a shroud, and when the wind is a dirge, it is easy to think of our mortality; but when the weather is pleasant, and all our surroundings are agreeable, how difficult it is for us to appreciate the truth that we are mortal! And yet my text teaches that death does sometimes come to the summer house. He is blind, and cannot see the leaves. He is deaf, and cannot hear the fountains. Oh, if death would ask us for victims, we could point him to hundreds of people who would rejoice to have him come. Push back the door of that hovel. Look at that little child—cold, and sick, and hungry. It has never heard the name of God but in blasphemy. Parents intoxicated, staggering around its straw bed. Oh, death, there is a mark for thee! Up with it into the light! Before those little feet stumble on life's pathway, give them rest.

Here is an aged man. He has done his work. He has done it gloriously. The companions of his youth all gone, his children dead, he longs to be at rest, and wearily the days and the nights pass. He says, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." Oh, death, there is a mark for thee! Take from him the staff and give him the scepter. Up with him into the light, where eyes never grow dim, and the hair whitens not through the long years of eternity. Ah, death will not do that! Death turns back from the straw bed, and from the aged man ready for the skies, and comes to the summer house. What doest thou here, thou bony, ghastly monster, amid this waving grass and under this sunlight sifting through the tree branches? Children are at play. How quickly their feet go and their locks toss in the wind. Father and mother stand at the side of the room looking on, enjoying their glee. It does not seem possible that the wolf should ever break into that fold and carry off a lamb. Meanwhile an old archer stands looking through the thicket. He points his arrow at the brightest of the group. He is a sure marksman. The bow bends, the arrow speeds. Hush now. The quick feet have stopped, and the locks toss no more in the wind. Laughter has gone out of the hall. Death in the summer house!

Here is a father in midlife. His coming home at night is the signal for mirth. The children rush to the door, and there are books on the evening stand, and the hours pass away on glad feet. There is nothing wanting in that home. Religion is there and sacrifices on the altar morning and night. You look in that household and say: "I cannot think of anything happier. I do not really believe the world is so sad a place as some people describe it to be." The scene changes. Father is sick. The doors must be kept shut. The death watch chirps dolefully on the hearth. The children whisper and walk softly where once they romped. Passing the house at night, you see the quick glancing of lights from room to room. It is all over. Death in the summer house!

Here is an aged mother—aged, but not infirm. You think you will have the joy of caring for her wants a good while yet. As she goes from house to house, to children and grandchildren, her coming is a dropping of sunlight in the dwelling. Your children see her coming through the lane, and they cry, "Grandmother's come!" Care for you has marked up her face with many a deep wrinkle and her back stoops with carrying your burdens. Some day she is very quiet. She says she is not sick, but something tells you you will not much longer have a mother. She will sit with you no more at the table, nor at the hearth. Her soul goes out so gently you do not exactly know the moment of its going. Fold the hands that have done so many kindnesses for you right over the heart that has beat with love toward you since before you were born. Let the pilgrim rest. She is weary. Death in the summer house!

Gather about us what we will of comfort and luxury. When the pale messenger comes, he does not stop to look at the architecture of the house before he comes in, nor, entering, does he wait to examine the pictures we have gathered on the wall, or, bending over your pillow, he does not stop to see whether there is color in the cheek, or gentleness in the eye, or intelligence in the brow. But what of that? Must we stand forever mourning among the graves of our dead? No! No! The people in Bengal bring cages of birds to the graves of their dead, and then they open the cages, and the birds go singing heavenward. So I would bring to the graves of your dead all bright thoughts and congratulations and bid them sing of victory and redemption. I stamp on the bottom of the grave, and it breaks through into the light and the glory of heaven. The ancients used to think that the straits entering the Red sea were very dangerous places, and they supposed that every ship that went through those straits would be destroyed, and they were in the habit of putting on weeds of mourning for those who had gone on that voyage, as though they were actually dead. Do you know what they called those straits? They called them the "Gate of Tears." I stand at the gate of tears through which many of your loved ones have gone, and I want to tell you that all are not shipwrecked that have gone through those strains into the great ocean stretching out beyond. The sound that comes from that other shore on still nights when we are wrapped in prayer makes me think that the departed are not dead. We are the dead—we who toil, we who weep, we who sin—we are the dead. How my heart aches for human sorrow! This sound of breaking hearts that I hear all about me! This last look of faces that never will brighten again! This last kiss of lips that never will speak again! This widowhood, and orphanage! Oh when will the day of sorrow be gone!

After the sharpest winter the spring dismounts from the shoulder of a southern gale and puts its warm hand upon the earth, and in its palm there comes the grass, and there come the flowers, and God reads over the poetry of bird and brook and bloom and pronounces it very good. What, my friends, if every winter had not its spring, and every night its day, and every gloom its glow, and every bitter now its sweet hereafter! If you have been on the sea, you know, as the ship passes in the night, there is a phosphorescent track left behind it, and as the waters roll up they toss with unimaginable splendor. Well, across this great ocean of human trouble Jesus walks. Oh, that in the phosphorescent track of his feet we might all follow and be illumined.

There was a gentleman in a rail car who saw in that same car three passengers of very different circumstances. The first was a maniac. He was carefully guarded by his attendants. His mind, like a ship dismasted, was beating against a dark, desolate coast, from which no help could come. The train stopped, and the man was taken out into the asylum, to waste away perhaps through years of gloom. The second passenger was a culprit. The outraged law had seized on him. As the cars jolted the chains rattled. On his face were crime, depravity and despair. The train halted, and he was taken out to the penitentiary, to which he had been condemned. There was the third passenger, under far different circumstances. She was a bride. Every hour was gay as a marriage bell. Life glittered and beckoned. Her companion was taking her to his father's house. The train halted. The old man was there to welcome her to her new home, and his white locks snowed down upon her as he sealed his word with a father's kiss. Quickly we fly toward eternity. We will soon be there. Some leave this life condemned culprits, and they refuse a pardon. Oh, may it be with us that leaving this fleeting life for the next we may find our Father ready to greet us to our new home with him forever. That will be a marriage banquet. Father's welcome! Father's bosom! Father's kiss! Heaven! Heaven!

St. Cuthbert's Coffin.

Canon Greenwell of Durham cathedral has just finished the curious task of piecing together the coffin of St. Cuthbert. The shrine of the great Saxon saint was despoiled by the commissioners of Henry VIII, and the body, which was found to be intact, was reburied in its original coffin in the nave of the church. In 1827 it was again dug up by Dean Hall, who was anxious to verify the condition of the body. On this occasion the outer coffin was broken up and thrown aside. The fragments were, however, eventually saved and have for many years been preserved in the Episcopal library.

Canon Greenwell has now put these hundreds of pieces together, with the result that it is now possible to decipher rough drawings representing St. Cuthbert, the four evangelists, the Virgin and Child, St. Michael the Archangel and the crucifixion, which were rudely but deeply carved upon this interesting relic of Saxon art in the year A. D. 860.—London Letter.

PLAGUE OF MONKEYS.

Their Massacre a Serious Question In India.

The monkey slaughter question has, it appears, assumed a serious aspect just now. It has caused considerable excitement among orthodox Hindoos not only in Orissa and Bengal, but as far as the news has traveled. We seriously warn the authorities against this injudicious proposal of the Puri city fathers, lest the question should lead to some serious consequences. The religious feelings of orthodox Hindoos, who form the majority in India, cannot be trifled with in this manner, and the lessons of the Benares riots should not be thrown away. We are against this slaughter more for the maintenance of peace and order than for anything else. The massacre of the quadrumania itself is a far uglier nuisance than all the mischief committed by monkeys put together.

It may be, however, that these so called ancestors of humanity are giving a good deal of trouble at Puri, but where do they not? Most of the principal seats of Hindoo pilgrimage are literally colonized by these restless brutes, but have they not been tolerated from time immemorial, and has there ever been such a crusade against them? If it is so difficult to put up with them any longer at Puri, cannot they be banished from the town rather than killed?

There are villages in Bengal where these wicked creatures sometimes do considerable harm to villagers, who, by the way, instead of having them swept out of existence, catch the leader of the party, with a process known to every child in Bengal, and painting his face hideously hold a mirror before his eyes—the village chaps making a scaring noise, with accompaniments of dholes and cymbals—with the result that, followed precipitately by the whole party, the heroic captain beats a hasty retreat, never to return to the village again in his life.

It would be far better to have these mischief makers deported to some distant parts than endanger public peace by shocking the religious feelings of the pilgrims by such an, in their view, inhuman action. As many as 15 out of the 21 pundits consulted at Puri are averse to slaughter, and the remaining six dwindle down to a microscopic minority against the mass of pundit opinion supporting orthodoxy in this country. On the other hand, almost all the English and vernacular newspapers in Bengal, Behar and Orissa are strongly protesting.

As to the Puri commissioners and their "airs of absolutism." The Indian Mirror, in a leading article, invites the immediate interference of government. "It is," says our contemporary, "the orthodox Hindoos that have made Puri, and as they have made it, so can they mar it. The time may have come for the intervention of Sir John Woodburn in settlement of this question of monkey slaughter at Puri." And surely the time has come.—Lahore Tribune.

The Secret of Fiona Macleod.

We are told by the London Academy that Miss Fiona Macleod has had to make extraordinary efforts to maintain the secret of her personality.

Miss Macleod's letters have to be re-addressed three or four times before they come into her hands. She is known to a small circle who keep the secret well; her forcible handwriting is known to many. No editor has managed to get her photograph, though one had it in his hands. We doubt if Miss Macleod's publishers have met her. At first Mr. William Sharp did a good deal of her business work, but she superintends it herself now. The mystery as to her identity is not one that will arouse the suspicion of the literary, but certain Gags, whose dislike for Miss Macleod's work amounted to a passion, have sought assiduously to force her to reveal her personality.

Every sort of criticism except that which is literary has been applied to her work. One ardent Gael turned up the files of a Glasgow paper to see if any of the tragedies Miss Macleod depicts actually occurred, another took a census of Iona no difficult task—to discover the originals of her characters. It is startling to learn that their researches were unavailing. Still another Gael is said to have done detective duty opposite a house in Edinburgh, where Miss Macleod sometimes stays, and Miss Macleod is as unknown as ever.

Obstacles to Chinese Progress.

From the Chinese standpoint Tsi An is liberal and progressive, but she is so ignorant and secluded that it is difficult for any foreign ideas to reach her. When she sees something good, she wants it, but she has no conception of the condition of China compared with that of other countries, and of course cannot apply the remedies that are needed. If she could understand the needs of the people, if she could realize the advantages of modern ideas and improvements, she would promptly adopt them. She does not lack intelligence, but knowledge, and has surrounded herself with advisers who have never been outside of China and are even more unenlightened as to modern affairs.

Contrary to the popular impression, Li Hung Chang has not been restored to power. He doubtless retains the friendly relations he has always enjoyed with the empress dowager since he suppressed the Taiping rebellion, but his name does not appear on the list of the new ministry, and he is not a member of the grand council or of the tsung li yamen.—Review of Reviews.

A Fish and a Busybody.

A Philadelphia dealer in birds, dogs and goldfish has a new species of the funny tribe imported from Japan, which swims with the head down in the water in nearly a perpendicular position. A woman stopped before the aquarium the other day and after viewing the new variety, went into the store and ordered the dealer to make the fishes swim with their heads elevated. The dealer became angry over her interference with his business and ordered her from the store. She informed the Society For the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals officials, and an officer was sent to investigate. The fish still swim perpendicularly. Each day

AMERICA'S LAST CAMEL.

He Went to Feed the Indians After a Long and Honorable Career.

The last wild camel in America was killed and eaten by the Indians in Yuma a few days ago. The venerable beast was one of the herd of camels brought from Asia Minor many years ago to carry ore from the Comstock mines. So ends the greatest attempt at acclimating foreign animals ever made in the United States. It seems sad that the noble beast, the last of his tribe, should have such an inglorious end. And yet some sympathy must be given the poor Indians, for they must have been awful hungry to be able to masticate the tough, 75-year-old camel. Besides, the poor camel would most likely have died of slow starvation in a short time, for when last seen alive by white men it was very feeble.

Just who the man was who thought of bringing camels to this country seems to be a matter of some doubt. Several men are credited with having done so, but even the old timers themselves seem to be a little tangled up on this bit of western history. P. T. Barton of Prescott, A. T., who was in the Comstock at the time, said he was positive that the late Adolph Sutro was largely instrumental in bringing the camels here. This, however, has been strenuously denied. Dozens of similar stories are told about other prominent Californians, but little credence can be given to any of them.

But the fact remains that the camels were brought here. On all the points connected with this part of the story the old timers agree.

It was in the old days, when the Comstock was in its glory, the days before the railroad, when Virginia City was almost as important a town as San Francisco. It so happened that a certain group of mines about 25 or 30 miles out of Virginia City was panning out piles of rich ore. It was impossible to put up a mill close to the mines on account of lack of water.

Mules were put to the work, and during the winter months did fairly well, although to feed and care for them was a terrorizing expense. It must be understood that as dry, rocky and barren a desert as there is on the face of the earth lay between Virginia City and the mines. To use a vehicle of any kind was out of the question, and so the ore was carried in bags slung over the backs of the animals.

From the first it was apparent that the mule plan was not a success. In the summer it took about two mules to carry water for the one that carried ore. And all the while the animals kept dying. The intense heat and dry, sandy air were too much for them, and they fell by the wayside so fast that a new band was required almost weekly. But the ore had to be carried to the mill, for there was "millions in it."

At this juncture some genius suggested that the miners' buy camels for the work. So the camels were bought at great expense. Some of them were obtained from the veteran showman, P. T. Barnum, and about 20 came direct from Asia Minor under the care of an agent dispatched from Virginia City.

From the first the camels did all that was expected of them. Each morning they would eat a meager breakfast of any old weed that happened in their way, drink a few gallons of water, and were ready for business. Two bags of ore, each containing between 200 and 300 pounds, were strapped to the back over the hump of each camel.

When the train was ready, all started off at once, striking a good swinging gait that was kept up until the mill was reached. The drivers had nothing to do but follow the train; no stopping for water, no urging, no beatings. The faithful beasts did their work willingly.

CUBANS PROTESTING.

In Santiago General Brooke's Order Again Arouses Them.

TALK OF RETIRING TO THE HILLS

Reports That Bands of Men Are Burning Sugar Cane Which Had Been Prepared For Pressing—The Cubans Will Not Work For Rations.

Santiago de Cuba, Jan. 23.—The order of the United States military authorities directing the authorities of the Santiago military department not to expend a cent of the customs receipts without the permission of the governor general, and the order directing that hereafter the bulk of the sanitary work shall be done without money pay and for rations merely, were given to the local press for publication yesterday, though received here last Thursday.

El Cubano, in commenting upon the instructions of the governor general, says: "The feeling is prevalent that the only course now is to retire to the mountains." This is, of course, an exaggeration, although the fact is that there are people who made just such threats.

As showing how far the province has drifted backward since the first announcement that the customs were not to be freely expended for provincial improvements, the Santiago Herald reports that a band of men are committing wholesale depredations in the Mayari district, where several people have been murdered, and that another band in the Guantanamo district, have burned all the cane prepared for pressing on the Isabel plantation. "These outbreaks," says The Herald, "are the first fruits of the money centralization system."

As yet the Mayari report has not been verified, and Mr. Brooke, owner of the Isabel plantation, says that the burning reported on the plantation must have been done since he left, as the cane there was intact when he started for Santiago. He does not accept the report absolutely, but says that the adjoining plantation, the property of Senor Bueno, was fired at four different points, the entire crop being destroyed.

So far as the order regarding sanitary work is concerned, a Cuban inspector, in the sanitary department, told Major George M. Barbour, the health commissioner of Santiago, that the Cubans of the province had at last regained their self respect and would not work again for rations. "They do good work," he said, "and deserve to be paid in money. If they are ordered again to work for rations, most of them will go to the mountains."

LOCKED IN AN ICE FLOE.

Thrilling Experience of a Ferryboat in the Niagara River.

Buffalo, Jan. 23.—Locked in a huge ice floe, the Canadian ferry boat Niagara, with 19 persons on board, including six women and two children, was swept helplessly down the Niagara river Saturday night and dismantled by the international bridge.

The boat, which plies between this city and Fort Erie, Ont., left her docks near the mouth of the river in the early evening on her last trip of the day. The river was full of floating ice that was drifted in from Lake Erie, but the boat, heading diagonally against the current made her way to the center of the stream. Here she became imbedded in a great field of ice and her engines were powerless to propel her. The current at this point is exceedingly swift and the momentum of the ice field carried the ferryboat with it.

The passengers and crew of the Niagara put on life preservers and stood with blanched faces while the boat swept on with the current. It was evident that the upper works of the boat could not clear the span of the bridge, but the great menace was the piers of solid masonry. The current favored the boat and swept her between the span, a little to the east side of the center of the river. The iron girders of the bridge raked the boat clean of her second deck, carrying away smoke-stack, pilot house, hurricane deck and life boats, without perceptibly impeding her progress. The passengers and crew were below deck, and escaped injury from the wreckage.

Swinging clear of the bridge the Niagara broke free from the floe and drifted into clear water. Then the dismembered craft slowly worked to a dock on the American shore.

WHOLE VILLAGES DESTROYED.

Southern Greece Visited by Destructive Shocks of Earthquake.

Athens, Jan. 23.—A strong seismic disturbance was felt yesterday forenoon throughout the Peloponnesus (the southern part of the kingdom of Greece), especially in the southwestern departments of the peninsula. All the houses in the town of Philatra, in the department of Messenia on the Ionian coast, have been damaged, and the inhabitants are now camping out in the suburbs. Two villages in the vicinity of Philatra were completely destroyed, many people being slightly injured.

The villages of Kyparissia and Staso were also practically destroyed, though it is not known as yet whether there were any victims there.

Much damage to property was done at Navarino, a seaport six miles north of Modon, whose harbor witnessed the victory of the English, French and Russian fleets over those of the Turks and Egyptians in 1827, and terrible loss is reported from Calamata, capital of the department of Messenia, near the head of the Gulf of Koron.

The shock was severely felt in the district of Zante, capital of the Ionian Island of that name, but there was no loss of life or property there. Many slighter shocks occurred during the day, and the people at numerous towns and villages are afraid to return to their houses.

The authorities are doing all in their power to furnish tents and supplies.

Nicaragua Canal Bill Passed the Senate
Washington, Jan. 23.—The senate on Saturday, after weeks of weary debate and dilatory maneuvers on the part of a few senators, passed the bill authorizing the construction of the Nicaragua canal by the overwhelming vote of 48 to 6. This vote is regarded as indicative of the tremendous sentiment in the country in favor of the canal.

What Scared the Czar.

At the recent banquet in San Francisco given Irving M. Scott, the builder of the Oregon, upon his return from Russia, Mayor James D. Phelan called forth the plaudits of the evening by a speech, in which he described the interview between the czar and Mr. Scott as follows:

"Having heard so much about the builder of the Oregon, the czar sent for him when he wanted to build some nice, new battleships of his own.

"Let me see your schedule of prices," said the emperor of all the Russias.

"Mr. Scott handed over one of his price lists. The czar glanced at the first figure that caught his eye. Then he retired to study them over.

"Before awarding the contracts," he said to Mr. Scott, 'I want to examine these prices carefully.'

"On the following day the czar issued his famous appeal for the disarmament of the whole world."—San Francisco News Letter.

Grip and Dry Feet.

A correspondent of the New York Times, who styles himself "Somewhat of an Authority on Grip," stated the other day that since he has been careful to keep his feet dry he has not suffered from influenza, and that having previously had it four years in succession he is certain that the ailment was always contracted through the feet.

Another correspondent now bobs up to observe that he has had influenza five years in succession, and that he has two wooden legs!

A BATTLE IN SAMOA.

Chief Mataafa's Followers Defeat the Forces of King Malietoa.

THE GERMAN CONSUL DEFIANT.

He Took Possession of the Supreme Court, But Was Forcefully Ousted by the American and British Marines.
The News Excites Alarm in Berlin.

Auckland, N. Z., Jan. 19.—Samoa news just received here say that Chief Justice Chambers, on Dec. 31, declared Malietoa Tanus to have been elected king in succession to the late King Malietoa. The chief justice also announced that Tamasese had been elected vice king. Chief Mataafa was disqualified.

The consuls of the United States and Great Britain and the captains of the German warship Falke and the British warship Porpoise met the German consul, who refused to recognize Malietoa Tanus, and declined to co-operate in the dispersal of the Samoans, who thereupon assembled in large numbers at Mulinu, armed themselves and surrounded the municipality. Malietoa Tanus and Tamasese mustered about 2,000 men, well armed, but supplied with defective ammunition. The British and American consuls endeavored to avert hostilities, but they commenced on Jan. 1. Malietoa Tanus and Tamasese fought bravely, but 500 of their followers were captured. Then, disheartened and outnumbered, the two chiefs sought refuge on the British warship and their followers sought protection under the guns of the Porpoise.

Mataafa's loss was 61 killed and wounded, and Malietoa Tanus lost 12 men killed and wounded.

The foreign residents were placed under the protection of a detachment of men belonging to the British ships.

The followers of Mataafa looted and burned Apia, destroyed the plantations and pillaged considerably in the country, but when the American and British marines landed they retired to the hills.

The British and American consuls adjourned the court and locked the building. The German consul then demanded the keys, which were refused him. He then broke open the doors, removed the locks and replaced them with others. He afterwards brought the German municipal president into the chamber, and the latter went upon the balcony and shouted to the British and American marines assembled on the square: "I am the supreme court! I am the chief justice!"

The crowd replied with jeers, and the British consul demanded the keys of the building, which were refused.

A Scotchman named Mackie thereupon climbed on top of the building and hoisted the Samoan flag, while the British and American consuls and a number of marines invaded the building, forced the doors open and pushed the German consul into the street.

Then the two consuls issued a warning against any further interference with its jurisdiction, threatening to arrest and imprison any one attempting to do so.

THE GERMANS FRIENDLY.

They Will Make No Extravagant Demands in Samoa.

London, Jan. 23.—The Berlin correspondent of The Times says:

"There are good reasons for believing that the German government regards the maintenance of cordial relations with Great Britain and the United States as far more important than even German commercial interests in Samoa. The tone of the leading journals, therefore, is, on the whole, free from bitterness or exaggeration.

"In a word, there are many indications that Germany will not frustrate a revision of the treaty of Berlin by extravagant demands, such as for the cession of the islands to Germany. The Kolnische Zeitung ridicules the report that Dr. Von Holleben (German ambassador at Washington) has compared Mr. Berry's remarks in the house of representatives and says that the United States ambassador in Berlin (Mr. White) might as well have complained of Herr Ahlwardt's anti-American ravings in the reichstag."

The Americans at Munich have decided to send to the Washington government a protest against the anti-German expressions used in the house of representatives and a declaration that no animosity against America exists in Germany, where Americans always meet with the most friendly reception.

Proposed Monument to Longfellow.

Washington, Jan. 23.—The executive committee of the Longfellow National Memorial association, formed for the purpose of erecting a statue of the poet in Washington, has issued an appeal to the public for subscriptions to accomplish this purpose. The committee estimates that $35,000 will be needed to procure a statue worthy of the poet and the site. The smallest contributions will be welcomed. The Riggs National bank, of Washington, has consented to act as financial agent of the memorial association, and checks may be made payable to it.

The Congo Rebellion.

Brussels, Jan. 23.—There has been fresh fighting in the Congo state between the Belgian troops and the rebels, the former having sustained heavy losses, including some white officers killed. Le Patriote says: "The real truth as to the situation in the Congo state is being hidden. The losses of the Congo state troops of late have been much underestimated here. The whole country is in a ferment and the rebellion is not being put down. The government troops appear to fear the rebels and the prestige of the whites has been much impaired."

To Court Martial Egan.

Washington, Jan. 18.—The president yesterday announced to the cabinet that he had decided to order a court martial to try Commissary General Egan for the abusive and violent language he had used respecting Major General Nelson A. Miles, while on the witness stand before the war investigating commission last Thursday. The decision promptly met with the unanimous approval of the members of the cabinet. The court is made up of 13 army officers, of whom Major General Wesley Merritt is at the head.

Curt and Witty.

"The following story of the Archbishop of Canterbury," says The Sunday Magazine, "came from Lambeth the other day, and even if it be not quite authentic it illustrates most admirably the archiepiscopal method with those of his clergy who have not won his favor, as well as the rugged aptness of his wit. An incumbent of a living wanted to hold another living in plurality, and therefore had to apply to the archbishop for leave to do so. What happened may without disrespect to the cloth be put in a dramatic form:

Scene—Lambeth. Time, 1897.

Archbishop—How far is the new living from your present cure?

Applicant—About six miles as the crow flies, your grace.

Archbishop—You're not a crow, you can't fly, and you shan't have it.

Curtain.

Old John Bryant.

John Bryant, brother of William Oulien Bryant, is living in Princeton, Ills., in good health. A relative living in Belleview, Fla., writes of him: "John Bryant was 91 years old last July, I think. He writes me quite often, though it is some time now since I have heard, not since he went north in the spring. I suppose if he is well he will be in St. Nicholas, near Jacksonville, this winter. That is where he usually goes. His mind is bright as ever, and for his age he is quite active; cannot see to read evenings, so some of us used to plan to have a few games of whist every evening to while away the long hours for him."

Messrs. Schurman and Webster Preparing For the Manila Trip.

Washington, Jan. 21.—Two members of the Philippines commission, President Schurman of Cornell and Professor Worcester of Ann Arbor university, will leave Vancouver, B. C., Jan. 30 for Manila. They will be followed about a fortnight later by Colonel Denby, the remaining civilian member, who is still sitting as a member of the war investigating commission. At Manila the three civilian members will be joined by Admiral Dewey and Major General Otis, who will complete the commission. Both President Schurman and Professor Worcester have had their final interviews with the president, and they received the instructions which shall govern them in making their investigations and report as to the policy to be pursued by this government towards the islands.

It will be in the early days of March before a majority of the members are ready to begin their work, which the president expects will consume several months. Each of the commissioners will have assigned to himself a clerk especially selected by him whom he deems best fitted to assist in the branch of the work undertaken. Mr. Schurman has selected for his assistant F. E. Gannett, a student in the graduate department of Cornell, who has made a specialty of the study of political science. Professor Worcester has left the city for Ann Arbor, where he will select some one, and Colonel Denby's son will accompany him.

Major Sawyer, of the army, will be designated as disbursing officer, and the offices of secretary, recorder and assistant secretary will be filled when the commission assembles at Manila. Two stenographers will also be taken.

THE PAUL JONES WRECKED.

An Explosion Caused the Death of the Eight Persons on Board.

Mobile, Ala., Jan. 21.—The government steamer Pansy touched at Biloxi, Miss., yesterday afternoon and reported finding on Breton Island a part of the stern of the naptha launch Paul Jones, also a yawl boat with bow smashed and other small articles from the launch. The condition of the wreckage tends to show that the yacht blew up. The Pansy met the tug Maud, with Messrs. Jones and Taggart. The latter visited the wreckage and identified it as part of the Paul Jones. No bodies were found.

The launch had the following pleasure seekers on board: Joseph Brinkman, Louisville, Ky.; Miss Florence Taggart, daughter of Mayor Taggart, Indianapolis; Miss Marjorie Woodland, daughter of George Woodland, vice president of Prairie State bank, Chicago; Colonel Harry C. Yocum, St. Louis; Miss Florence Yocum, his daughter. The crew consisted of three men, whose names are unknown.

News confirming her loss has been brought by oyster fishermen, who have known of it for more than a week. The launch exploded, they say, on or about Jan. 6, near Bird Island, and everything goes to show that all on board were killed at once or drowned soon after.

Esterhazy Released From His Oath.

Paris, Jan. 23.—Major Comte Ferdinand Walsin Esterhazy, the reputed author of the Dreyfus bordereau, who arrived here Wednesday evening from Rotterdam to testify before the court of cassation, wrote on Saturday to M. De Freycinet, the minister of war, asking to be released from his oath of professional secrecy. M. De Freycinet yesterday acceded to his request. Comte Esterhazy continues to decline to receive visitors.

Three Drowned in Reservoir.

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 23.—Three children of John and Susie Shear were drowned in the reservoir at Ravenna yesterday. They had been playing on the ice and broke through.

The Union Central Life Insurance Co., of Cincinnati, is now thirty-one years old, and has $20,000,000 assets, with a surplus of $3,000,000. The company is now doubling in size every five years, and the insurance reports show that it makes the highest interest rate and lowest death rate for its policy holders of all the old line companies; hence it is one of the best managed financial institutions in this country to-day, and can but make the best returns to policy holders. Its size, location, management make it an ideal company for investment, besides furnishing the very best protection to the loved ones in the event that death overtakes you early, or, as a saving to come to you in your old age, should an All-Wise Providence spare you that long.

To-day is the time to insure. Tomorrow may never come. Death may overtake you, bad health may claim you as a victim at any moment; hence, do not put off such an important step, but take your insurance right away.

Call or write to R. S. Tuck, General Agent, Chamber of Commerce Building, Richmond, Va., at once, and learn of the matchless advantages of the Union Central and investigate the new guaranty policy they write, which is unquestionably the most model policy contract issued by any company, and if you need any assistance the company will always help you in carrying it. R. L. CLIBORNE, Local Agent, Blackstone, Va.

RECOMMENDATION: The editor of the Recorder believes the Union Central to be one of the best companies in the country, and is as well pleased with his policy as with the one he holds in the Equitable, Northwestern and New York Life.

SCHOOLS ARE NEEDED.

The Lack of Educational Facilities in Porto Rico.

THE WORK OF RECONSTRUCTION,

Declares Captain Gardner, in an Interesting Report, Must Be Done by Men of Disinterested Motives—Many Big Country Districts Without Schools.

Washington, Jan. 23.—"If Porto Rico is to become a credit to the United States," says Captain Augustus P. Gardner, assistant adjutant general of volunteers, in an interesting report to Assistant Secretary of War Melick John upon the educational and other affairs of the Island of Porto Rico, "and not a continual thorn in her side, it is as certain as the rising of the sun that the work of reconstruction must be done by men of disinterested motives."

In considering, says Captain Gardner, the various elements which go to make up the social system of Porto Rico, the most worthy of a detailed examination is the method of education. It is on this branch that the fruits which it is hoped may be gathered in the future must all ripen.

What purports to be a census of the island is taken every ten years. But the only one ever published, apparently, was that of 1887. In this the population was given at 806,808, of whom 111,380, or 16 per cent, could neither read nor write. A comparison of these figures with those of a so-called rectification of the census for 1883 reveals a gross blunder somewhere, as according to the returns for that year 238,294, or over twice as many people as four years later, could neither read nor write.

For the city of Ponce there is an excellent census for the year 1897, well compiled and to all appearances accurate. According to that the city jurisdiction covers a population of 49,000. The percentage who could read and write was 29.37-100. Captain Gardner believes this percentage is very much too high.

Captain Gardner says it is safe to estimate the number of schools in the island at 600 at the outside, of which less than 40 are private or religious schools. In the larger townships there is one school to about every 1,000 inhabitants. But education is laid on a great deal thinner in many parts of the island, large country districts being without schools entirely, notwithstanding a compulsory school attendance law. As each township pays for its own schools it is impossible to estimate the amount spent on education annually in the island. But the state's contribution amounts to about 6,000 pesos per year, out of which is supported certain institutions.

Summarizing the situation as a whole there exists on the island a fairly good skeleton on which to construct a school system. The difficulty arises from the scarcity of competent and reliable teachers. In the nature of things, for the present, but little progress can be made by American teachers sent to the island. Their sphere of usefulness will not include Porto Rico until such time as a knowledge of the English language has begun to permeate all classes.

With regard to the religious question Captain Gardner says it does not appear that the inhabitants of the island have ever taken their religion with any degree of seriousness, probably owing to the fact that the church is regarded as one of the means by which Spain undertook to maintain her sovereignty over the island and to provide for the maintenance of such of her clergy as could not be supported at home. Altogether the clerical establishment maintains about 240 priests and assistants, the sum total of whose salaries amounts to about 150,000 pesos annually. The salaries of all these priests, which have heretofore been paid by the state, have now been cut off, a state of affairs which seems to be viewed with perfect equanimity by all except the priesthood itself.

That the population of Porto Rico as a whole has serious grounds of complaint on account of excessive taxation is not proved. But that this taxation was so distributed and administered as to seriously interfere with the small, and especially with the native merchants or planters, cannot be doubted. The total amount raised by national taxation has been of late years rather more than 4,500,000 pesos, a sum equal to a little over four and a half pesos per inhabitant. To Americans, who are accustomed to a national taxation of some $7 per capita, the Porto Rican figures seem exceedingly small. Contrary to the belief which has been strenuously engendered the fact is that out of this 4,500,000 pesos but 350,000 go directly to Spain in the form of pensions. As in all governments, the expenses are largely for salaries, and the indignation of the Porto Ricans is vast that these salaries are for the most part paid to citizens of Spanish birth.

Concluding the report says: "The reorganization of all these various elements in the Porto Rican social system is an undertaking of enormous difficulty. If the best men are not put to this understanding, but the island is allowed to become a political plaything, the Porto Rican will be worse off than he was under Spain."

A Terrible Destroyer.

New York, Jan. 20.—During the gun tests at Sandy Hook yesterday a new high explosive shell was fired from a 12-inch gun. The charge of the shell consists of gun cotton, detonated by a special primer. At this test the gun was aimed at an armor plate, heavily backed up. The shot struck near the center, penetrated the steel and exploded. After the smoke passed off the members of the board went down and looked for the plate. Here and there they found a few ragged pieces of steel, but the main part of the plate was blown off the face of the Hook.

More Gold From the Klondike.

Victoria, B. C., Jan. 20.—The steamer Danube, which arrived from the north yesterday, brought about 60 men from Dawson and Atlin, with about $400,000 in gold dust. The Dawson men say the Upper Dominion creek is panning out well, running from $2.50 to $4 a pan. A great deal of typhoid fever is reported at Dawson, some say fully 800 cases. Seven men have been frozen to death in the Klondike this winter.

Margharita at the Vatican.

At a recent performance in the Vatican of one of Father Perosi's oratorios, which have been attracting great attention in Italy, Queen Margharita attended incognito—a circumstance considered noteworthy in view of the long strained relations between the court and the Vatican. Permission was sought of the vicar general to have a passage opened for the queen from the military casino, which immediately adjoins the chapel where the music was performed, but received the answer that he must apply to the cardinal secretary, which he was unwilling to do. The queen therefore went as she did.

CHAPTER 1.

1 The genealogy of Jesus Christ; 19 Mary's miraculous conception; Jesus is born: 21, 23 his names.

THE book of the generation of Jē'sus Christ, the son of Dā'vid, the son of Ābrāhām.

2 Ābrāhām begat Isaac; and Isaac begat Jā'cob; and Jā'cob begat Jū'das and his brethren;

3 And Jū'das begat Phā'res and Zārā of Thā'mar; and Phā'res begat Es'rom; and Es'rom begat Ā'rām;

4 And Ā'rām begat Ā'mīnādāb; and Ā'mīnādāb begat Nā'sōn; and Nā'sōn begat Sāl'mōn;

5 And Sāl'mōn begat Bō'oz of Rā'chāb; and Bō'oz begat O'bēd of Rūtā; and O'bēd begat Jō'sē;

6 And Jō'sē begat Dā'vid the king; and Dā'vid the king begat Sō'lō'mōn; and Sō'lō'mōn begat Rō'bō'am; and Rō'bō'am begat A-bi'ā; and A-bi'ā begat A'sā;

8 And A'sā begat Jō'sāphāt; and Jō'sāphāt begat Jō'rām; and Jō'rām begat Oz'ās;

9 And Oz'ās begat Jō'āhāz; and Jō'āhāz begat Šē'ar'zār; and Šē'ar'zār begat Zō'robābel; and Zō'robābel begat E-lī'ā-kīm; and E-lī'ā-kīm begat Šō'ā;

14 And Šō'ā begat Sā'dōc; and Sā'dōc begat A'chīm; and A'chīm begat E-lī'ud; and E-lī'ud begat E-le'azar; and E-le'azar begat Māt'than;

16 And Jā'cob begat Jō'seph the husband of Mā'ry, of whom was born Jē'sus, who is called Christ.

17 So all the generations from Ābrāhām to Dā'vid are fourteen generations; and from Dā'vid until the carrying away into Bāb'ylōn are fourteen generations; and from the carrying away into Bāb'ylōn unto Christ are fourteen generations.

18 ¶ Now the birth of Jē'sus Christ was on this wise: When as his mother

Mā'ry was espoused to Jō'seph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Hō'ly Ghost.

19 Then Jō'seph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a publick example, was minded to put her away privily.

20 But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Jō'seph, thou son of Dā'vid, fear not to take unto thee Mā'ry thy wife: for p that which is conceived in her is of the Hō'ly Ghost.

21 And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jē'sus: for he shall save his people from their sins.

22 Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying,

23 Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Em-mā-nu-ēl, which being interpreted is, God with us.

24 Then Jō'seph being raised from sleep did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife;

25 And knew her not till she had brought forth her firstborn son: and he called his name Jē'sus.

CHAPTER 2.

1 Wise men enquire after Christ, 13 Joseph fleeth into Egypt, 16 Herod slayeth the children: 19 Christ brought out of Egypt.

NOW when Jē'sus was born in Bēth-le-hēm of Jū-dā'ā in the days of Hēr'od the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jē-rū'sā-lēm,

2 Saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him.

3 When Hēr'od the king had heard these things, he was troubled, and all Jē-rū'sā-lēm with him.

4 And when he had gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Christ should be born.

5 And they said unto him, In Bēth-le-hēm of Jū-dā'ā: for thus it is written by the prophet,

6 And thou Bēth-le-hēm, in the land of Jū-dā, art not the least among the princes of Jū-dā: for out of thee shall come a governor, that shall rule my people Is'ra-el.

7 Then Hēr'od, when he had privily called the wise men, enquired of them diligently what time the star appeared.

8 And he sent them to Bēth-le-hēm, and

Facts and Questions

FOR

Parents and Pastors

"It is not enough to educate. We must put an idea into our education if it is to be saved. That idea is the Son of God."—Dr. J. C. Kilgo in address before Virginia Conference.

(1) Fatally Defective! What? All education that lacks the thought quoted above as its corner stone.

(2) You desire your daughter to become a well educated woman. But do you not desire most of all that she shall be a well educated CHRISTIAN woman?

(3) The spiritual character of the school which your daughter attends will greatly influence her work in this world and her location in the world to come.

(4) As a christian man, do you not believe that God expects you to use the very best care in this important matter, and will hold you responsible for the selection you make? Have you a right to place her in any school which does not say with emphasis that growth in grace is above social polish and mere intellectual culture?

(5) Can you conscientiously place her in a State school, which from its very nature ignores religious training, even if by so doing you should save $20 a year? If you can raise $122 to develop her intellect can you not raise $20 more to develop her soul at the same time?

(6) The Methodist Church in the Virginia Conference has now a system of schools to which parents can safely entrust their children, "Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." They belong absolutely to the Church. They have been built solely to meet the needs of our people. They are not private schools in any sense of the word. They do not have that serious defect of private schools—LACK OF PERMANENCY. They do not die or pass into the hands of the State or of other parties when the owner dies, or gets tired of teaching, or fails to make a success of his work. In a nutshell, they were, not established in order to make a fortune or as a means of making a living. They have only one aim—THOROUGH INSTRUCTION UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

(7) This system was established for your children. Will you give them the benefit of it? The Randolph-Macon Woman's College has been established for the higher education of women.

The Blackstone Female Institute

Is one of the two schools in the Conference for younger girls which belongs ABSOLUTELY to the Church. Its success has been great from the start. Of it the Board of Education of the Annual Conference spoke as follows:

"The Blackstone Institute is owned entirely by our Church. It is not in any sense a private corporation or stock company, but stands in the same relation to the Church as the Randolph-Macon system. While not in the Randolph-Macon system, the course of study is correlated with the Woman's College, and stands related to the latter as the academies to the college at Ashland. The Institute is in a most prosperous condition, having now, at the beginning of its fourth year, a patronage of 170. It is thoroughly Methodist in ownership and spirit, every officer and teacher being an active member of our Church."

At a meeting of the Trustees of Randolph-Macon College, held June 17, 1896, the following resolution was adopted—viz:

"RESOLVED, That next to the institutions under our special care, we feel deepest interest in the Blackstone Female Institute, under the superintendency of Rev. James Cannon, Jr., which is owned entirely by our Church; and that we regard it and commend it to our people as holding a tributary relation to our Woman's College at Lynchburg, akin to that of our Academies to our College at Ashland."

Send Your Daughter to a Christian School!

THREE-FOLD WORK OF THE INSTITUTE.

- (1) Gives Diploma of Graduation to all who complete the work of the Institute.
- (2) Prepares for the Randolph-Macon Woman's College those desiring to take the higher work of that institution.
- (3) Teachers' course—giving special training to those desiring to fit themselves to teach either in private or public schools.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Feb.
6, "Idle in the Market Place."
Text, Math. xx. 1-16.

"Why stand ye here all the day idle?"

There is vineyard labor to be done. The owner is in earnest to find workmen willing to labor. He shows this by bargaining with the early comers. This is not enough, for he goes again at the third, sixth and ninth hours and engages all the unemployed men he finds. Even when but one hour of the working day remains he engages those whom he finds in the market place idle. Surely the Lord of the vineyard intends to have His work done.

He is fair in His bargains. He agrees to pay an equitable wage for the work.

He is also benevolent in His intentions. He is under no obligations to pay the laborer of an hour the full wage of the day. But His benevolence is shown in the freeness with which He rewards the shortest service.

Our God has far-reaching intentions, not even faintly conceived by the highest of His creatures. His plans cover the coming eternities. He is cultivating a vineyard as extensive as the universe. His purposes are as deep and broad as infinity. He seeks helpers to work with Him in this labor. He invites men to His service. He comes in person and calls to labor. Every interest of men urges them to accept the work of God and do His bidding. Yet there are in every community idlers who have no aim in life, no hope in death, no prospect beyond the horizon of today. Aimless lives! Such are never happy, never successful. Zest in life, true enjoyment, comes from a fixed purpose, a worthy aim. No other incentive in life can compare with conscious work begun and carried on under a divine call and impulse.

This call of God to us is not usually a call to the Christian ministry. It is not merely a call to repent of sins and lead a pure life. It is more than forgiveness of transgressions and a witness of the holy spirit to acceptance and peace. It is more than an occasional impulse to speak in meeting, to give money to charitable purposes, to seek the ungodly and lead them to Christ. It is a definite call to every soul to fully devote all powers and opportunities to God's service. It embraces all the thoughts and acts. It includes the whole daily business, home life, private inner life and public appearance. It means the full engagement of every energy definitely to bring in Christ's kingdom. All toil for daily bread is a part of the service. Home keeping and household cares are in the scheme. Whoever enters God's service does the routine round of duties no longer for self alone, nor for wife or children, but because God has hired him and rewards the exertion. All toil acquires new meaning when one hires out to God.

"Go ye also into the vineyard."

Peace and Prosperity.

Christian people and nations are now and always will be the salt of the earth, and the nation that will not serve Him in working out the history of the race shall perish. Our prayers He will hear and our service He will surely reward. This sort of obedience in carrying out His designs for the welfare of the nations is better than sacrifice. Let the United States beware of pride and folly while reaping the glorious fruits of this season of divine favor. Our prayer is for peace, prosperity, liberty, good government and true religious education.—Reformed Church Messenger.

Fighting Ministers.

Even the ministers of the gospel of peace are stirred in these times by the military spirit. Not only have they gone as chaplains, but some, desiring to know what is the real life of the soldier, have gone as privates. There is one instance of a minister, a most vigorous opponent of war, who has enlisted as a private, that he may know for himself what war is. His arguments for peace will be drawn from experience.—Christian Register.

Duty's Path.

Duty's path always lies forward. We go on, not before we start; but we obey and move forward. Yet we must not expect there will never be any difficulties to meet or obstacles to surmount. God never has promised that. Too easy a path is often a bane in life, not a blessing. The difficulties and obstacles that remain may be made stepping stones by which we shall rise to higher things.—J. R. Miller, D. D.

Give as Well as Receive.

Give out as well as take in or expend as well as receive. God never intended us to, selfishly enjoy the good things of His Providence and of His grace, but to be distributors of His material and gracious bounties. There is a peculiar pleasure in giving which more than compensates for the relinquishment of what we lay out for others' benefit.—Presbyterian.

A Degenerate.

A man named Jean Perrin fired at President Carnot of France in May, 1889. Perrin, whose plea was that his act was only intended to excite notice, was condemned to four months' imprisonment. He was pardoned by M. Carnot, who actually obtained for him a tax collector's place at Crepy en Valois. There he embezzled the funds, and was sentenced to two years' imprisonment. He was again arrested for theft the other day.

Our Glorious Climate.

Says the Boston Transcript: "A recently arrived Frenchman who visited a well known Boston establishment one day this week to fit himself out for a long journey to the west was complaining bitterly of the cold. 'Don't you have cold weather in France?' asked the salesman who waited on him. 'Why, certainly, we have ze cold weather in France,' was the reply, 'but we do not have ze all four seasons in one day in France.'"

Teach Me to Live.

Teach me to live! 'Tis easier far to die—
Gently and silently pass away,
On earth's long night to close the heavy eye
And waken in the glorious realms of day.

Teach me that harder lesson—how to live,
To serve Thee in the darkest paths of life!
Arm me for conflict now, fresh vigor give
And make me more than conqueror in the strife!

Teach me to live for self and sin no more,
But use the time remaining to me yet,
Not mine own pleasure seeking as before,
Wasting no precious hours in vain regret!

Teach me to live, my daily cross to bear,
Nor murmur, though I bend beneath its load!
Only be with me; let me feel Thee near;
Thy smile sheds gladness on the darkest road.

Teach me to live and find my life in Thee,
Looking from earth and earthly things away!
Let me not falter, but untiringly
Press on and gain new strength and power each day!

MUST A MAN LIVE?

"A man must live." We justify Lowly and rich to treason, high,
A little vote for a little gold,
To a whole Senate bought and sold,
With this self-evident reply.

But is it so? Pray, tell me why
Life at such cost you have to buy?
In what religion were you told
"A man must live?"

There are times when a man must die.
Imagine for a battle-cry

From soldiers, with a sword to hold—
From soldiers, with the flag unrolled—
This coward's whine, this liar's lie:
"A man must live!"

How strange this conflict of our daily life,
This human life, with all its loves and pains,
With all its heavy losses and its gains,
With all its joys and all its grief and strife.

A nation struggles through mistake and sin,
Brave lives are lost, and fiercer grows the fight.
Through dark, sad years, men grope toward the light,
And through the darkness they see the dawn begin.

Rise up, my soul, to fight thine own good part,
For everywhere is victory born of pain.
Rise o'er the ashes of thy passion slain;
Be strong to bear and to endure, O heart!

—Silver Cross.

EDITORIAL.

NEW CENTURY EDUCATION.

The General Board of Education has begun to issue a connectional paper called "New Century Education," which will bring before the membership the facts in connection with their great branch of our Church work. As the General Conference committed to the General Board of Education the work of raising the Twentieth Century Thank Offering of $1,500,000, the new paper will give much of its space to this great movement. The Recorder thinks that this is the great work before the Church for the next two years, and will try to give everything of importance about it to its readers. The editorial department is given up this week to articles from "New Century Education" on this subject, including the appeal of Bishop Galloway, the president of the Board, the joint address of the bishops, the letters from our connectional secretaries, the action of the General Conference, the statement of our educational policy by Dr. Hammond, and items in reference to the work elsewhere. The importance of this matter will explain to our correspondents why articles on other matters have been omitted.

AN APPEAL.

(By Bishop C. B. Galloway.)

As the President of the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, I make special and earnest appeal in behalf of the Twentieth Century Education Fund, for which the General Conference gave authority and made provision. The close of an eventful century and the hopeful morning of a new furnish a happy opportunity for our great Methodism to make a monumental thank offering to God. Mighty things have been wrought during the past one hundred years under a favoring and guiding Providence that call for public and grateful recognition. The wilderness and the solitary place have been glad, while the desert has been made to rejoice and blossom as the rose. The little company has become a great army. The cloud, no longer than a man's hand, has overcast the heavens, and rained its life-giving blessings upon the whole land. We have seen "the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God." Surely, we have occasion for profound and unceasing gratitude. And then we are facing a mighty future. A new century of marvellous opportunity is ready to dawn. Its imperative demands call for deeper consecration and better equipment for service. To secure such preparation is the divine significance of this timely movement. As to its broad scope and the high purpose which inspired it, the reader is referred to the admirable report adopted by the General Conference and published in all our connectional journals. That report wisely suggests that "preparation for our work in the twentieth century should begin with a great reinforcement of our educational strongholds, literary and theological." Too much emphasis cannot be placed upon this statesman-like and apostolic suggestion. We cannot do the work of the twentieth century with the crude implements and inadequate equipment of the nineteenth. These were sufficient for the exigencies of the past, but cannot cope with the emergencies and tremendous responsibilities of the future.

During the session of the first Ecumenical Methodist Conference, which met in City Road Chapel in 1881, the London Times paid generous tribute to the rapid and splendid progress of Methodism, but raised a question as to its "staying power." In my judgment, the only successful answer to that solemn question of a friendly critic is to be found in Methodism's well organized and thoroughly equipped institutions of Christian learning. If it is to live and grow as a distinct and mighty ecclesiastical and spiritual organization in the world; if it is not to pass on as a simple revival influence affecting the life of other great churches—the conserving and reproducing forces of education must receive intelligent and increased attention. The aggressive power of Methodism is in a divinely called and Spirit-baptized itinerant ministry. Its "staying power" is in the Christian schools, where youth is carefully and religiously fitted both for life and eternal life.

The material strengthening of our educational institutions is an immediate and imperative need. I do not believe the General Conference overstated the serious fact in saying that "in all cases it is important that we advance; in some we have only the alternative to advance or abandon the field altogether."

It is proposed, therefore, to raise $1,500,000 for the educational work of the Church. Of this amount seventy-five per cent. will be retained in the several Annual Conferences for such application as they may order; and the balance, after deducting expenses of the canvass, shall be devoted to the endowment of the theological department of Vanderbilt University.

Plans for a thorough canvass of the entire Church will be perfected as soon as possible by the General Board of Education; but if the movement in its successful issue is to be any approximate expression of the Church's gratitude to God and any adequate preparation for the exacting duties and awful responsibilities of the portentous future, the whole connection must rally to its support. For such sympathy and help I make earnest entreaty.

The co-operation of all Conference Boards of Education is invited. The Annual Conferences, with remarkable unanimity, and not a few with marked cordiality, have indorsed this "forward movement" in Christian education. They expect their pastors and local boards to carry out this heartily expressed approval of the Twentieth Century Fund. Early and thorough organization is advised. Sow down the Conferences with literature, and see to it that sermons and addresses on Christian education are delivered in every church.

Some, notably the Louisville Conference Board, have already taken action, voluntarily assuming even more than their proportion of the proposed $1,500,000. This evidences intelligent and conscientious interest, that must command the largest success. We only need concerted and well-directed effort to make this movement the grandest epoch in Southern Methodism.

Much depends upon the Conference Secretary of Education. He should magnify his office by an active, aggressive leadership and a comprehensive grasp of the mighty work to be accomplished.

Able men, thoroughly furnished for such high service, will be secured to aid in the canvass as the needs of different sections seem to require. To some honored brethren who have already agreed to engage in this work of love, I am most grateful.

But upon the pastors rest most heavily the success of this movement. What they ordain will surely come to pass. If active and urgent, their people will freely give; if unappreciative and inattentive, their pastoral charges will make meager or no reports. The preacher in our Methodism is the key to every situation, the determining factor in every question, the condition of every success or failure. My earnest appeal, therefore, is to the noble men who stand next the people, and to whom they look for instruction and leadership. If their hearts are thoroughly enlisted in this magnificent movement, we may at once rejoice in a victory already assured. I would solicit every pastor to at once begin to lay plans for a systematic canvass of his charge, with the purpose of securing at least an average of one dollar per member as a special thank offering for Christian education. Of course, some wealthy churches will increase this amount a hundredfold and more.

To pastors, presiding elders, teachers, editors, connectional officers, and lay members, I appeal for hearty and continued co-operation. And out of this widespread educational quickening I pray there may come throughout the connection a great spiritual awakening, that will demonstrate, as in the early days, the converting and sanctifying power of a God "mighty to save." Thus will the movement in behalf of the Twentieth Century Fund result in a better and larger spiritual equipment with which to meet twentieth century opportunities and responsibilities.

FROM OUR BISHOPS.

To the Ministers and Members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South:

Brethren,—The General Conference, at its late session in Baltimore, Md., by a unanimous vote passed resolutions in favor of raising a Twentieth Century Education Fund, to commemorate the signal blessings of God upon our Church during the past one hundred years. The minimum amount suggested as an appropriate thank offering, on the morning of the new century, is $1,500,000. This surely is a modest sum to be given by a million and a half Southern Methodists. We desire, as your chief pastors, to earnestly commend this most important and timely movement. It is eminently fitting that we should celebrate the birth of a new century of opportunity by generous offerings to the great educational work of our Church. The General Board of Education is perfecting plans for a thorough canvass of the connection in this interest. We would affectionately urge you to cordially co-operate with these efforts and thereby make sure the largest success of this noble enterprise. The General Conference has placed this matter before the Church as of chiefest concern. It is suggested, therefore, that local or other connectional enterprises should not be allowed to give this Twentieth Century Fund a secondary or unimportant place. In addition to the regular tithes we bring to the Church, let this be a special and liberal thank offering. By a reconsecration of ourselves, soul, body, substance, to the Lord, we may make this connectional movement monumental, and provide ampler equipment for nobler work during the next century of wider opportunity and greater responsibility.

Owing to the absence of Bishop Wilson from the country his signature could not be secured.

CONNECTIONAL CO-OPERATION.

BOARD OF MISSIONS.—Nashville, Tenn., January 11, 1899.—Personally and officially we are greatly interested in the Twentieth Century Educational Movement of our Church. Much depends upon its success; it will vitalize and strengthen every department of our Church work. It challenges the sympathy and co-operation of our entire membership, from the senior bishop to the one who last assumed the vows of consecrated service.

May the Master himself lead in the movement!

W. R. LAMBUTH,
J. H. PRITCHETT.

CHURCH EXTENSION.—Louisville, Ky., January 12, 1899.—My Dear Doctor: The educational movement planned by the General Conference of 1898 to raise one million and a half dollars in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the purpose of strengthening our educational institutions has my most hearty approval and indorsement; and while the claims of Church extension are to be met as usual and the demands upon the Board call for increased contributions to that cause, I am very anxious that our people shall unitedly and liberally respond to the special call of the Board of Education, and that the collection may result in a great blessing to the whole Church. Assuring you of my cordial co-operation and wishing and praying for your success in this great work, I am,

Yours truly,

P. H. WHISNER,
Corresponding Secretary, Board of Church Extension.

SUNDAY SCHOOL BOARD.—Nashville, Tenn., January 13, 1899.—Dear Dr. Hammond: My heart is wholly with you in the work of raising the Twentieth Century Educational Fund. Apart from its direct evangelical mission, Methodism has not had a larger thought or undertaken a more important enterprise since its birth in the Oxford University more than a century ago. The most renowned and far-reaching fight of the twentieth century is to be over the question as to whether the education of the race shall be Christian or non-Christian. An adverse settlement of this question will go far toward wrecking our civilization than any other thing now within the purview of the Church statesman. Equipment and endowment for strictly first-class work in all our schools, according to the grade and work of each, is the only proper capstone of the Church's great argument—the only equipment for the battle royal from which there can be no honorable or safe retreat. The Church has asked not far too much, but too little, in naming a million and a half.

I pray that God may breathe a spirit of deep and victorious enthusiasm into all our people, so that their responses may be general, liberal, and sufficient.

Cordially yours,

JAMES ATKINS.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.—Dr. DuBose, the Secretary, being absent at this time, cannot personally communicate with the Church as the other secretaries have done, in this issue. In conversation with him just before his departure, he expressed his great interest in the Twentieth Century Education Fund, his purpose to use the Era in advancing its interests, and his earnest desire to have every Epworth Leaguer co-operate in the movement. This they undoubtedly will do with characteristic enthusiasm, and their well-directed efforts will contribute largely to the success of this great century thank offering of their Church.

WOMAN'S BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.—As Corresponding Secretary of the Board, and in close touch with officers, managers, and Conference secretaries, I do not hesitate to say that our organization most heartily indorses the Twentieth Century Educational Movement of our Church, and will do whatever is possible in advancing its interests.

S. C. TRUEHEART.

WOMAN'S HOME MISSION SOCIETY.—The concerted movement of the Church to signalize the close of the nineteenth century and the opening of the twentieth by a special effort to raise at least $1,500,000 for its educational enterprise has the loyal and hearty approval and prayers of the members of the Woman's Home Mission Society.

MRS. R. K. HARGROVE,
General Secretary.

ACTION OF THE GENERAL CONFERENCE OF 1898.

(Extract from Report No. 6, of the Committee on Education adopted by the General Conference.)

Believing that to abandon our educational work to immediate collapse or gradual decay would be to be recreant to our mission, and would tend to paralysis and disintegration of our hitherto vigorous organization, and mindful of the wise suggestion of the Joint Commission on Federation that preparation for our work in the twentieth century should begin with a great reinforcement of our educational strongholds, literary and theological, we recommend the adoption of the following:

Resolved, 1. That a canvass be begun throughout the connection not later than January 1, 1899, under the direction of the General Board of Education, to raise $1,500,000 for the support of the educational work of the Church.

2. The canvass shall be for cash or legal notes, payable within five years, interest being payable semi-annually at 6 per cent., until the principal is paid.

3. The funds raised are to be applied to the following purposes: (1) The expenses of the canvass; (2) the needs of institutions belonging to the Church in each Annual Conference or group of Conferences; (3) the endowment of the theological department of Vanderbilt University. The proportion to each will appear later.

4. The effort shall be to raise the amount in cash and notes by January 1, 1901, but the canvass is to be continued until the $1,500,000 is raised.

5. Organization: (1) The General Board of Education shall have charge of the canvass. (2) The President of the Board shall be the general manager. The Secretary of Education and such others as the Board may appoint from time to time, upon his nomination, shall constitute his staff. These shall, through the press and by pamphlets, circulars, and addresses, and by personal canvass at strategic points, arouse general interest and bend the mind of the Church to the accomplishment of the undertaking. (3) The canvass in each Annual Conference shall be under the direction of the Conference Board of Education, which shall organize it in harmony with the plans of the General Board. The Conference Secretary of Education, and such other helpers as the Board may appoint, shall aid in pressing the undertaking to success. The preachers in charge, and local Boards of Education where they exist, shall co-operate in the work of their charges by arranging for meetings and otherwise.

6. All cash and notes to be paid over to the treasurers of the Conference Boards of Education. They shall retain in cash 5 per cent. of the total received to meet the expense of the Conference canvass, and shall send 20 per cent. of the remaining cash and 20 per cent. of the notes to the treasurer of the General Board. The balance shall be reported to the Conference at its next session for such application as it may order; provided that no appropriation shall be made to any institution not the exclusive property of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

7. The treasurer of the General Board shall retain in cash 5 per cent. of the amount coming into his hands to meet the expenses of the general canvass incurred by its orders, and shall pay over the remainder to the trustees of Vanderbilt University for the endowment of the theological department.

8. The General Board of Education shall have power to suspend or to modify this plan in Conferences where movements have already been begun in the interest of education, or in Conferences where peculiar conditions, in their judgment, demand such suspension or modification. It shall seek, however, to harmonize all movement with the general plan and co-operate to bring them to success.

OUR NEW EDUCATIONAL POLICY

(By Dr. J. D. Hammond.)

A study of the work of the last two General Conferences will show that our Church has revolutionized its educational system. Prior to the Conference of 1894 there was no central plan; each Annual Conference adopted its own methods, and each college made its own standard of admissions and scholarship. Not until the General Conference of 1898 was any law enacted looking to correlation. This body authorized the bishops to appoint a commission charged with the duty of providing a plan for the proper adjustment of our schools. The action of this commission (published elsewhere) will, no doubt, result in the reduction of the number of our colleges, and in a corresponding increase in our academies. Such colleges as shall remain will confer degrees with the indorsement of the highest educational authority of the Church, and will receive the full confidence of their various constituencies. They cannot be numerous, since they will require costly buildings and large endowments. But we should bear in mind that the more we enrich our colleges the less will be the expense of attending them. A large endowment will reduce fees and other expenses, so that more and more will it become possible for the poor to get the advantages of college education. One thoroughly equipped institution can do the work of higher education for a whole State far better and more cheaply than it can be done by any number of institutions of the old type.

On the other hand, our secondary schools can be conducted at a smaller expense. The grade of work done by them will not require large faculties and costly equipment. Their patronage will increase, and they will continue to give to the bulk of our young people all the education these can ever hope to get. Freed from the embarrassments of an unnatural and impossible position, they will do their legitimate work to better advantage.

When our institutions of both grades shall have thus been placed on a sure footing, the confidence of the friends of Christian education will be restored, and we may expect a large increase in the educational gifts of our people. The fact that the work of education is now thoroughly taken in hand by the Church is a guarantee that it will be done in a spiritual way. The Teachers' Bureau of the General Board will be increasingly effective in supplying our institutions with the best consecrated talent of the Church. Parents will have the assurance that their children will receive first-class literary instruction freed from all taint of skepticism and worldliness, by teachers who will also exert a positive Christian influence, leading them to Christ and building them up in the "most holy faith."

The new policy contemplates greatly increased usefulness on the part of Annual Conference Boards of Education. Through their agency the work of the General Board will become more effective in the Annual Conferences. They will disseminate educational literature, and in other ways increase the

—OF THE—

BIBLE,

Comprising its Antiquities, Biography
Geography and Natural History.

Edited by WM. SMITH, LL. D.,
Classical Examiner of University of London.

By a special arrangement with the publishers, we will send the Southern Methodist Recorder for one year and Smith's Bible Dictionary for $2.00. Every family should have a copy of this great work. For description, see below:

The simple explanation of this work, unlike the expositions of a commentary, admit of no denominational or sectarian coloring, and it is therefore equally valuable to Bible readers of every diversity of belief.

This is, undoubtedly, the best work of its kind in the English language, and has no rival in importance for the elucidation of the scenes and facts of Scripture.

The work contains 1024 large octavo pages, over 150 illustrations and maps engraved especially for this work, and is handsomely and strongly bound in cloth. Price, $4.50.

educational sentiment of the Church. They will do much to increase and give wise direction to educational collections, and will be of special service in seeing that the details of the work for raising the Twentieth Century Fund are faithfully carried out.

WHAT OTHER CHURCHES ARE DOING.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, with a membership of 2,851,000, proposes to raise a fund of twenty millions.

The following is an extract bearing on this from the New York Herald:

"The Methodists have a very large contract on hand. At their meeting in Springfield, Mass., a suggestion was made which the audience received first with wonder and then with applause. If they were startled by the magnitude of the project, they were also proud of their ability to carry it out.

"It was proposed to raise between now and the beginning of the twentieth century the sum of $20,000,000, as a 'thank offering.' They expect to have the money in the bank by January 1, 1901, and the chances are that they will succeed.

"This enormous amount of money will be safely invested and the interest applied to educational institutions already connected with the denomination and to building others.

"There is very little doubt that the call will find a hearty response in all parts of the country, and that the dollars will pour in like corn into a grain elevator. The Methodists have a very taking way with them. They are a persuasive folk, and they give with a generosity which has no limit."

THE WESLEYAN METHODISTS, with a membership of 772,000, propose to raise a fund of $5,000,000. Under the able leadership of Mr. R. W. Perks, M. P., according to the latest advices, more than $1,000,000 of this magnificent amount has already been raised. The following is their plan in part:

"The committee met on Tuesday evening, July 26th, the president in the chair, with about one hundred ministers and laymen present, and it was unanimously agreed to advise the Conference as follows:

"1. That it is desirable that a special connectional fund, to be called the Wesleyan Methodist Twentieth Century Fund, be raised, to be applied to the evangelization, educational, and philanthropic purposes of the Wesleyan Methodist Church at home and abroad.

"2. That the amount which the Wesleyan Methodist Church and its adherents should endeavor to raise should not be less than one million guineas.

"3. That, with a view to secure the co-operation of as large a number as possible of Wesleyan Methodists, whether members of the Church or adherents, at home or abroad, the proposed Century Fund should be raised by one million Methodists, who shall, between January 1, 1899, and January 1, 1901, give or collect a sum of one million guineas.

"Each person should aim at giving or collecting one guinea, thus preserving the fundamental principle, 'One person, one guinea,' but it is believed that many will desire to subscribe to the various enterprises of Church work. Our Canadian brethren, with two hundred and eighty thousand members, are calling for one million dollars, and the Methodist Episcopal Church has determined to raise twenty millions for a Twentieth Century Fund. Our last General Conference called for one million and a half dollars, to be devoted to the work of education alone. The time is propitious and the cause is worthy. No such opportunity will present itself for generations to come; we must be true to this, and make the opening of the twentieth century memorable for the realized fruit of the centuries preceding. Every land is now open to the Gospel. The prayers of the Church for the unbarring of the doors long closed against the entrance of the Church of God have been answered, and the services of men and women, equipped in mind and heart for the work of evangelization, are called for. The money given to Christian education will affect every field of Christian effort. Nowhere could such money be used to better advantage for the cause of Christianity at home and abroad.

THE METHODIST CHURCH OF CANADA, with a membership of 278,000, has undertaken to raise one million dollars. They have entered heartily into the movement, and are sending out earnest calls through the press, urging their members throughout the dominion to sweep into line. The indications are that they will go beyond the limit which they have set.

THE CONGREGATIONAL MOVEMENT IN ENGLAND.—Dr. Guinness Rogers, following the example of Mr. Perks, of the Wesleyans, leads the Congregationalists of England in a movement to raise a fund of five hundred thousand guineas between March 1, 1899, and January 1, 1901. He says: "With a view to secure the co-operation of as large a number of Congregationalists as possible, whether members of the Church or adherents, at home or abroad, the proposed Century Fund shall be raised by at least half a million Congregationalists. * * * It will be observed that the period over which the collection is to be extended is twenty-one months, and the idea is that large numbers might be induced to contribute a shilling a month. Considering that one chief aim is the development of the full democratic force of our churches, nothing could well be more appropriate than an arrangement of this kind; indeed, without it the scheme would be incomplete."

REPORT OF VIRGINIA CONFERENCE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The Church, following the Master, has from its establishment been engaged in the work of teaching. All truth comes from God and leads to God. He demands the consecration and service of the mind as well as the heart. Methodism has been and still is an evangelizing agency; she must be no less a conserving agency, and develop and build up the multitudes which have been brought under her influence. All Methodism to-day is stirred by the mighty responsibilities which in the providence of God have been laid upon us as a people. The twentieth century, now at our doors, must be the greatest in results of any in the history of the world. We must meet the demands upon us, or prove ungrateful for the blessings we have received, and show ourselves unworthy of the trust committed to our hands. Wesleyan Methodists have resolved to raise a fund of one million guineas as a thank offering to God, to be devoted to the various enterprises of Church work. Our Canadian brethren, with two hundred and eighty thousand members, are calling for one million dollars, and the Methodist Episcopal Church has determined to raise twenty millions for a Twentieth Century Fund. Our last General Conference called for one million and a half dollars, to be devoted to the work of education alone. The time is propitious and the cause is worthy. No such opportunity will present itself for generations to come; we must be true to this, and make the opening of the twentieth century memorable for the realized fruit of the centuries preceding. Every land is now open to the Gospel. The prayers of the Church for the unbarring of the doors long closed against the entrance of the Church of God have been answered, and the services of men and women, equipped in mind and heart for the work of evangelization, are called for. The money given to Christian education will affect every field of Christian effort. Nowhere could such money be used to better advantage for the cause of Christianity at home and abroad.

We, therefore, commend most heartily the action of the General Conference inaugurating a movement throughout our connection to raise $1,500,000 to put our schools and colleges in better position to meet the responsibilities of the twentieth century. While the sum which the Southern Methodist Church is thus called upon to raise is far less in proportion to our ability than the similar enterprises of the Wesleyan Methodists in England and Canada, or the Methodist Episcopal Church of our own country, the undertaking is still a great advance on what we have done in the past, and should be promptly passed from proposition to performance. We recommend that the Board of Education of this Conference be instructed to take steps to organize at once a general canvass of all our charges in harmony with the plan outlined by the General Conference. We recommend that the Board appoint an executive committee of three to give supervision to the work, and that Dr. W. W. Smith be elected by this Conference as manager of the canvass under their supervision. The Board directly, or through its Executive Committee, shall have authority to apply the expense fund provided by the General Conference plan to the expenses of the canvass herein ordered, as it may deem best calculated to accomplish the result sought. We especially ask the Conference, in placing this large and important undertaking under the direction of the Board of Education, to promise the active and hearty co-operation of all its agencies. We shall need the aid of the Conference press, of the presiding elders, preachers in charge, and stewards, and of all the organizations of the Church so far as they can be properly applied. We must for a time bend the mind of the Church to the accomplishment of this one thing. With this promise on the part of the Conference, we believe that the enterprise can be speedily carried to a successful conclusion.

We report with gratitude the continued prosperity of the institutions belonging to our Church in the bounds of the Conference. Randolph-Macon, the oldest of Southern Methodist colleges, points with pride to those who have been trained in her halls as the jewels in her crown. The history of the mother college, which the zeal and skill of Captain Richard Irby has juxtaposed before the public, is a record of heroic service and sacrifice well calculated to enshrine it in the affections of our people. The Randolph-Macon Woman's College has its boarding capacity taxed to its utmost. It is gratifying to note that this institution has been recognized by the United States Commissioner of Education among the fourteen leading colleges for women in the United States, being the only Southern college so classified. This whole system, from the academies to the colleges, is purposely Christian. Christ is held before the students as the Saviour of men, and the Bible as the inspired Word of God. We urge upon our people throughout our bounds to patronize these institutions of our own, being assured that nowhere else is better instruction given, and, at the same time, so many influences tending to the religious development of the students to be found.

WOMEN DISCUSS MISSIONS.

The first Conference of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Norfolk District, Virginia Conference, Methodist Church, South, convened in the lecture-room of McKendree church at 9:30 A. M. yesterday, with the district secretary, Mrs. F. A. Washington, of London Bridge, Princess Anne county, in the chair, and a large attendance of the members of the society from this city and other sections of the district.

The conference was opened with devotional exercises, conducted by Rev. R. H. Bennett, of McKendree, who also delivered an address of welcome on behalf of the church, in which he assured the convention that it can accomplish all by prayer and supplication. He closed in words of praise to the body for the excellent work it has accomplished in this district for the foreign missionary cause, and urged the members to renewed efforts in the future in this great field of Christian enterprise.

Mrs. Washington responded on behalf of the society, thanking Mr. Bennett for the very cordial welcome he had extended it, and said that she was sure of a hearty reception when she had decided to hold the first session with McKendree church.

The convention decided to close the morning session at 12 o'clock M. for an afternoon session, and adjourn at 3:30 P. M.

The district secretary read her report, which was, on motion, incorporated in the minutes.

An appeal was made by the district secretary for more subscribers to the Woman's Advocate.

Mrs. Pollard read from the Advocate an interesting article on "The Crisis in China."

An article entitled, "The Czar's Letter on Peace," was read by Mrs. Hill.

Mrs. Washington suggested a change, if convenient, in the hour of the meeting of the various circles in the district from evening to morning, and urged the societies to take up the study recommended by the State Conference.

The district secretary was instructed to appoint a nominating committee, consisting of the delegates with the district secretary as chairman to nominate delegates to be elected to the State Convention to be held in Petersburg next fall.

The convention, on motion, decided to send a memorial to the Annual Conference, requesting that it allow each district society to nominate its own district secretary, if it so desired.

The question as to the representation of auxiliaries to District Conferences, and suggesting that all officers and one delegate for every ten members attend the Conference, was announced for discussion at the afternoon session.

A motion that twenty names be presented to the nominating committee for delegates and alternates to the State Convention was adopted.

The hour for the adjournment of the morning session was announced, and it was closed with the singing of the Doxology and the benediction by Rev. S. C. Hatcher, of Queen Street Methodist Episcopal church.

The following delegates reported:

Epworth church, Mrs. Norsworthy; Chestnut Street, Berkley, Mrs. Rodgers; McKendree, Mrs. Billups, Laura Haygood, Miss Walters; Cumberland Street, Mrs. E. J. Whitehurst; Denby's, Mrs. Land; Central, Portsmouth, Mrs. Land; Centenary, Mrs. Brickhouse; LeKies Memorial, Mrs. Wilshin; Nimmo's, Mrs. Scott; Charity, Princess Anne, Mrs. V. Smith; Providence, Princess Anne, Mrs. Gornto; Queen Street, Ella Caffery.

An elegant luncheon was served in the infant class-room by the members of the society of Norfolk, which was freely partaken of by all present.

The afternoon session of the conference was opened with devotional exercises by Rev. S. C. Hatcher, pastor of Queen Street Church.

The subject of district representation postponed from the morning session was resumed, and the following motion of Mrs. R. H. Jones, was carried:

Resolved, That we memorialize the Annual Conference, to assemble at Petersburg next October, that in future each auxiliary shall be represented by the four officers and one delegate for every ten members in each auxiliary at the District Conference.

The committee on nominations for the six delegates to the State Conference reported the twenty names required, and the following were, on ballot, elected:

Delegates—Mrs. S. N. Brickhouse, Mrs. W. J. Young, Mrs. R. H. Bennett, Mrs. R. B. Scott, Mrs. E. J. Whitehurst, Mrs. M. T. Cooke.

Alternates—Miss Sadie Ferebee, Miss Gussie Granbery, Miss Bessie Crider, Miss Nellie Frost, Mrs. C. L. Rogers, Mrs. J. W. Gilmer.

During the counting of the ballots Mrs. John Whitehead read an interesting paper on China.

Mrs. J. C. Norsworthy read an article from the Missionary Advocate on "Old Age in China."

A consecration service followed, in which spontaneous testimonies of moving sweetness were offered, followed by inspiring words from the president.

Miss Sallie K. Williams sang "I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say."

Resolutions of thanks were tendered, as usual, to all the usual parties.

An invitation to hold the conference next year at LeKies Memorial church was cordially accepted.

Mrs. R. H. Jones offered a resolution that the State Conference be memorialized to pass a law requiring each district secretary to hold the District Conference during the months of November, December, and January.

Mrs. Jones also offered the following:

"Resolved, That we memorialize the Annual Conference to assemble in Petersburg next October, that in future the Annual Conference shall be composed of the four officers, the district secretaries, and one delegate for every ten, to each District Conference."

An arousing, stirring discussion was had of the duty and privilege of giving largely of our means to the Lord, even to some real sacrifice.

After the reading of the minutes and singing "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," this most delightful and profitable conference adjourned sine die.—Virginian-Pilot.

THE METHODISTS AT TRINITY CHURCH.

At Trinity Methodist church last night the pastors and a number of the leading members of the various Methodist churches in Richmond and Manchester held a meeting to take steps to perfect arrangements for suitably celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of Methodism in the city of Richmond.

There were about 175 people present, and they met in the main audience room of the church. All the Methodist preachers in Richmond were present, and the two presiding elders—Rev. Dr. R. T. Wilson and Rev. Dr. J. Powell Garland, and also Rev. Dr. A. G. Brown, of Norfolk, formerly presiding elder of the Richmond District, and who was the first pastor of Trinity.

The meeting was opened with prayer by Rev. Dr. J. Powell Garland, after which the pastor of the church, Rev. J. T. Mastin, explained the object of the meeting. The choir then sang "Blest Be the Tie That Binds." This was followed by an informal social session, during which there was a general hand-shaking and exchange of greetings.

Mr. C. W. Hardwicke then invited those present to go down into the basement of the church, where the ladies had prepared an elegant supper. This was partaken of heartily and with much enjoyment.

Returning to the main audience room, Rev. Dr. R. T. Wilson was called to the chair, and stirring speeches were made by Rev. Dr. W. G. Starr, Mr. John P. Branch, Rev. Dr. J. Powell Garland; Rev. J. C. Reed, of Manchester; Rev. Dr. W. V. Tudor; Rev. Dr. A. G. Brown, of Norfolk, and Mr. A. Maupin.

On motion of Dr. Garland, it was decided to celebrate the centennial of Methodism in Richmond during the latter part of April. It was proposed to start the exercises at Trinity church, and protract them through the week at other churches.

Mr. Branch, seconded by Dr. Tudor, extended an invitation to hold the next preliminary meeting at Centenary church. This was accepted.

A committee of three, with Rev. Mr. Mastin as chairman, was appointed to recommend a committee on organization.

The committee retired and reported that the next meeting be held at Centenary church on the fourth Thursday in February to organize for the celebration, and recommended the following committee on organization:

C. W. Hardwicke (chairman), Herbert Lipscomb, E. L. Bidgood, C. E. Brauer, H. Selden Taylor, G. M. Rogers, J. Thompson Brown, A. Maupin, John P. Branch, Marshall Redford, H. Hardesty, Samuel Brauer, H. C. Osterbind, W. F. Hudson, G. W. Graves, and Rev. J. T. Mastin. The report was adopted.

Mr. Branch moved that a vote of thanks be tendered the ladies for the elegant supper they served, and this was carried by a rising vote.

The meeting came to a close by the singing of "How Firm a Foundation."

During the discussion it was stated that there are in Richmond and Manchester 7,000 Methodists, with property valued at $360,000. They contributed during the past year for all purposes $55,000.—Richmond Times.

CHARLES S. THOMPSON.

The venerable man named above died at the Soldiers' Home December 30, 1898.

He was born near Danville, Dinwiddie, and lived to pass his seventy-ninth birthday.

In the olden time, when Hezekiah Leigh and Lewis Skidmore were presiding elders, the good old Methodist women would go across the circuit—and circuits took in several counties then—to quarterly meetings. The mother of Charles was a mother in Israel then, and she would come up to old Crenshaw's church and spend the time with my mother. She brought her son with her, for at an early age he joined the church. A better behaved, politer boy never blessed a home than he was. In this the "son was father to the man," for to the latest day of his life he was a model in this respect. At an early age he left his paternal home to live with his uncle in Richmond, who was the manager and proprietor of the Gallego Mills, at one time the largest mill in the world. With short intervals here, he spent his business life, till age and infirmities of body unfitted him for business. Then he went to the Soldiers' Home, and to the hospital ward, where he spent the last year of his life in weariness and weakness, all of which he bore with meek resignation.

It was my privilege to visit him there from time to time. The last time I went during the last Christmas week to carry him some of the season's good things. I found him stretched on his cot, with eyes closed, and bearing on his face the shadow of the coming end. When I touched his forehead he opened his eyes, and, looking at me, called my name. He told me he had suffered much, and said he was near the end. And there and then he raised his hands, as he used to do in the class meetings at Centenary church, and praised God for dying grace.

When I repeated some of the good old hymns we used to sing, he would join in, and make the words his own, as so many have done before him. What a privilege to have a Saviour who can give "songs in the night"—the night of dissolution. These songs he learned and loved in boyhood. They cheered him then, in manhood, in life, and in death.

He doubtless is singing now the song of victory! RICHARD IRBY.

DOMESTIC PROBLEMS.

1. If a housewife twist in one hour and fifteen minutes 93 "lamp-lighters," when 1,250 matches can be bought for 5 cents, at what rate per hour does she value her time, assuming the worth of the paper at zero?

2. If the aforesaid woman will take six steps across a room and six returning, each step being 22 inches, to save one match, how far should she consistently walk to save 5 cents car-fare?

3. If a man can drive from boards in 50 minutes 78 nails of a certain size, what wages is he earning per hour, nails being worth 4 cents per pound, and there being 100 of this size in one pound?

4. In a certain climate, underwear at a price of $4 per winter will insure against colds. Assuming that underwear costing $1 per season will lead to two visits from the doctor at $1.50 each, what is the saving by the purchase of the cheaper material?

5. Oil is worth 9 cents per gallon. Lamp A burns 45 gallons in the reading or sewing period of one year; lamp B 25 gallons. Spectacles A cost $4.50; spectacles B, $0.25. If lamp B and spectacles B are used, the eyesight is made useless in 8 years for a person whose expectation of sound eyesight with the use of lamp A and spectacles A is 25 years. Making no allowance for deterioration of lamps or spectacles, estimate the value of eyes per pair.—Puck.

A teacher in one of the Cleveland public schools said to the class in English composition: "I wish every member of the class would write out a conversation between a grocer and one of his customers, introducing some pathetic incident or reference." Among the compositions handed in was the following by a sweet little girl: "What do you want?" asked the merchant. The lady replied: "A pound of tea." "Green or black?" asked the merchant. "I think I'll take the black," she said; "it's for a funeral."—Exchange.

Old Fogle: "The country is going to the dogs. I'm as certain of it as I ever was of anything."

Old Keener: "By the way, what'll you sell that acre lot on the corner of Mary and Martha streets for?"

Old Fogle: "That lot is not for sale. I shall hold on to it. In less than ten years it will bring more than double what it would sell for to-day."—Boston Transcript.

Her refusal was ultimate. He could divine as much by her complacent calm. "I shall never love another woman as I have loved you!" he exclaimed. "No?" she queried. "No. Next time I shall love some one for her beauty."—Indianapolis Journal.

LESSON VI, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, FEB. 5.

Text of the Lesson, John iv. 43-54.
Memory Verses, 49-51—Golden Text.
John iv. 53—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1898, by D. M. Stearns.]

43. "Now after two days He departed thence and went into Galilee." The Samaritans, hearing the woman's testimony, came unto Him to hear Him for themselves. Many believed because of what she told them, and through their entreaty He abode there two days, and many more believed because of His own word (verses 39-42). Thus souls were saved, united to Him, made partakers of His redemption and His glory, and there was joy in heaven as well as in Samaria (Luke xv, 7, 10). Untold blessing came to them through this Jew, and because of Him they forgot their differences.

44. "For Jesus Himself testified that a prophet hath no honor in his own country." His own country was Nazareth, and, though He taught in their synagogue, they only wondered at him and called Him the carpenter's son and were offended at Him, so He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief (Math. xiii, 54-58). We need not think it strange if sometimes those nearest to us do not think much of us. If well known in heaven, we can be content to be unknown on earth, and the consciousness of His approval, whose we are and whom we serve, is everything (Acts xxvii, 23; II Tim. ii, 15).

45. "Then when He was come into Galilee the Galileans received Him, having seen all the things that He did at Jerusalem at the feast, for they also went unto the feast." At the feast of Jerusalem He had cleansed the temple and wrought many miracles (chapter ii, 17, 23). At one time He said, The works that I do bear witness of me that the Father hath sent Me (John v, 36), and He also said, The Father who dwelleth in Me He doeth the works (xiv, 10). We are commanded to let our light so shine that others may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven.

46. "So Jesus came again into Cana of Galilee, where He made the water wine, and there was a certain nobleman whose son was sick at Capernaum." At the marriage He supplied their need, He delivered from a difficulty, He manifested His glory.

He is the same yesterday, today and forever (Heb. xiii, 8), and we are assured that He will supply all our need, and deliver from all difficulties, and preserve us unto His kingdom (Phil. iv, 19; II Tim. iv, 18).

47. "When he heard that Jesus was come out of Judaea into Galilee, he went unto Him and besought Him that He would come down and heal his son, for he was at the point of death." He heard that Jesus was come, therefore some one must have been telling. How necessary it is that we should be ever telling that Jesus has come and suffered and died and risen again, and by His life and death and resurrection provided eternal redemption for all who will receive Him, and that He will come again to give immortal bodies to all His people and to set up His kingdom on the earth!

48. "Then said Jesus unto him, Except ye see signs and wonders ye will not believe." Faith needs to be tried, for by trial faith is strengthened. Jesus never said an unkind or an unnecessary word, and therefore there was a cause why He should thus speak to this nobleman. They were ever saying, Shew us a sign. What sign shewest Thou (Math. xii, 38; John ii, 18) and there may have been a desire for such even in this man's heart, for the Lord knew what was in man.

49. "The nobleman saith unto Him, Sir, come down ere my child die." When it is a great emergency and the soul is very much in earnest, our words are apt to be few and to the point. Perhaps as the man journeyed he tolerated doubtful thoughts, but by our Lord's remarks he recovers himself, and now comes this cry of faith, believing that if Jesus will only come his boy will live. It was a father's heart cry for his son. See one much more prudent to Titian, xviii, 35, because it was too late. What did our Father in Heaven feel as He gave up His only begotten Son for us?

50. "Jesus saith unto him, Go thy way, thy son liveth. And the man believed the word that Jesus had spoken unto him, and he went his way." The same voice which said, Let there be light, and there was light; the same word that made the heavens and all their host; the One to whom nothing is hard or wonderful (Gen. i, 3; Ps. xxxiii, 6; Jer. xxxii, 17) said to this man these comforting words, and the man rests upon them in quietness and confidence and goes his way expecting to find his son living and not dying. There are joy and peace in believing, but there is no steadfastness apart from it (Rom. xv, 13; II Chron. xx, 20; Isa. vii, 9).

51. "And as he was now going down his servants met him and told him, saying, Thy son liveth." And so it came to pass as Jesus said. When Paul was told by the angel in the storm at sea, after all hope was given up, that all would be saved, he stood forth and said, Be of good cheer, for I believe God that it shall be even as it was told me. And so it came to pass (Acts xxvii, 25, 44). When Mary believed the message of Gabriel, it is written of her, "Blessed is she that believed, for there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord" (Luke i, 45).

52. "Then inquired he of them the hour when he began to amend. And they said unto him, Yesterday at the seventh hour the fever left him." We may imagine the anxious watchers after the father left home and how they would reckon the time till his return, bringing with him the great prophet. They would say, Now he is at Cana, now he is perhaps talking to Him, now if he has found Him he ought to be leaving for home, and all the time they would be watching the sick boy, perhaps unable to lift his head, and not caring to open his eyes, and they were longing for Jesus to come.

53. "So the father knew that it was at the same hour in which Jesus said unto him, Thy son liveth, and himself believed and his whole house." Faith cometh by hearing the word of God (Rom. x, 17). Every promise believed and fulfilled increases our faith, and if only we are willing and yielded our God will fulfill in us all the good pleasure of His goodness and the work of faith with power (II Thess. i, 11).

54. "This is again the second miracle that Jesus did when He was come out of Judaea into Galilee." In the two miracles we have gladness and health. In His presence is fullness of joy. There is a river the streams whereof make glad.

ALLIANCE WITH ENGLAND.

British Government Official Publicly Makes the Suggestion.

London, Jan. 30.—Right Hon. Walter Hume Long, president of the board of agriculture, addressing the Farmers' club at Newcastle used the word "alliance" in referring to the future relations between Great Britain and the United States. The frank employment of this term by a member of the government is likely to evoke much discussion, not all of which will be of the friendliest character, inasmuch as seeking an alliance to fight England's battles is not regarded as the best policy to promote an Anglo-American entente.

Mr. Long, who had been discussing the proposals to establish national granaries, and had said "that after all, and in last resort, England's safety depended upon having a navy strong enough to meet any possible combination the nations could bring against her," proceeded as follows:

"I am glad of our improved relations with our American cousins, because they have the true meaning of friendliness. The Americans realize our blood relationship, and have firmly resolved that if Great Britain is called upon to face difficulties she shall not face them alone, but will form an alliance with her wealthy and vastly populous sister country, the republic of the United States."

No More Warships For Samoa.

London, Jan. 30.—It is semi-officially asserted here, says the Berlin correspondent of The Times, that all three protecting powers have agreed to refrain from sending further naval reinforcements to Samoa.

Amos Owen Cherry Trees!

The finest cherries and largest cherry tree in the known world grow on the famous Cherry Mountain, near Ellenboro, N. C.

For the past few years trees from this famous orchard have been transplanted in the surrounding country, and have proved a surprise to the people by their rapid growth, enormous size, and delicious fruit. The trees grow very tall, and spread out long, heavy limbs, and are filled with large, black heart-shaped cherries. As many as five bushels have been gathered from one tree. The fruit is very fine in flavor, and suitable for canning, pies, drying, etc., and, ripening as they do in May and June, they come in when other fruit is scarce, and sell readily at 10 cents per quart. Besides their great value as fruit trees, they make the finest of shade trees. Mr. John T. Patrick, chief industrial agent of the Seaboard Air Line, after examining them and seeing their great value as a fruit and shade tree, says:

"These trees are rapid growers; they make a good shade, and yield an abundant crop of large, black cherries, that find a ready market. One thousand trees will in five years from planting yield a revenue to the town that puts them out sufficient to pay town taxes, keep up the streets, and work the country roads leading into the town.

"It would be a big advertisement that will be worth thousands of dollars to be able to say 'our town has fruit-bearing trees enough on its sidewalks and public parks to pay the expenses of the town and build good county roads,' and will give you a world-wide reputation for thrift, enterprise, and good judgment."/>

Mr. Patrick did not only talk, but acted on his judgment, and we furnished to him and his agents over six thousand trees during 1897-'98 season.

The trees can be set any time from October 20th to March 30th, and it is a very rare thing for one to die. So rare that we gladly send another in place of any that die the first season, that has been carefully set out. We carefully pack all trees, so as to arrive in good condition. We can furnish them either by mail or express one to three years old. Small trees grow off better, and will make a large tree as quick as a ten-foot one, but we will furnish them any size up to ten feet high. We prepay all trees when cash accompanies the order. So it does not make any difference where you live, they will be delivered at the following prices:

One tree by mail	25c.	Twenty tree by express	$2 50
Six trees by mail	$1 00	Fifty trees by express	5 00
Twelve trees by express	1 75	One hundred trees by express ..	8 00

One tree free with each order, if you mention the Methodist Recorder.

Send money by registered mail, postoffice, or express money order, or check, making them payable to FRANK BRIGHT, Secretary, and address:

1. Instruction. REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teacher's Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Practice School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent or Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

MILTON'S GRAVE UNKNOWN.

Story of Alleged Desecration of His Tomb Recalled.

At the present time, when the proposed Druce exhumation looms so largely among the topics of the day, it may not be out of place to unearth, so to speak, the little known story of the supposed discovery of the remains of Milton. Aug. 4, 1790, the neighborhood of St. Giles, Campigate, was thrown into a state of excitement and indignation by the news that the body of Milton, buried just 116 years before, had during some repairs to the church been found beneath a desk in the chancel.

The corpse was in a leaden coffin, which was broken open by disturbing ghouls, and the remains were exposed to view, hundreds of curious visitors crowding to see the ghastly sight. Two vestrymen sold locks of the hair and some of the teeth of the venerated poet, disposing also of his lower jaw, his right hand and his ribs.

The ubiquitous journalist stepped forward and forthwith wrote a pamphlet upon the subject, describing the corpse and its treatment, and at once, as in these days, the inevitable newspaper controversy arose. Sides were taken, and The St. James Chronicle of the period boldly disputed that it was Milton's corpse at all and tabulated a number of reasons to bear out that contention.

The time at which a poet becomes famous after his demise may reasonably be computed at a hundred years. Shakespeare was thought little of until that period had elapsed, and it was nearly a century before Burns' fame may be said to have ripened, and here it is clear that Milton had not been much in men's minds from his death to this disinterment, for his place of sepulture was actually unknown. Forty years before Bishop Newton had endeavored to discover it, but could obtain no information whatever as to its whereabouts. And so it would seem certain that the unfortunate "old man eloquent" had died almost "unwept, unhonored and unsung."

One of the reasons against it being the body of the poet, as given by the above paper, was that "he was very poor and much emaciated at the time of his death and that it was most unlikely that his rapacious wife, who oppressed her husband's children while he was living and cheated them after death," would or could have provided an expensive leaden coffin in which to inter him.

From this and more cogent reasons lovers of the glorious Milton may rest pretty sure that his bones were not only disturbed by proxy, but that it was another's body which thus received the veneration of some and the desecration of others.

The body disinterred was that of a small person, with dark brown hair, whereas Milton, being 65 at his death, had gray hair. The brow, too, was small and low, while that of the poet was broad and high. The teeth, again, were small, white and even, which could not have been the case with Milton. A doctor, too, gave it as his opinion that the corpse was that of a young female, although by reason of the ravages of decay he could not be certain.

One other argument cited by the opponent paper, which has a touch of pathos in it, reduces the matter to a certainty that the remains were not those of our great singer. Poor Milton, in addition to his blindness and his wife's neglect, suffered agonies of gout, and his fingers were full of chalk stones, while the disinterred skeleton had small, smooth finger bones, with no vestige of such disfigurement.

So the lovers of the memory of the author of "Paradise Lost" may be assured that Milton's remains lie still undisturbed in—what will be news to the vast majority of his admirers—some unknown grave within the precincts of the old church of St. Giles.—London Mail.

Demoralized Japan.

The Japanese are now inflated with conceit. The progress made by them in the past 20 years was the result of being humble and working earnestly to supply their deficiencies. With the loss of humility and the development of a conceited mood progress has ceased.

Look at the social customs of the time. There are balls and garden parties in accordance with western fashion, but the spectacle they present is as that of a monkey in a "bell topper."

And if we turn to the moral side we find an unhappy absence of sincerity. Japanese have been known to export rape seed under pretense that it was silk worms' eggs. They have so loaded their silks with sizing that American haberdashers have been compelled to advertise not that they sold Japanese silks, but that nothing of the kind was among their goods. There have been men who obtaining funds under pretense of founding a Christian school have applied them to setting up a tobacco store. A Japanese has palmed himself off as a prince and succeeded in swindling a London widow out of her money. Students have returned from Europe and pretended to be the possessors of degrees which they never obtained. Others have obtained foreign university degrees under false pretenses.

Insincerity, like a canker, undermines Japan's chances of success.—Yokohama Mainichi Shimbun

Sold the Pension.

The Duke of Norfolk has just sold a bit of family property whose origin dates back to Flodden Field. The battle was won for England by his ancestor the Earl of Surrey. Among the rewards of a grateful king was the bestowal of a pension of £40 a year, to be paid to him and his heirs forever. Through the several centuries that have elapsed since the Scots were beaten back at Flodden this £40 a year has replenished the ducal coffers. The duke, availing himself of a treasury minute passed in 1888, has commuted his pension for the round sum of £800.

DEATH OF MR. GARLAND.

The Ex-Attorney General Stricken in the Supreme Court.

Washington, Jan. 27.—Former Attorney General Augustus H. Garland was stricken with apoplexy while addressing the United States supreme court yesterday afternoon, and died within ten minutes. When the court convened at noon Mr. Garland resumed an argument in the case of Towson vs. Moore, which had begun on Wednesday. There was a full bench, with the exception of Justices Brewer and White. Mr. Garland spoke calmly, and with no evidence of agitation or effort. He had read from a law volume and had followed with the sentence: "This, your honors, is our contention."

As the last word was uttered Mr. Garland was seen to raise his hand and then gasp. He tottered and fell sideways, striking against a chair and overturning it as he fell heavily to the floor. A succession of loud, deep gasps came from him as he lay on the floor. His associate in the case, Mr. Franklin Mackey, was at once by his side, and with other counsel and officials the head of the dying man was raised, his shoes removed and a draught of water given him. A deathly pallor had overspread his face, and this soon gave place to a deep purple, which foretold the gravity of the attack. He was carried from the chamber across to the room of Chief Clerk McKenny and there placed on a sofa. Senator Gallinger, who is a physician, was near at hand. A single glance told him that the attack would be fatal. Within ten minutes from the time of the stroke Mr. Garland breathed his last.

Mr. Garland was a native of Tennessee, but was taken to Arkansas in his infancy. He opposed secession, but went with his state, and served in the Confederate congress. After the war he was elected governor of the state, and was serving his second term in the national senate when called into President Cleveland's first cabinet. He was 68 years old.

GOLD SEEKERS FROZEN.

Copper River Prospectors Met Death in the Valdez Glacier.

Seattle, Wash., Jan. 28.—The steamer Cottage City, from Alaska, brings news that a number of Copper river prospectors perished in Valdez glacier. The following are known to have been lost: Charles Khron, New York city; D. P. Smith, Chicago; Ole Evjen, Baldwin, Wis.; — Henderson, Wisconsin; George Sweesey, New York. Among the many badly frozen miners are: George Poalowitz, New York city; Sylvester Grog, St. Joseph, Mo.; Holven Evjens, Baldwin, Wis.

There are six men at Valdez suffering from frozen feet, hands and face. A hospital has been established at Twelve Mile camp, on the other side of the glacier, and 15 men are suffering there from the same cause. All were frozen trying to cross the glacier, but managed to get back to camp. The freezing of the Evjens, father and son, is particularly sad. They started for Valdez, but on getting well toward the summit of the glacier found their feet freezing. Both started back. The son gave his father extra wrapping for his feet, and as a result both the son's legs were frozen in a few minutes, and he was unable to proceed. He bade his father good bye and compelled him to go on without him. Then the boy lay down in the snow to die. The body will probably never be recovered. The father reached Twelve Mile camp, but is not expected to live.

THE PENNSYLVANIA DEADLOCK.

As Yet No Sign of a Break in the Senatorial Fight.

Harrisburg, Jan. 30.—Owing to the agreement between the Democrats and the anti-Quay Republicans to remain away from the joint session on Saturday and today there was no quorum in the voting for senator, on Saturday, when the tenth ballot was cast, there were only 23 votes to count, and of these Senator Quay received 30. As yet there is no sign of a break in the deadlock.

The result of the joint ballots, from the fifth to the tenth, was as follows:

The Army's Winter Hospital.

Savannah, Ga., Jan. 30.—Major Appel, of the medical corps of the army, is here to take charge of the new winter hospital at this place. He announced today that the hospital would begin to receive patients in three weeks, notwithstanding all of the buildings will not be completed within that time. There are 46 buildings in the establishment. Twenty of them will be ready for occupancy next week, and the hospital ship Missouri will begin to bring patients from Cuba and Porto Rico. The buildings here will not be used as a hospital from May to November.

Three Killed by an Avalanche.

Apex, Colo., Jan. 30.—Three lives were lost in a snowslide here yesterday. The dead are Mrs. W. H. Rudolph and her two children, aged 2 and 4 years. Snow has falling almost continuously during the past week and had reached a depth of 15 feet on the mountain sides. The pack gave away yesterday, swept down on the Rudolph home and carried it away. Rudolph escaped, but his wife and three children were swept away in the avalanche of snow. A searching party rescued the 6-year-old son alive. The other three have not been found.

McMillan Vetoes Gold Bond Bill.

Nashville, Tenn., Jan. 30.—Governor McMillan has vetoed a bill authorizing Memphis to issue bonds for park purposes because the bill allowed the municipal government of Memphis to issue for park purposes gold bonds, with interest payable in gold. He says in his veto that he will not sanction legislation discriminating against United States legal tender coins.

Bruin Didn't Like the Sample.

A wooden leg saved the life of a young man named Kelly, who lives near Lackawaxen, Pike county. Kelly was returning from a visit to the home of his sweetheart at Barryville, a few miles distant, late on a recent Sunday night, when he was chased by a bear. A wooden leg impeded his progress, and the animal soon overtook him. With one cuff of its paw Kelly was sent sprawling. The bear pounced upon him and began chewing on the wooden leg, but after consuming half the leg, trousers and shoe, bruin evidently became disgusted and walked away. Kelly reached home nearly frozen, but thankful that his life was saved.—Philadelphia Times.

Spanish Bank Cannot Collect Taxes.

Washington, Jan. 28.—The war department's order of the 7th inst., providing that the Spanish bank of Havana shall collect the taxes in Cuba for the fiscal year ending June 30 next, was yesterday revoked by the secretary of war. General Brooke was cabled to establish a system for the collection of taxes, introducing such machinery as in his judgment may be necessary for the purpose.

The New Mexican Ambassador.

Mexico City, Jan. 28.—President Diaz yesterday appointed Manuel Aspiraz, assistant secretary of foreign relations, to be ambassador at Washington. He is a native of Puebla, is 55 years of age, and was prominent in the Liberal party during Juarez's administration.

BEARERS OF BURDENS

THE REV. DR. TALMAGE PREACHES AGAINST SELFISHNESS.

Speak Encouraging and Helpful
Words to Those With Whom You Meet in the Daily Walks of Life in the Preacher's Admonition.

Copyright, 1899, by American Press Association.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—In this discourse Dr. Talmage shows how it is possible to help others who are under the pressing load of fatigue and care and responsibility. The text is Galatians vi, 2. "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ."

Every man for himself! If there be room for only one more passenger in the lifeboat get in yourself. If there be a burden to lift, you supervise while others shoulder it. You be the digit while others are the ciphers on the right hand side—nothing in themselves, but augmenting you. In opposition to that theory of selfishness Paul advances in any text the gospel theory, "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ."

Everybody has burdens. Sometimes they come down upon the shoulders, sometimes they come down upon the head, sometimes they come down upon the heart. Looking over any assembly, they all seem well and bright and easy, but each one has a burden to lift, and some of them have more than they can lift. Paul proposes to split up these burdens into fragments. You take part of mine, and I must take part of yours, and each one will take part of the other's, and so we will fulfill the law of Christ.

Mrs. Appleton of Boston, the daughter of Daniel Webster, was dying after long illness. The great lawyer after pleading an important case in the courtroom on his way home stopped at the house of his daughter and went into her sickroom. She said to him, "Father, why are you out today in this cold weather without an overcoat?" The great lawyer went into the next room and was in a flood of tears, saying, "Dying herself, yet thinking only of me." Oh, how much more beautiful is care for others than this everlasting taking care of ourselves! High up in the wall of the temple of Baalbec there are three stones, each weighing 1,100 tons. They were lifted up by a style of machinery that is now among the lost arts. But in my text is the gospel machinery, by which the vaster and the heavier tonnage of the world's burden is to be lifted from the crushed heart of the human race. What you and I most need to learn is the spirit of helpfulness.

Speak Words of Encouragement.

Encourage the merchant. If he have a superior style of goods, tell him so. If he have with his clerks adorned the show windows and the shelves, compliment his taste. If he have a good business locality, if he have had great success, if he have brilliant prospects for the future, recognize all this. Be not afraid that he will become arrogant and puffed up by your approval. Before night some shopgoing person will come in and tell him that his prices are exorbitant and that his goods are of an inferior quality and that his show window gave promise of far better things than he found inside. Before the night of the day in which you say encouraging words to that merchant there will be some crank, male or female, who will come into the store and depreciate everything and haul down enough goods from the shelves to fit out a family for a whole winter without buying a cent's worth. If the merchant be a grocer, there will be some one before night who will come into his establishment and taste of this and taste of that and taste of everything else. In that way stealing all the profits of anything that he may purchase—buying three apples while he is eating one orange!

Before the night of the day when you approve that merchant he will have a bad debt which he will have to erase, a bad debt made by some one who has moved away from the neighborhood without giving any hint of the place of destination. Before the night of the day when you have uttered encouraging words to the merchant there will be some woman who will return to his store and say she has lost her purse, she left it there in the store, she brought it there, she did not take it away, she knows it is there, leaving you to make any delicate and complimentary inference that you wish to make. Before night that merchant will hear that some style of goods of which he has a large supply is going out of fashion, and there will be some one who will come into the store and pay a bill under protest, saying he has paid it before, but the receipt has been lost. Now, encourage that merchant, not fearing that he will become arrogant or puffed up, for there will be before night enough unpleasant things said to keep him from becoming apoplectic with plethors of praise.

Encourage newspaper men. If you knew how many annoyances they have, if you understood that their most elaborate article is sometimes flung out because there is such great pressure on the columns, and that an accurate report of a speech is expected although the utterance be so indistinct the discourse is one long stenographic guess, and that the midnight which finds you asleep demands that they be awake, and that they are sometimes ground between the wheels of our great brain manufactories; sickened at the often approach of men who want complimentary newspaper notices or who want newspaper retraction; one day sent to report a burial, the next day to report a pugilistic encounter; shifted from place to place by sudden revolution which is liable to take place any day in our great journalistic establishments; precarious life becoming more and more precarious—if you understood it, you would be more sympathetic. Be affable when you have not an ax to be sharpened on their grindstone. Discuss in your mind what the nineteenth century would be without the newspaper and give encouraging words to all who are engaged in this interest, from the chief of editorial department down to the boy that throws the morning or evening newspaper into your basement window.

Do Not Find Fault.

Encourage mechanics. They will plumb the pipes, or they will calcimine the ceilings, or they will put down the carpets, or they will grain the doors, or they will fashion the wardrobe. Be not among those who never say anything to a mechanic except to find fault. If he has done a job well, tell him it is splendidly done. The book is well bound, the door is well grained, the chandelier is well swung, the work is grandly accomplished. Be not among those employers who never say anything to their employees except to swear at them. Do not be afraid you will make that mechanic so puffed up and arrogant he will never again want to be seen with working apron or in shirt sleeves, for before the night comes of that day when you praise him there will be a lawsuit brought against him because he did not finish his work as soon as he promised it, forgetful of the fact that his wife has been sick and two of his children have died of scarlet fever and he has had a felon on a finger of the right hand. Denounced perhaps because the paint is so very faint in color, not recognizing the fact that the mechanic himself has been cheated out of the right ingredients, and that he did not find out the trouble in time, or scolded at because he seems to have tamed a horse by unskillful shoeing, when the horse has for months had spavin or ringbone or springhalt. You feel you have the right to find fault with a mechanic when he does ill. Do you ever praise a mechanic when he does well?

Encourage the farmers. They come into your stores, you meet them in the city markets, you often associate with them in the summer months. Office seekers go through the land and they stand on political platforms, and they tell the farmers the story about the independent life of a farmer, giving flattery where they ought to give sympathy. Independent of what? I was brought up on a farm, I worked on a farm, I know all about it. I hardly saw a city until I was grown, and I tell you that there are no class of people in this country who have it harder and who more need your sympathy than farmers. Independent of what? Of the curculio that stings the peach trees, of the rust in the wheat, of the long rain with the rye down? Independent of the grasshopper, of the locust, of the army worm, of the potato bug? Independent of the drought that burns up the harvest? Independent of the cow with the hollow horn, or the sheep with the foot rot, or the pet horse with a nail in his hoof? Independent of the cold that freezes out the winter grain? Independent of the snow bank out of which he must shovel himself? Independent of the cold weather when he stands thrashing his numbed fingers around his body to keep them from being frosted? Independent of the frozen ears and the frozen feet? Independent of what? Fancy farmers who have made their fortunes in the city and go out in the country to build houses with all the modern improvements and make farming a luxury may not need any solace, but the yeomanry who get their living out of the soil and who that way have to clothe their families and educate their children and pay their taxes and meet the interest on mortgaged farms—such men find a terrific struggle. I demand that office seekers and politicians fold up their gaseous and imbecile speeches about the independent life of a farmer and substitute some word of comfort drawn from the fact that they are free from city conventionalities and city epidemics and city temptations.

Need Sympathy, Not Flattery.

My most vivid remembrance of boyhood is of my father coming in on a very hot day from the harvest field and seating himself on the doorsill because he was too faint to get into the house, the perspiration streaming from forehead and from chin, and my mother trying to resuscitate him with a cup of cold water, which he was too faint to hold to his own lips, while saying to us: "Don't be frightened. There's nothing the matter; a little tired, that's all; a little tired." Ever since that day, when I hear people talking about the independent life of a farmer I see through the sham. Farmers want not your flatteries, but your sympathies.

Encourage the doctors. You praise the doctor when he brings you up from an awful crisis of disease, but do you praise the doctor when, through skillful treatment of the incipient stages of disease, he keeps you from sinking down to the awful crisis? There is a great deal of cheap and heartless wit about doctors, but I notice that the people who get off that wit are the first to send for a doctor when there is anything the matter. There are those who undertake to say in our day that doctors are really useless. One man has written a book entitled, "Every Man His Own Doctor." That author ought to write one more book entitled, "Every Man His Own Undertaker." "Oh," says some one, "physicians in constant presence of pain get hard hearted!" Do they? The most celebrated surgeon of the last generation stood in a clinical department of one of the New York medical colleges, the students gathered in the amphitheater to see a very painful operation on a little child. The old surgeon said: "Gentlemen, excuse me if I retire. These surgeons can do this as well as I can, and as I get older it gives me more and more distress to see pain."

Physicians have so many hardships, so many interruptions, so many annoyances, I am glad they have so many encouragements. All doors open to them. They are welcome to mansion and to cot. Little children shout when they see them coming down the road, and the aged, recognizing the step, look up and say, "Doctor, is that you?" They stand between our families and the grave, fighting back the troops of disorder that come up from their encampment by the cold river. No one hears such thanks as the doctor hears. They are eyes to the blind, they are feet to the lame, their path is strewn with the benedictions of those whom they have befriended.

In the Hour of Anxiety.

One day there was a dreadful foreboding in our house. All hope was gone. The doctor came four times that day. The children put away their toys and all walked on tiptoe, and at the least sound said, "Hush!" How loudly the clock did tick, and how the banister creaked, though we tried to keep it so still! That night the doctor staid all night. He concentrated all his skill upon the sufferer. At last the restlessness of the sufferer subsided into a calm, sweet slumber, and the doctor looked up and smiled and said, "The crisis is past." When, propped up with pillows in the easy chair, she sat, and the south wind tried to blow a rose leaf into the faded cheek, and the children brought flowers—the one a red clover top, the other a violet from the lawn—to the lap of the convalescent, and Bertha stood on a high chair with a brush smoothing her mother's hair, and we were told in a day or two she might ride out, joy came back to our house. And as we helped the old country doctor into his gig, we noticed not that the step was broken or the horse stiff in the knees, and we all realized for the first time in our life what doctors were worth. Encourage them.

Encourage the lawyers. They are often cheated out of their fees, and so often have to breathe the villainous air of courtrooms, and they so often have to bear ponderous responsibility, and they have to maintain against the sharks in their profession the dignity of that calling which was honored by the fact that the only man allowed to stand on Mount Sinai beside the Lord was Moses, the lawyer, and that the Bible speaks of Christ as the advocate. Encourage lawyers in their profession of transcendent importance—a profession honored by having on the bench a Chief Justice Story and at the bar a Rufus Choate.

Encourage the teachers in our public schools—occupation arduous and poorly compensated. In all the cities when there comes a fit of economy on the part of officials the first thing to do is always to cut down teachers' salaries. To take 40 or 50 boys whose parents suppose them precocious and keep the parents from finding out their mistake; to take an empty head and fill it; to meet the expectation of parents who think their children at 15 years of age ought to be mathematicians and metaphysicians and rhetoricians; to work successfully that great stuffing machine the modern school system, is a very arduous work. Encourage them by the usefulness and the everlastingness and the magnitude of their occupation, and when your children do well compliment the instructor, praise the teacher, thank the educator.

Encourage all invalids by telling them how many you have known with the same ailments who got well, and not by telling them of their sunken eye or asking them, whether the color of their cheer. It is really hectic or mentioning cases in which that style of disease ended fatally or telling them how badly they look. Cheerful words are more soothing than chloral, more stimulating than cognac, more tonic than bitters. Many an invalid has recovered through the influence of cheerful surroundings.

Speak Kindly to the Young.

Encourage all starting in life by yourself becoming reminiscent. Established merchants, by telling these young merchants when you got your first customer, and how you sat behind the counter eating your luncheon with one eye on the door. Established lawyers, encourage young lawyers by telling of the time when you broke down in your first speech. Established ministers of the gospel, encourage young ministers by merciful examination of theological candidates, not walking around with a profundity and overwhelmingness of manner as though you were one of the eternal decrees. Doctors established, by telling young doctors how you yourself once mistook the measles for scarlatina. And if you have nothing to say that is encouraging, O man, put your teeth tightly together and cover them with the curtain of your lip; compress your lips and put your hand over your mouth and keep still.

A gentleman was passing along, crossing a bridge in Germany, and a lad came along with a cage of birds for sale. The stranger said, "How much for those birds and the cage?" The price was announced, the purchase was made, and the first thing the stranger did was to open the door of the cage, and the birds flew out into the sunlight and the forest. Some one who saw the purchase and the liberation said, "What did you do that for?" "Ah," said the stranger, "I was a captive myself once, and I know how good it is to be free." O ye who remember hardships in early life, but have come beyond those hardships, sympathize with those who are in the struggle! Free yourself, help others to get free.

Governor Alexander Stephens persisted in having business matters brought to his bedside. There was on the table a petition for the pardon of a distinguished criminal, the petition signed by distinguished men. There was also on that table a letter from a poor woman in the penitentiary, written and signed by herself alone. Dying Alexander Stephens said: "You think that because I have been ill so many times and got well I shall get well now, but you are mistaken. I shall not recover. Where is that letter by that woman in the penitentiary? I think she has suffered enough. As near as I can tell she has no friends. Bring me that paper that I may sign her pardon." A gentleman standing by, thinking this too great a responsibility for the sick man, said: "Governor, you are very sick now. Perhaps you had better wait till tomorrow. You may feel stronger, and you may feel better." Then the eye of the old governor flashed, and he said, "I know what I am about." Putting his signature to that pardon, he wrote the last word he ever wrote, for then the pen fell from his pale and rheumatic and dying hand forever. O my soul, how beautiful that the closing hours of life should be spent in helping one who had no helper!

Encourage the Aged.

Encourage the troubled by thoughts of release and reassociation. Encourage the aged by thoughts of eternal juvenescence. Encourage the herdsman amid the troughs of sin to go back to the banquet at the father's homestead. Give us tones in the major key instead of the minor. Give us "Coronation" instead of "Naomi." You have seen cars so arranged that one car going down the hill rolled another car up the hill. They nearly balanced each other. And every man that finds life, up hill ought to be happy if those who have passed the heights and are descending to the vale. Oh, let us bear one another's burdens!

A gentleman in England died leaving his fortune by will to two sons. The son that staid at home destroyed the father's will and pretended that the brother who was absent was dead and buried. The absent brother after awhile returned and claimed his part of the property. Judges and jurors were to be bribed to say that the returned brother and son was no son at all, but only an impostor. The trial came on. Sir Matthew Hale, the pride of the English courtroom and for 20 years the pride of jurisprudence, heard that that injustice was about to be practiced. He put off his official robe. He put on the garb of a miller. He went to the village where that trial was to take place. He entered the courtroom. He somehow got empaneled as one of the jurors. The bribes came around, and the man gave ten pieces of gold to the other jurors, but as this was only a poor miller the briber gave to him only five pieces of gold. A verdict was brought in rejecting the rights of this returned brother. He was to have no share in the inheritance. "Hold, my lord!" said the miller. "Hold; we are not all agreed on this verdict. These other men have received ten pieces of gold in bribery, and I have received only five." "Who are you? Where do you come from?" said the judge on the bench. The response was: "I am from Westminster hall; my name is Matthew Hale, lord chief justice of the king's bench. Off of that place, thou villain!" And so the injustice was balked, and so the young man got his inheritance. It was all for another that Sir Matthew Hale took off his robe and put on the garb of a miller. And so Christ took off his robe of royalty and put on the attire of our humanity, and in that disguise he won our eternal portion. Now are we the sons of God! Joint heirs! We went off from home sure enough, but we got back in time to receive our eternal inheritance. And if Christ bore our burden, surely we can afford to bear each other's burdens.

A New Portrait of Christ.

A Frenchman named Boyer d'Agen, who is the author of a work on Lourdes, discovered a curious bronze medal among a number of old coins for sale in a curiosity shop at Rome. He bought it for 10 centimes because he thought he discovered on it Hebrew characters dating back to the primitive times of the Christian era. On close examination it has been declared that it bears the effigy of Jesus.

The portrait is a profile, with the head slightly inclined forward. The forehead is high, the nose rather long, slightly pointed at the tip, the mustaches are slightly marked, and the beard is pointed. As for the hair, it is long and curly. The physiognomy, taken as a whole, cannot be called regular, but it is extremely fascinating.

On returning to Paris with his purchase M. Boyer d'Agen showed the medal to numerous numismatists, who pronounced it to be at least of the greatest antiquity, though, of course, it would have been too much to expect they should guarantee its authenticity. The Hebrew inscription it bears on the reverse translated into English is: "The Messiah, the King, will come in peace. He is the light of men, incarnate and living."

Replicas of this medal in bronze and silver are being struck.—Paris Letter in London Standard.

Romps With the Tots.

The other day, it is related, a well known literary man went up to the nursery of a friend's children in Brighton. The sound of his step on the stairs was hailed with a shriek of delight, and the children tumbled over each other in their eagerness to meet him. Then they stopped short in dismay.

"What's the matter?" he asked.

"We fought it was Mr. Kipling," said the youngest, with tears in her voice.

It appeared that Mr. Kipling was in the habit of telling them stories, and they couldn't appreciate any one else's visits. Mr. Kipling is very sympathetic with childhood and is often to be found romping with his own children.—London Letter.

A Rothschild Zoologist.

Walter Rothschild, the eldest son of Lord Rothschild of Tring Park, now 30 years old and the successor in parliament of Baron Ferdinand de Rothschild, recently dead, is keenly interested in zoology. He has written extensively on this subject, among his publications being a work on the avifauna of Laysan. He is joint editor of the Novitates Zoologicae, which is published at the Zoological museum at Tring, where he has carried out in his father's park some interesting experiments in the acclimation of foreign animals, including the zebra and the kangaroo. He was educated at Bonn and at Magdalene college, Cambridge. He is not married.

MIRRORING THE KAISER.

The Sultan's Candid Official Opinion of the Only William.

The following curious sketch of the kaiser appears in the sultan's organ, Servet:

"The young emperor who honors the Ottoman capital by his second visit is one of the most characteristic features of this century. History shows no stronger individuality than we find in him, and it is this which makes him remarkable at a period when the general tendency is toward a dead level of uniformity.

"It is difficult to classify him. With all the up to dateness of the modern engineer he unites the enthusiasm and faith of the middle ages and the steady perseverance of the captains of ancient Rome. He is an epitome of every age, a combination of every talent. Not only is he interested in every science and every art—he is a pronounced 'specialist.' He is a soldier in every sense of the word, passionately devoted to his profession. How inspiring is his eloquence when he appeals to the loyalty of his comrades in arms, and with no less ability does he play the diplomatist in acquiring sympathy and appeasing wounded susceptibilities! It is a remarkable fact that in France, where a journalist once styled him a 'distinguished enemy,' there is no foreign sovereign more popular than he (!) When he answers a Frenchman, even a member of the academy, it is with a purity of diction that astonishes the hearer, while an Englishman can perceive no trace of difference between his accent and that of his fellow countrymen.

"As to the arts, he is both painter and author. He can design ships, compose orchestral scores and work out military plans, and when he seeks rest after extraordinary exertion he refreshes his poetic soul by contemplating the wild scenery of Norway and the North cape or the sunny shores of southern seas.

"The German army owes much to him. Its navy is indebted to him for its existence. He has taken only ten years to make it one of the best in Europe. As a horseman he outdistances all his escorts, and his yachts win prizes in the most famous English regattas. His friendship is as strong as his iron constitution; he is not afraid to assert it boldly, no matter whom it displeases, and his acts are based on it. If he wears the uniform of an English admiral, a colonel of cuirassiers or an artillery officer, it is as a thorough sailor, trooper or gunner."

THE WAYS OF VERGERS.

Each Considers His Church the Most Interesting in England.

If in the books of a decade or two ago a verger was mentioned, it was only to make fun of him. Thackeray had small respect for the worthy class and Dickens none at all, and the feebler novelists imitated their masters. Professedly serious writers were nearly as bad. A verger was supposed to be synonymous with ignorance and pretension. Personally I am inclined to think vergers a much maligned class. I have met with ignorance among them, but the cases are so few that the fingers of one hand would be sufficient to enumerate them. I have far oftener met with knowledge and enthusiasm that have put me to the blush. Let me give an instance:

Once at Ely I remarked to the then verger when I had seen a great deal, making my modest offering as I spoke, that as I had to get across London and catch a train to the west I must go. The verger gripped me by the arm. "Young man," said he, "your train may be late, and if you miss it you can get a bed in the town, but God Almighty may never give you another chance of seeing Ely cathedral."—Of course I stopped, and of course I lost my train.

The trouble vergers are at to increase their knowledge has struck me with amazement. There is one who, saving up his scanty wages, has made himself personally acquainted with the great continental fanes which were built about the same time and in similar style to the cathedral he so delightfully describes.

I have frequently had vergers willing to show me round during the hours the building was supposed to be closed, and even to light up parts in order that I might be better able to appreciate some detail or other. On one point I have found vergers, as a rule, very bigoted. I have never met with one who has not affirmed that, taken as a whole, his church was the most interesting and instructive in the kingdom. This jealousy is occasionally amusing.

In a certain southern town there are two churches. The principal one is the older, but less interesting. A friend asked the verger of the old church whether the other was worth seeing. Reluctantly he admitted "It might be, but," he added with glee, "it ain't got no Norman arches." Custodians have sometimes odd ideas. One I knew had made a discovery that had got into the papers. One day he got a letter desiring to see these objects, with a view to purchase. It was signed by the respected head of the British museum, and of course on official paper. "Is he a respectable chap, do you think?" he asked me. "I don't think much of shows, and I've no faith in London chaps."—London Church Gazette.

A Costly Old Chair.

At a recent sale at Edinburgh an old oak chair brought an absurdly high price, and this is the amusing explanation:

The chair is valued by experts at about £30. When the bidding reached £50, all dealers stopped, leaving two in possession of the field, who bid so that they ran the chair up to £870, when one retired. It seems that Sir Donald Currie noticed that the chair had carved on its back "Dunottar Castle," the name of one of the ships of the famous line he controls, and so he gave an Edinburgh dealer a commission to buy it at any price. A few days after, forgetting what he had done, he gave a Glasgow dealer the same instructions. These two were the rival bidders. So Lord Currie really bid against himself, with the result that he is the possessor of probably the costliest old oak chair in the world.—London Letter in Chicago Record.

GEN. EAGAN CONVICTED.

Only the President Can Save Him From Dismissal.

A TEMPORARY INSANITY PLEA.

The General's Daughter and Other Witnesses Testified as to His Changed Condition After the Publication of General Miles' Statement.

Washington, Jan. 28.—The case of Commissary General Charles P. Eagan, charged with conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, and with conduct tending to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, is now in the hands of the court martial appointed to try him. Yesterday the taking of testimony was closed and arguments of counsel submitted. The trial had lasted three days, and consumed less than eight hours of actual sitting.

The attendance at the court martial was much larger yesterday than at any other time since the trial began, and among the spectators was a score of ladies. Several of them were friends of General Eagan's daughter, who was called as a witness, while others were attracted by curiosity. The testimony at the closing session of the court was directed largely to establishing the fact that the general had lost his mental balance as a result of the charges made against him by General Miles. His daughter and her husband told of the general's changed condition, and intimated that they had great fears that he might at any time kill his accuser. Mr. McKee, a lifelong friend, stated that at that time he believed him actually insane. The facts in this connection were brought out strongly by Mr. Worthington in his efforts to show that General Eagan at times was wholly irresponsible.

A dramatic incident of the trial was the testimony of the general's daughter, Mrs. Hopkins, in which she described her father's appearance on the day he first read General Miles' statement. Standing in the door of his house with the newspaper containing the evidence in his hand he exclaimed wildly: "I have been crucified by General Miles." He could think of nothing else nor talk of anything else than that General Miles had ruined his life. He was from that time in an alarming condition, and when witness was compelled to go to New York she had returned almost at once to help care for her father. The witness spoke with much feeling in regard to her father's changed condition. Dr. W. E. Hopkins, of California and New York, corroborated his wife's testimony, and added that General Eagan could not eat nor sleep normally.

Other old acquaintances testified that General Eagan never used profane or vulgar language, and that he had always been mild before the publication of General Miles' charges.

Secretary Alger was among the witnesses called. He said he recalled a conversation he had with General Eagan shortly after General Miles had given his testimony. General Eagan came into his office in an excited state of mind and said it was his wish to prefer charges against General Miles for what he had said. "I told him," testified Secretary Alger, "that under the president's order granting immunity to officers who testified before the commission he could not do so."

GENERAL EAGAN'S PUNISHMENT

Only the President Can Save Him From Dismissal.

Washington, Jan. 30.—General Eagan, commissary general of subsistence of the United States army, has been found guilty of the charge of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, and of conduct to the prejudice of good order and discipline, and has been sentenced to dismissal from the United States army, but with a recommendation from the court for the exercise of executive clemency.

Under the regulations the court having reached the conclusion that the accused was guilty had no choice in selecting a penalty, the regulations prescribing absolutely the one punishment—dismissal. Therefore, the only hope for General Eagan is in the direction of commutation, mitigation or disapproval.

BATTLE WITH A BIG BEAR.

Bruin Decidedly Objected to Having an Ulcerated Tooth Pulled.

Omaha, Neb., Jan. 30.—An enormous silver tip bear, frenzied with an ulcerated tooth which its master was trying to extract, escaped from its cage in the Creighton theater yesterday and created a panic before being captured. In addition to frightening a number of persons, the big bear seriously hurt its master, Paul Batty, badly lacerated Stagehand McDonald, and tore the clothes off Jake Rosenthal, manager of the theater.

McDonald was assisting Batty to extract the tooth, and a crowd of men and boys surrounded the cage of the enraged animal, witnessing the operation. The brute was fastened down with chains and leather bands, but when the trainer touched the ulcerated tooth the bear gave a roar and burst his bonds like paper. With a sweep of his paw he threw Batty and McDonald to the floor and turned upon the crowd around the iron cage.

They flew in every direction, but the cage was demolished in a moment. Manager Rosenthal was climbing into the flies as the enraged beast passed his hiding place. He made one pass at the manager, and catching his frock coat carried it completely away with him. He tore the shoe from one of Rosenthal's feet, and then passed on in pursuit of the crowd.

In the maze of scenery back of the stage the bear vented his fury by demolishing everything in sight. By this time the trainer recovered sufficiently to direct the heating of irons to subdue the animal. His roars could be heard for several blocks. He was finally driven into the cellar of the theater, where, surrounded by a row of redhot irons, he submitted to being bound.

Explosion Kills Fourteen Miners.

Murcia, Spain, Jan. 30.—Fourteen persons were killed yesterday by an explosion of gas in the Palia mine, near Mazanron, 20 miles west of Cartagena. The other miners succeeded in making their escape.

Paris Women Voters.

Although women in Paris had the right for the first time the other day to vote, few exercised the privilege. In the second arrondissement only three voted, and a similar number in the eighth. Much the same was the result in every other arrondissement, while in the Quartier Latin, which might be thought the very sanctum sanctorum of women's rights, not a single member of the fair sex took the trouble to vote. The sole exception to this otherwise general indifference was the first arrondissement, which comprises the Halles, or markets, where several hundred women gave their votes.

Diagnosis Under Difficulties.

"What appears to be the matter with your father?" inquired the doctor as he hastily put his clothes on.

"He's got the plumbago," replied the boy. "I think that's what maw says it is."

"Pain in the small of the back, I presume?" said the doctor.

"No, sir, he hain't got no small of the back. My paw weighs 284 pounds."

Society.

"What do these here anarchists want?" asked Mr. Oilrox. "To do away with the rich?"

"More than that," said his guest. "They would do away with society."

"I don't know," said Mr. Oilrox, after a cautious glance to see if his wife were in hearing, "but what I'm with em."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

MILITARY GOVERNMENT

Is Distasteful to the Inhabitants of Porto Rico.

WANT ISLAND AMERICANIZED,

But They Earnestly Desire a Civil Government in Some Reasonable and Practicable Form—Less Freedom
Now Than Under the Spaniards.

San Juan de Porto Rico, Jan. 30.—While the Porto Ricans do not offer the least resistance to the military administration, they made no secret of the fact that they do not desire its continuance. It is not that they object to the Americanization of the island, but they earnestly wish for a civil government in some reasonable and practicable form. Under the old Spanish regime, they will tell you, they enjoyed a higher degree of freedom than now, and, though they seize with sincere enthusiasm every opportunity for putting themselves in touch with the institutions and demands of the new government, they feel a pride in working out their own political salvation as a free people, and not as a subjugated one. They love liberty, and the intelligent element is convinced that under a civil administration the country would swiftly adapt itself to the better conditions offered by the United States.

The military government is thorough and active. The whole island is effectively patrolled, and quiet and order prevails in every quarter. But the Porto Ricans sometimes complain that the military authorities interfere with the civil authorities without adequate reason. Quite frequently of late protests have been lodged at headquarters against what the Porto Ricans have described as intrusions by United States officers in municipal affairs not falling within the scope of their duties. As already briefly cabled, the mayor and city council of San Juan remonstrated—in fact, almost rebelled—at what they considered and called "unwarranted military dictation."

An enterprising Porto Rican, just returned from the United States, had obtained permission from the council to place small business signs upon the lamp posts around the plaza. The signs were neat enough, but they offended the sight of many of the Americans, who complained to General Fred Grant, military commander of the district of San Juan. General Grant sent a peremptory summons to the council to cancel the contract and to remove the signs. Porto Rican pride could not endure it. The councillors regarded the order as a last straw and tendered their resignations to General Henry, the governor of Porto Rico. There was no bad feeling. The councillors merely said that, as they enjoyed so little real authority, they preferred to give up their positions. General Henry, however, took their view of the matter and assured them that there would be no further cause for complaint on the score of military coercion.

Every suggestion of General Henry has been responded to with alacrity, and as a result there is a marvelous change in the order of things. Economies have been effected in the various departments, at the expense of the army of satellites and the formality dear to the subjects of kings. The people have accepted with good nature the new sanitary regulations, though these have wonderfully disturbed the unclean and crowded tenements that had been regarded with complacency, and as a crowning test of popular patience they put up with the postal service, which is inexpressibly worse than anything they were ever subjected to by the Spaniards.

It is next to impossible for one to transact business in this island if it be necessary to use the mails, for these are unreliable to the last degree. Letters mailed in the San Juan postoffice frequently do not reach their destination in the island for ten days, and a most irritating indifference marks the proceedings of the local postal authorities.

PLOWED THROUGH THE WORKERS.

Locomotive Runs Down Twenty-Six,
Two Dead, Many Injured.

Altoona, Pa., Jan. 30.—A gang of track repairmen were working on the railroad at the western opening of the Gallitzin tunnel at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon when they heard the approach of a locomotive, which was running west through the tunnel. The workmen all stepped from the north track, on which the westbound trains move, to the south track. The smoke in the tunnel prevented them from seeing the approaching locomotive, which in order to avoid obstructions on the north track was running on the south track. Rushing out of the tunnel the locomotive ploughed right through the gang of workmen, all huddled together on the south track. One man was instantly killed, one died in the Altoona hospital and 16 were more or less seriously injured. None escaped without injury.

The dead are: David Wilt, aged 40, killed instantly; Thomas W. Sanker, aged 25, died in hospital. The more seriously injured are: H. C. Hull, gang foreman, ankle broken; George Smith, aged 23, left leg broken; George Guyer, arm and nose broken; Henry Burkin, arm broken.

The locomotive that struck the men was running empty from Altoona to Conemaugh to bring east a freight train.

Ran on the Rocks and Five Drowned.

South Norwalk, Conn., Jan. 28.—Disabled by an accident to her steering gear during a trip up the sound Thursday night, the steam canal boat J. C. Austin, of New York, ran on the rocks off Norwalk yesterday and sank. Accompanying her was the consort David B. Fisk, loaded with coal consigned to Westport. Five of the persons aboard the two vessels lost their lives. They were: Captain Levine, of Jersey City; Chief Engineer Thomas Young; deckhand and pilot, names unknown; Mrs. Helen Callahan, of New York.

The Chase For Khalifa Abandoned.

London, Jan. 30.—A dispatch to The Daily News from Cairo says that Colonel Kitchener's column, which was sent in pursuit of Khalifa Abdullah into Kordofan, where he has been making war upon the tribesmen, has abandoned the attempt to overtake him.

Right Up to Date.

A 10-year-old boy in Cleveland reads a great deal, and his father delights in encouraging his literary taste. Not long ago the father suggested to the boy that he should read up on the life and death of Nathan Hale, the spy and hero of the Revolution. A few evenings later the father asked the lad if he had carried out his request. The boy said he had. "Who was Nathan Hale?" the father inquired.

"He was strung up by the British soldiers," was the somewhat irrelevant reply.

"You should say hanged," said the father.

"Strung up is just the same," said the boy.

"No," said the father, "it isn't just the same."

"Well," said the boy, "it's just the same to Nathan Hale."

This was something of a poser, and the father discreetly changed the subject.

"And why did the British hang Nathan Hale?" he asked.

"Because," replied the boy promptly—"because he rubbered for Gen'l George Washington!"

This atrocious definition of a spy's duties was too much for the father, and he promptly dropped the Hale inquiry then and there.—Exchange.

The Dreyfus Case Will Again Agitate the Chamber of Deputies.

BEAUREPAIRE AGAIN VIOLENT.

The Ex-Judge Takes Advantage of a New Opportunity to Stir Up Strife. The Remarkable Demonstration of Bonapartists in a Theater.

Paris, Jan. 30.—The government's decision to submit to the chamber of deputies a bill providing that cases of trial revision shall be brought before the united sections of the court of cassation has reopened the floodgates of the Dreyfus agitation. The situation appears more confusing and menacing than ever. For days the anti-Dreyfusites have been clamoring to have the case referred to the united sections, because they have considered it certain that among more than 30 judges they could rely upon an anti-Dreyfusite majority.

In yesterday's Echo De Paris M. Quesnay De Beaurepaire, who on Jan. 9 resigned the presidency of the civil section of the court of cassation as a protest against the way in which the criminal section, under the presidency of M. Loew, was conducting the Dreyfus proceedings again justifies his action in a screaming screed, and asserts that the ministers hold a decisive document, while MM. Coppee and Jules Lomaitre have signed a manifesto on behalf of the organization known as La Patrie Francaise, claiming credit for urging the government to take its present course, and declaring that if the Dreyfus affair be once submitted to this truly supreme tribunal it will receive such a solution as will ensure the country's repose.

M. Loew, president of the criminal chamber, who was asked his opinion regarding the government's proposal, said:

"I am glad to be relieved of the responsibility, but the government's action is revolutionary."

The anti-revisionist papers are jubilant, but the most serious and impartial journals deprecate the government's weakness. In all political centers there has been unusual excitement and activity. It is thought in some quarters that the senate will refuse to accept the bill, thus producing a constitutional crisis.

The disturbance at the Nouveau theater last Friday evening, when at the conclusion of the performance of the play "The King of Rome" the Bonapartists in the house hoisted a tricolor flag, surmounted by an imperial eagle, and shouted "Viva L'Empereur," was very significant of the attitude the imperialists take in the circumstances. From stalls to gallery 1,500 Bonapartists crowded the theater. Prince Murat and all the titled and prominent representatives of the party were present. Various pertinent allusions in the drama, which is a glorification of the Napoleonic legend, were greeted with thunders of applause.

M. De Blowitz, the Paris correspondent of the London Times, commenting upon the "state of anarchy and revolution" which the government's yielding to outdoor pressure bespeaks, predicts that the bill will fail to stand serious discussion, and says that, like all concessions to clamor, it will satisfy nobody.

The Orleanists Active.

London, Jan. 30.—The Brussels correspondent of The Daily News says: The Duke of Orleans holds daily receptions for the Orleanists in Brussels. A local factory has received an order for thousands of buttons adorned with his portrait and bearing the inscription, "Le Rio est rentre. Vive Le Rio." Many royalists are already wearing these buttons.

Men and Eggs.

German science announces that everything needed to make a man weigh 150 pounds can be found in the whites and yolks of 1,200 hens' eggs. Reduced to a fluid the average man would yield 98 cubic meters of illuminating gas and hydrogen enough to fill a balloon capable of lifting 155 pounds. The normal human body has in it the iron needed to make seven large nails, the fat for 14 pounds of candles, the carbon for 65 gross of crayons and phosphorus enough for 820,000 matches. Out of it can be obtained besides 20 coffeespoonfuls of salt, 50 lumps of sugar and 42 liters of water.

The Union Central Life Insurance Co., of Cincinnati, is now thirty-one years old, and has $20,000,000 assets, with a surplus of $3,000,000. The company is now doubling in size every five years, and the insurance reports show that it makes the highest interest rate and lowest death rate for its policy holders of all the old line companies; hence it is one of the best managed financial institutions in this country to-day, and can but make the best returns to policy holders. Its size, location, management make it an ideal company for investment, besides furnishing the very best protection to the loved ones in the event that death overtakes you early, or, as a saving to come to you in your old age, should an All-Wise Providence spare you that long.

To-day is the time to insure. Tomorrow may never come. Death may overtake you, bad health may claim you as a victim at any moment; hence, do not put off such an important step, but take your insurance right away.

Call or write to R. S. Tuck, General Agent, Chamber of Commerce Building, Richmond, Va., at once, and learn of the matchless advantages of the Union Central and investigate the new guaranty policy they write, which is unquestionably the most model policy contract issued by any company, and if you need any assistance the company will always help you in carrying it. R. L. CLIBORNE, Local Agent, Blackstone, Va.

RECOMMENDATION: The editor of the Recorder believes the Union Central to be one of the best companies in the country, and is as well pleased with his policy in it as with the one he holds in the Equitable, Northwestern, and New York Life.

N. B. SCOTT FOR SENATOR.

The Republican Candidate Declared Elected in West Virginia.

Charleston, W. Va., Jan. 26.—After a contest of over two weeks Internal Revenue Commissioner Nathan Bay Scott was yesterday afternoon elected United States senator from Virginia for the term ending March, 1905. He will succeed Senator Charles Faulkner. A decisive result was reached on the first joint ballot. The vote stood: Scott (Rep.), 48; McGraw (Dem.), 46; Goff (Rep.), 1. Total vote cast, 95; necessary to elect, 48.

It is given out that Scott's election will be contested before the United States senate. During the balloting the Democrats filed a protest against the votes of Getzendanner and Brizen, whom they claim to be ineligible because they accepted a commission in the volunteer army while holding their offices as senators. This they will make one ground of contest. The other ground will be because Scott received only 48 votes, or less than a majority of all the members elected to the legislature. As a precedent they cite the Blackburn-Hunter case in Kentucky, in which the senate refused to let Hunter take his seat because he had not received a majority of all the members of the Kentucky legislature, though he had received a majority of those present and voting.

Nathan Bay Scott was born in Ohio in 1842. He enlisted in the Union army and was mustered out in 1865, settling in Wheeling shortly afterward, where he went to work as an employee of the Central Glass company. In a short time he was employed as manager, and soon afterward was elected president of the company, which position he filled for years. He served two years as president of the second branch of the city council of Wheeling. He was elected in 1882 as a member of the senate and again in 1886, serving eight years. For five years he was West Virginia's member of the Republican national committee, and was appointed commissioner of internal revenue by President McKinley.

THE SOUTH WAS RIGHT.

After This Declaration Mr. Butler Withdraws Pension Amendment.

Washington, Jan. 27.—As the senate was about to conclude consideration of the pension appropriation bill late yesterday afternoon Mr. Butler, of North Carolina, offered his amendment, announced some time ago, providing for the pensioning of ex-Confederate soldiers. Upon this he took the floor and delivered a speech which, as he proceeded, developed into a most unexpected utterance. Mr. Butler defended the position taken by the south during the great civil conflict of a third of a century ago. He declared that the south was right, and that history would so record, and that every shot fired by a southern soldier was fired in defense of the rights of his state, conferred by the constitution, in self defense, and in defense of his home and fireside. At the conclusion of his speech Mr. Butler withdrew his amendment.

Mr. Bate, of Tennessee, himself a distinguished Confederate officer, declared that while the south believed it was right, the occasion was not opportune for the proposition which Mr. Butler had made, and that the southern soldiers as a body did not desire pensions from the general government, and he expressed his satisfaction that Mr. Butler had withdrawn his amendment.

GENERAL SOUTHERN NEWS.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 24.—George Hite, a white man, who murdered a negro at Skipwith, in Mecklenburg county, in April last, was hanged at Boydton yesterday. His neck was broken by the fall.

New Orleans, Jan. 30.—A body found near Fort St. Philip was yesterday identified as that of Captain Sturtevant, the pilot of the launch Paul Jones. From the position and clothing of the body it is almost certain he was off duty and asleep at the time death came, and that the boat was wrecked by an explosion during the night.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 27.—The board of visitors of the Virginia Military Institute has decided to reinstate the 35 cadets, composing the first class, who were dismissed by the superintendent for gross breach of discipline on New Year's eve. The resolution of the board sustains the action of General Shipp, the superintendent, and imposes heavy penalties on the cadets to be reinstated.

Miami, Fla., Jan. 24.—The richly dressed body of a young woman, probably that of one of the party lost in the wreck of the naphtha launch Paul Jones, was found Sunday morning at Boca Ratone. The dress is of soft woolen material, with narrow striped gray, red and black; the jacket is striped in blue and purple. The undershirt was of red flannel, the stockings black and the boots laced.

Savannah, Ga., Jan. 28.—Jennie Moore, a white woman, aged 19, who says her home is in Jersey City, N. J., and Trinnell Ellis, a negro, were yesterday sentenced by Judge Norwood, of the city court, to the chain gang for miscegenation. Later the sentence as regards the woman was suspended, and she was given 24 hours to leave the state. The woman says she is an army nurse, but was left behind when the troops went to Cuba.

Montgomery, Jan. 26.—The senate of Alabama passed a dispensary bill yesterday authorizing each county and incorporated town or city in which the sale of liquor is not now prohibited to carry on in its name the business of buying and selling liquors. In each town which has a population of 10,000 or less there shall be one dispensary, and generally in larger cities there shall be one dispensary for 10,000 inhabitants. In places outside of incorporated towns or cities they are to be established upon the petition of 20 or more householders and freeholders.

Savannah, Jan. 30.—Depot Quartermaster Bellinger last night received a dispatch dated Pablo Beach, Fla., from Colonel Gardner, of the Thirty-first Michigan regiment, on board the transport Chester, from this port for Cienfuegos, stating that when 75 miles south of Savannah the Chester ran into heavy weather. Part of the deckload fell in, killing three mules, and the remainder of the deck cargo, of the value of nearly $10,000, was lost overboard. The deck cargo included 127 hospital tents, 180 hospital cots and a large quantity of lumber and other supplies.

The Mad Princess.

According to L'Etoile Belge, the health of Princess Louise of Coburg, daughter of the king of the Belgians, who has been for many months shut up in a lunatic asylum in Austria, is beginning to decline. Her memory is, it is said, completely gone, and she never asks for any news of her parents or other relatives. She passes her time in walking up and down her apartment, where she is always strictly watched, and in cutting little paper patterns.

Facts and Questions

FOR

Parents and Pastors

"It is not enough to educate. We must put a idea into our education if it is to be saved. The idea is the Son of God."—Dr. J. C. Kilgo in address before Virginia Conference.

- (1.) Fatally Defective! What? All education that lacks the thought quoted above as its corner stone.
- (2.) You desire your daughter to become a well educated woman. But do you not desire most of all that she shall be a well educated CHRISTIAN woman?
- (3.) The spiritual character of the school which your daughter attends will greatly influence her work in this world and her location in the world to come.
- (4.) As a christian man, do you not believe that God expects you to use the very best care in this important matter, and will hold you responsible for the selection you make? Have you a right to place her in any school which does not say with emphasis that growth in grace is above social polish and mere intellectual culture?
- (5.) Can you conscientiously place her in a State school, which from its very nature ignores religious training, even if by so doing you should save $20 a year? If you can raise $122 to develop her intellect can you not raise $20 more to develop her soul at the same time?
- (6.) The Methodist Church in the Virginia Conference has now a system of schools to which parents can safely entrust their children, "Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." They are long absolutely to the Church. They have been built solely to meet the needs of our people. They are private schools in any sense of the word. They do not have that serious defect of private schools—LACK OF PERMANENCY. They do not die or pass into the hands of the State or of other parties when the owner dies, or gets tired of teaching, or fails to make a success of work. In a nut-shell, they were not established in order to make fortune or as a means of making living. They have only one aim: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.
- (7.) This system was established for your children. Will you give them the benefit of it? The Randolph-Macon Woman's College has been established for the high education of women.

The Blackstone Female Institute

Is one of the two schools in the Conference for younger girls which belong ABSOLUTELY to the Church. Its success has been great from the start. Of the Board of Education of the Annual Conference spoke as follows:

"The Blackstone Institute is owned entirely by our Church. It is not in a sense a private corporation or stock company, but stands in the same relation to the Church as the Randolph-Macon system. While not in the Randolph-Macon system, the course of study is correlated with the Woman's College, and stands related to the latter as the academies to the college at Ashland. The Institute is in a most prosperous condition, having now, at the beginning of its fourth year, patronage of 170. It is thoroughly Methodist in ownership and spirit, every officer and teacher being an active member of our Church."

At a meeting of the Trustees of Randolph-Macon College, held June 17, 1898, the following resolution was adopted—viz:

"RESOLVED, That next to the institutions under our special care, we feel the greatest interest in the Blackstone Female Institute, under the superintendency of Rev. James Cannon, Jr., which is owned entirely by our Church; and that we regard it and commend it to our people as holding a tributary relation to our Woman's College at Lynchburg, akin to that of our Academies to our College at Ashland."

Send Your Daughter to a Christian School!

THREE-FOLD WORK OF THE INSTITUTE.

- (1.) Gives Diploma of Graduation to all who complete the work of the Institute.
- (2.) Prepares for the Randolph-Macon Woman's College those desiring to take the higher work of that institution.
- (3.) Teachers' course—giving special training to those desiring to fit themselves to teach either in private or public schools.

THE ERMINE.

(ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS.)

I read of the ermine to-day,
Of the ermine who will not step
By the faint of a step in the mire
The creature who will not stain
Her garment of wild white fire;
Of the dumb, flying, soulless thing,
(So we with our souls dare to say,)
The being of sense and of sod,
That will not, that will not de-file
The nature she took from her God.
And we with the souls we have,
Go cheering the hunters on
To prey with that pleading eye.
She cannot go into the mud!
She can stay like the snow and die!
The hunters come leaping on,
She turns like a hart at bay.
* * * O, thou who thinkest on this,
Stand like a star, and be still,
Where the soil oozes under thy feet!
Better, ah! better to die
Than to take one step in the mire;
Oh! blessed to die or to live
With garment of holy fire!

SHOP GALLOWAY IN VIRGINIA.

Bishop Charles B. Galloway, the president of the Board of Education of the Church, will arrive in Richmond on January 15th, and will be with us two weeks. His work will be in the interest of the Twentieth Century Book Offering. He will hold three conferences of the preachers, one at Richmond, one at Norfolk, one at Lynchburg. The one in Richmond will be held at Centenary Church on February 16th, at 8 P. M. The one in Norfolk will be held on the 22d or the 23d, and the one in Lynchburg on the 29th or 30th. To these three conferences it is hoped that the most of our preachers will come.

The Church throughout all its territory is rousing to offer to our Heavenly Father their token of Thanksgiving for his guidance and manifold blessings. It is not believed that Virginia will fall behind in this matter, but that our conference will be one of the first to attain the mark set for her—$100,000.

JAMES CANNON-WHITEHEAD COMMITTEE REPORT.

The editor of the RECORDER has received a number of inquiries as to the articles which have appeared in the Norfolk Landmark since the last Conference session, on the subject of the Cannon-Whitehead Committee Report. These inquiries he has not been able to answer satisfactorily without giving the articles in full, and that it has not been possible to do. In a recent editorial in the Richmond Advocate, reference was made to these articles, and the inquiries have followed. I have finally decided, in order to give this information to the Conference, to publish these articles in full, and also the full report of the committee, adopted by the Conference, and at the end to make an additional statement.

The first thing following is the exact report of the committee, which is given, that the report made by Brother Butts to the Landmark may be compared with it:

RECOMMENDATION IN THE CASE OF JAMES CANNON, JR.

We, your committee appointed to report upon the complaint made against James Cannon, Jr., by Paul Whitehead and William P. Wright, and to "recommend action thereon," offer our report as follows:

We began our work promptly, and have continued it with all diligence, giving patient and thorough consideration to the allegations, evidence and arguments, both of the complainants and of the accused.

The complaint is in the following terms:

We complain against James Cannon, Jr., that he wrote and published in the Methodist Recorder and Southern Methodist Recorder during Conference year 1897-98 certain articles which were unjust, uncharitable and offensive to ourselves and other members of the Conference and we specially refer to articles which have been marked and commented upon in the presence of the committee, and the papers containing them, as well as copies of the "Nashville Advocate," to which reference had been made in the articles of James Cannon, Jr., and left in the possession of the Secretary of the Committee.

We complain that these articles are calculated to disturb the peace, harmony, and brotherly concord of the Conference; that if tolerated and uncondemned they render the passage of character of no effect, and are in themselves calculated to provoke a breach of the peace, and are under the laws of the State of Virginia, "actionable."

PAUL WHITEHEAD,
WM. P. WRIGHT.

In support of this complaint, evidence both documentary and oral was presented, and full argument was made by the complainants. In denial of it, documentary evidence was offered, many witnesses were examined, and lengthy argument was made by the accused. Thereafter the committee consulted together freely, and carefully considered the various matters that had been brought to their attention. As a result of our deliberations we submit the following statements:

1. We do not believe that Brothers Whitehead and Wright, in preferring the complaint, have been actuated by personal ill-will, or any other unworthy motive.

2. We do not believe that Brother Cannon, in any of the utterances complained of, has intended to be unjust or uncharitable, or needlessly offensive to his brethren.

3. We are of the opinion, however, that Brother Cannon has sometimes expressed himself in terms so strong and uncompromising, as to produce upon the mind of the average reader or hearer the impression of uncharitableness, and occasionally in terms that are justly offensive to the persons under criticism. And we advise Brother Cannon to so guard his utterances in future as while maintaining all due loyalty to his conscientious convictions, to avoid even the appearance of unkindness.

4. We recommend that Brother Cannon's character pass.

J. T. MARTIN, J. E. DESHAZO, B. E. LEDBETTER, W. T. GREEN, J. T. WHITLEY, R. H. MULLEN, T. G. PULLEN, W. R. CROWDER, W. B. BEAUCHAMP.

The report did not appear in the Landmark as given above, but instead of the report, there appeared a condensed statement as follows:

REPORT AS FIRST PUBLISHED IN THE LANDMARK.

That the articles published in the RECORDER over the signature of James Cannon, Jr., are calculated to disturb the peace and harmony of the Conference and render the passage of character a farce; that we do not believe that either Mr. Whitehead or Mr. Wright are moved by personal ill-will in preferring this complaint; nor that Mr. Cannon intended to be unjust or uncharitable or needlessly offensive to his brethren.

We are of the opinion, however, that Brother Cannon has sometimes expressed himself, in terms so strong and uncompromising as to produce upon the mind of the average reader or hearer the impression of uncharitableness and occasionally in terms that are justly offensive to the persons under criticism, and we advise Brother Cannon to (so) guard his utterances in the future, and (as) while maintaining all due loyalty to his convictions, to avoid even the appearance of unkindness.

We recommend that Brother Cannon's character pass.

Signed—J. T. MARTIN, J. T. WHITLEY, B. E. LEDBETTER, J. E. DESHAZO, R. H. MULLEN, T. G. PULLEN, W. T. GREEN, W. R. CROWDER, W. B. BEAUCHAMP.

(In this rendering the first part of the first paragraph is an entirely incorrect condensation, and the very important words "so" and "as" in the original report are entirely omitted, and the "as" changed into "and", thus materially altering the meaning.)

I saw this report the next morning and sent the following note to the Landmark:

THE CANNON-WHITEHEAD COMMITTEE REPORT.

To the Editor of The Landmark:—I was greatly surprised in reading your paper this morning to find such a report of the finding of the committee in the complaint of Dr. Whitehead and Rev. Wm. P. Wright against the passage of my moral character. This report makes the charge itself a part of the finding of the committee in reference to me. They charged "that to pass my character would be a farce." The committee reported that the charge of unjust, uncharitable and offensive statements was not sustained, and recommended that my character be passed, all complaints to the contrary notwithstanding. Personally, I am entirely satisfied with the report of the committee, in the exact language which they used (which does not even censure me, but advises me not to use such strong and uncompromising language in the defense of my views), but I am greatly surprised at such a grave error on the part of your reporter. I hope that you will publish this card and the exact resolutions passed by the committee.

JAMES CANNON, JR.
November 24th, 1898.

Dr. Whitehead wrote the following letter to the Landmark on Dec. 6th:

FINDING OF THE CANNON COMMITTEE AT THE RECENT VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

To the Editor of The Landmark:—A friend has shown me your issue of November 25th containing a card from Rev. James Cannon, Jr., dated Nov. 24th, 1898.

Two of the statements made by him are grossly inaccurate.

First, he says "they (Dr. Whitehead and Mr. Wright) charged that to pass my character would be a farce." This was neither "charged" nor said by us anywhere or at any time.

What we said was that "the examination of character" in Conference—our time-honored usage—"would be a farce" if these articles of Mr. C.'s paper were "tolerated and uncondemned;" that, not "the passage of (his) character," but the passage of the characters of the rest of us would be farcical if Mr. Cannon could, uncensured and unrebuked, write what seemed good to him about us, after such passage of character and without legal arraignment of us either at Conference or ad interim.

Second. He says: "The committee reported that the charge of unjust, uncharitable and offensive statements was not sustained."

No such language is in the report. It is sufficient to refute this interpretation of their finding to ask your readers to read again item "3" of the committee's "statements." In fact, the charge of "uncharitableness" is distinctly sustained so far as the "impression" made upon "the average reader or hearer" is concerned; and without even that qualification, Mr. C. is held guilty of being "occasionally" "justly offensive to the persons under criticism;" that is, they had just ground to be offended; were, therefore, to that extent unjustly wronged by his articles.

True, the committee, in item "2" give him the benefit of his disclaimer as to "intention", and so save him from a criminal charge and trial therefor before a "trial committee" according to our law.

This was not necessarily involved in our "complaint." We purposely left the question of "intention" with the committee, and on that point they gave him merciful and charitable judgment, but they appended admonitory advice for "the future," which it is to be hoped may be heeded.

As the first point of his defense was that the prosecution was inspired by prejudice and personal dislike towards him and not by a worthy desire to put an end to such unseemingly and unbrotherly writings, the committee, in item "1," put a quietus upon that plea! Unexplained, that item might be easily misunderstood by the general reader.

As the case stands, it is manifestly not acquittal, "all complaints to the contrary notwithstanding," but mild cen-

AN ABUSE OF TRUSTS.

DR. TALMAGE PREACHES AGAINST DISHONEST TRANSACTIONS.

Timely Lessons Drawn From the Spider and the Fly—The Web of Deception, Which Causes the Ruin of Many Men.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5.—This, like many of Dr. Talmage's discourses, recommends right doing for this world as well as preparation for the heavenly world; text, Job viii. 14, "Whose trust shall be a spider's web."

The two most skillful architects in all the world are the bee and the spider. The one puts up a sugar manufactory, and the other builds a slaughter house for flies. On a bright summer morning when the sun comes out and shines upon the spider's web, bedecked with dew, the gossamer structure seems bright enough for a suspension bridge for aerial beings to cross on. But alas for the poor fly which in the latter part of that very day ventures on it and is caught and dungeoned and destroyed! The fly was informed that it was a free bridge and would cost nothing, but at the other end of the bridge the toll paid was its own life. The next day there comes down a strong wind, and away go the web and the marauding spider and the victimized fly. So delicate are the silken threads of the spider's web that many thousands of them are put together before they become visible to the human eye, and it takes 4,000,000 of them to make a thread as large as the human hair. Most cruel as well as most ingenious is the spider. A prisoner in the Bastille, France, had one so trained that at the sound of the violin it every day came for its meal of flies. The author of my text, who was a leading scientist of his day, had no doubt watched the voracious process of this one insect with another and saw spider and fly swept down with the same broom or scattered by the same wind. Alas that the world has so many designing spiders and victimized flies!

There has not been a time when the utter and black irresponsibility of many men having the financial interests of others in charge has been more evident than in these last few years. The bankruptcy of banks and disappearance of administrators with the funds of large estates and the disordered accounts of United States officials have sometimes made a pestilence of crime that solemnizes every thoughtful man and woman and leads every philanthropist and Christian to ask, What shall be done to stay the plague? There is ever and anon a monsoon of swindle abroad, a typhoon, a sirocco. I sometimes ask myself if it would not be better for men making wills to bequeath the property directly to the executors and officers of the court and appoint the widows and orphans a committee to see that the former got all that did not belong to them. The simple fact is that there are a large number of men sailing yachts and driving fast horses and members of expensive clubhouses and controlling country seats who are not worth a dollar if they return to others their just rights. Under some sudden reverse they fail, and with afflicted air seem to retire from the world and seem almost ready for monastic life, when in two or three years they blossom out again, having compromised with their creditors—that is, paid them nothing but regret, and the only difference between the second chapter of prosperity and the first is that their pictures are mounted instead of in sets and their horses go a mile in 20 seconds less than their predecessors, and instead of one country seat they have three. I have watched and have noticed that nine out of ten of those who fail in what is called high life have more means after than before the failure, and in many of the cases failure is only a stratagem to escape the payment of honest debts and put the world off the track while they practice a large swindle. There is something woefully wrong in the fact that these things are possible.

Where the Responsibility Rests.

First of all, I charge the blame on careless, indifferent bank directors and boards having in charge great financial institutions. It ought not to be possible for a president or cashier or prominent officer of a banking institution to swindle it year after year without detection. I will undertake to say that if these frauds are carried on for two or three years without detection either the directors are partners in the infamy and pocket part of the theft or they are guilty of a culpable neglect of duty, for which God will hold them responsible as he holds the acknowledged defrauders. What right have prominent business men to allow their names to be published as directors in a financial institution so that unsophisticated people are thereby induced to deposit their money in or buy the scrip thereof when they, the published directors, are doing nothing for the safety of the institution? It is a case of deception most reprehensible. Many people with a surplus of money, not needed for immediate use, although it may be a little further on indispensable, are without friends competent to advise them, and they are guided solely by the character of the men whose names are associated with the institution. When the crash came and with the overthrow of the banks went the small earnings and limited fortunes of widows and orphans and the helplessly aged, the directors stood with idiotic stare, and to the inquiry of the frenzied depositors and stockholders who had lost their all, and to the arraignment of an indignant public, had nothing to say except: "We thought it was all right. We did not know there was anything wrong going on." It was their duty to know. They stood in a position which deluded the people with the idea that they were carefully observant. Calling themselves directors, they did not direct. They had opportunity of auditing accounts and inspecting the books. No time to do so? Then they had no business to accept the position. It seems to be the pride of some moneyed men to be directors in a great many institutions, and all they know is whether or not they get their dividends regularly, and their names are used as decoy ducks to bring others near enough to be made game of. What first of all is needed is that 500 bank directors and insurance company directors resign or attend to their business as directors. The business world will be full of fraud just as long as fraud is so easy. When you arrest the president and secretary of a bank for an embezzlement carried on for many years, be sure to have plenty of sheriffs out the same day to arrest all the directors. They are guilty either of neglect or complicity.

"Oh," some will say, "better preach the gospel and let business matters alone." I reply, if your gospel does not inspire common honesty in the dealings of men, the sooner you close up your gospel and pitch it into the depths of the Atlantic ocean the better. An orthodox swindler is worse than a heterodox swindler. The recitation of all the catechisms and creeds ever written and partaking of all the communion chalices that ever glittered in the churches of Christendom will never save your soul unless your business character corresponds with your religious profession. Some of the worst scoundrels in America have been members of churches, and they got fat on sermons about heaven when they most needed to have the pulpits preach that which would either bring them to repentance or thunder them out of the holy communions where their presence was a sacrilege and an infamy.

The Abuse of Sacred Trust.

We must especially deplore the misfortunes of banks in various parts of this country in that they damage the banking institution, which is the great convenience of the centuries and indispensable to commerce and the advance of nations. With one hand it blesses the lender, and with the other it blesses the borrower. On their shoulders are the interests of private individuals and great corporations. In them are the great arteries through which run the currents of the nation's life. They have been the resources of the thousands of financiers in days of business exigency. They stand for accommodation, for facility, for individual, state and national relief. At their head and in their management there are as much interest and moral worth as in any class of men, perhaps more. How nefarious, then, the behavior of those who bring disrepute upon this venerable, benignant and God honored institution.

We also deplore abuse of trust funds because the abusers fly in the face of divine goodness which seems determined to bless this land. We are having a series of unexampled national harvests. The wheat gamblers get hold of the wheat, and the corn gamblers get hold of the corn. The full tide of God's mercy toward this land is put back by those great dikes of dishonest resistance. When God provides enough food and clothing to feed and apparel this whole nation like princes, the scramble of dishonest men to get more than their share, and get it at all hazards, keeps everything shaking with uncertainty and everybody asking "What next?" Every week makes new revelations. How many more bank presidents and bank cashiers have been speculating with other people's money, and how many more bank directors are in imbecile silence, letting the perfidy go on, the great and patient God only knows! My opinion is that we have got near the bottom. The wind has been pricked from the great bubble of American speculation. The men who thought that the judgment day was at least 5,000 years off found it in 1898 or 1897 or 1896. And this nation has been taught that men must keep their hands out of other people's pockets. Great businesses built on borrowed capital have been obliterated, and men who had nothing have lost all they had. I believe we are started on a higher career of prosperity than this land has ever seen, if, and if, and if.

Caution to Speculators.

If the first men, and especially Christian men, will learn never to speculate upon borrowed capital—if you have a mind to take your own money and turn it all into kites, to fly them over every common in the United States, you do society no wrong, except when you tumble your helpless children into the poorhouse for the public to take care of. But you have no right to take the money of others and turn it into kites. There is one word that has deluded more people into bankruptcy and state prison and ruin than any other word in commercial life, and that is the word borrow. That one word is responsible for all the defalcations and embezzlements and financial consternations of the last 20 years. When executors conclude to speculate with the funds of an estate committed to their charge, they do not purloin; they say they only borrow. When a banker makes an overdraft upon his institution, he does not commit a theft; he only borrows.

When the officer of a company by flaming advertisement in some religious papers and gilt certificate of stock gets a multitude of country people to put their small earnings into an enterprise for carrying on some undeveloped nothing, he does not fraudulently take their money; he only borrows. When a young man with easy access to his employer's money drawer or the confidential clerk by close propinquity to the account books takes a few dollars for a Wall street excursion, he expects to put it back. He will put it all back. He will put it all back very soon. He only borrows. Why, when you are going to do wrong, pronounce so long a word as borrow, a word of six letters, when you can get a shorter word more descriptive of the reality, a word of only five letters, the word steal?

There are times when we all borrow, and borrow legitimately and borrow with the divine blessing, for Christ in his Sermon on the Mount enjoins, "From him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away." A young man rightly borrows money to get his education. Purchasing a house and not able to pay all down in cash, the purchaser rightly borrows it on mortgage. Crises come in business, when it would be wrong for a man not to borrow. But I roll this warning through all these aisles, over the backs of all these pews, never borrow to speculate—not a dollar, not a cent, not a farthing. Young men, I warn you by your worldly prospects and the value of your immortal souls, do not do it. There are breakers distinguished for their shipwrecks—the Hanways, the Needles, the Caskets, the Douvers, the Anderlos, the Skerries—and many a craft has gone to pieces on those rocks, but I have to tell you that all the Hanways and the Needles and the Caskets and the Skerries are as nothing compared with the long line of breakers which bound the ocean of commercial life north, south, east and west, with the white foam of their despair and the dirge of their damnation, the breakers of borrow.

Faith and Repentance Necessary.

If I had only a worldly weapon to use on this subject, I would give you the fact, fresh from the highest authority, that 90 per cent of those who go into wild speculation lose all, but I have a better warning than a worldly warning. From the place where men have perished—body, mind, soul—stand off, stand off! Abstract pulpit discussion must step aside on this question. Faith and repentance are absolutely necessary, but faith and repentance are no more doctrines of the Bible than commercial integrity. "Render to all their dues." "Owe no man anything." And while I mean to preach faith and repentance, more and more to preach them, I do not mean to spend any time in chasing the Hittites and Jebusites and Gergashites of Bible times when there are so many evils right around us destroying men and women for time and for eternity. The greatest evangelistic preacher the world ever saw, a man who died for his evangelism—peerless Paul—wrote to the Romans, "Provide things honest in the sight of all men;" wrote to the Corinthians, "Do that which is honest;" wrote to the Philippians, "Whatsoever things are honest;" wrote to the Hebrews, "Will-ing in all things to live honestly." The Bible says that faith without works is dead, which, being liberally translated, means that if your business life does not correspond with your profession your religion is a humbug.

Here is something that needs to be sounded into the ears of all the young men of America, and iterated and reiterated, if this country is ever to be delivered from its calamities and commercial prosperity is to be established and perpetuated: Live within your means. Spend no more than you make. And let us adjust all our business and our homes by the principles of the Christian religion. Our religion ought to mean just as much on Saturday and Monday as on the day between, and not to be a mere periphrasis of sanctity. Our religion ought to first clean our hearts, and then it ought to clean our lives. Religion is not, as some seem to think, a sort of church decoration, a kind of confectionery, a sort of spiritual caramel, or holy gumdrop, or sanctified peppermint, or theological anesthetic. It is an omnipotent principle, all controlling, all conquering. You may get along with something less than that, and you may deceive yourself with it, but you cannot deceive God, and you cannot deceive the world. The keen business man will put on his spectacles, and he will look clear through to the back of your head and see whether your religion is a fiction or a fact. And you cannot hide your samples of sugar, or rice, or tea, or coffee if they are false, you cannot hide them under the cloth of a communion table. All your prayers go for nothing so long as you misrepresent your banking institution, and in the report of the resources you put down more specie, and more fractional currency, and more clearing house certificates, and more legal tender notes, and more loans and more discounts than there really are, and when you give an account of your liabilities you do not mention all the unpaid dividends and the United States bank notes outstanding, and the individual deposits and the obligations to other banks and bankers. An authority more scrutinizing than that of any bank examiner will go through and through and through your business.

Care For Others' Property.

Gathered in all religious assemblages there are many who have trust funds. It is a compliment to you that you have been so intrusted, but I charge you, in the presence of God and the world, be as careful of the property of others as you are careful of your own. Above all, keep your own private account at the bank separate from your account as trustee of an estate or trustee of an institution. That is the point at which thousands of people make shipwreck. They get the property of others mixed up with their own property; they put it into investment, and away it all goes, and they cannot return that which they borrowed. Then comes the explosion, and the money market is shaken, and the press denounces, and the church thunders expulsion. You have no right to use the property of others, except for their advantage, nor without consent, unless they are minors. If with their consent you invest their property as well as you can and it is all lost, you are not to blame. You did the best you could. But do not come into the delusion which has ruined so many men of thinking because a thing is in their possession therefore it is theirs. You have a solemn trust that God has given you. In any assemblage there may be some who have misappropriated trust funds. Put them back, or if you have so hopelessly involved them that you cannot put them back confess the whole thing to those whom you have wronged and you will sleep better nights and you will have the better chance for your soul. What a sad thing it would be if after you are dead your administrator should find out from the account books or from the lack of vouchers that you are not only bankrupt in estate, but that you lost your soul! If all the trust funds that have been misappropriated should suddenly fly to their owners and all the property that has been purloined should suddenly go back to its owners, it would crush into ruin every city in America.

A missionary in one of the islands of the Pacific preached on dishonesty, and the next morning he looked out of his window and he saw his yard full of goods of all kinds. He wondered and asked the cause of all this. "Well," said the natives, "our gods that we have been worshipping permit us to steal; but, according to what you said yesterday, the God of heaven and earth will not allow this. So we bring back all these goods and we ask you to help us in taking them to the places where they belong." If next Sabbath all the ministers in America should preach sermons on the abuse of trust funds and on the evils of purloining, and the sermons were all blessed of God and regulations were made that all these things should be taken to the city halls, it would not be long before every city hall in America would be crowded from cellar to cupola.

Dishonesty Never Pays.

Let me say in the most emphatic manner to all young men, dishonesty will never pay. An abbot wanted to buy a piece of ground and the owner would not sell it, but the owner finally consented to let it to him until he could raise one crop, and the abbot sowed acorns, a crop of 200 years! And I tell you, young man, that the dishonesties which you plant in your heart and life will seem to be very insignificant, but they will grow up until they will overshadow you with horrible darkness, overshadow all time and all eternity. It will not be a crop for 200 years, but a crop for everlasting ages.

I have also a word of comfort for all who suffer from the malfeasance of others, and every honest man, woman and child does suffer from what goes on in financial scampdom. Society is so bound together that all the misfortunes which good people suffer in business matters come from the misdeeds of others. Bear up under distress, strong in God. He will see you through, though your misfortunes should be centupled. Scientists tell us that a column of air 45 miles in height rests on every man's head and shoulders. But that is nothing compared with the pressure that business life has put upon many of you. God made up his mind long ago how many or how few dollars it would be best for you to have. Trust to his appointment. The door will soon open to let you out and let you up. What shock of delight for men who for 30 years have been in business anxiety when they shall suddenly awake in everlasting holiday! On the maps of the arctic regions there are two places whose names are remarkable, given, I suppose, by some polar expedition—Cape Farewell and Thank God harbor. At this last the Polaris wintered in 1871 and the Tigress in 1873. Some ships have passed the cape, yet never reached the harbor. But from what I know of many of you I have concluded that, though your voyage of life may be very rough, run into by icebergs on this side and icebergs on that, you will in due time reach Cape Farewell, and there bid goodby to all annoyances, and soon after drop anchor in the calm and imperturbable waters of Thank God harbor. "There the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest."

The Chinaman's "Roll."

Of all the men who make their way about on the streets or in the street cars in this frosty weather, John Chinaman is the most comfortably clad, and, therefore, the most comfortable. He does not look it, but the Chinaman has the knack of getting a lot of warm quilted clothing next to his yellow skin. His blouse is, of course, of heavy material, and the thick soles of his odd shoes keep his feet warm.

Neither does John have to fidget around and unbutton his clothing, exposing himself to the cold blasts that blow through the street car, to fish out his nickel for fare. Before he leaves home he sticks a nickel in his ear—right handy to reach when the conductor comes around.

In just what part of his odd clothing John carries his money is a problem not even the long and the short men have been able to solve. The average Chinaman carries a bundle "big enough to choke a horse," as the saying is, but, though often tried, no hold up man has ever prospected successfully for the roll in his victim's mysterious wraps, and the average thief would just as soon tackle a guaranteed burglar proof safe as a Chinaman.—Chicago Chronicle.

He Robbed Discourteously.

A letter to the editor which has just appeared in the leading papers of Palermo bears the signature of Candino, the most feared and murderous of Sicilian brigands, and is destined to inform the readers that he has expelled from his band a notorious robber named Galbo, as having been guilty of "discourteous and unmannerly conduct in his dealings with the public." The letter ends with the words "kindest greetings of friendship."—Paris Messenger.

A Chinese Woman Doctor.

Miss Hu King Eng, a young Chinese woman who studied for seven years in the University of Michigan and took the degree of M. D. there, is now in charge of a hospital at Fuchau. Such is her reputation that a coolly wheeled old blind mother 1,000 miles in a wheelbarrow to take her to "the woman doctor." An operation for double cataract was performed, and the woman can now see as well as ever.

THE SUN ALMANAC FOR 1899

"The Sun" Almanac for 1899 presents all those features which have made it heretofore the standard reference book in matters relating to Maryland and national affairs. The year 1898 was a memorable one in the history of the United States because of the war with Spain, and The Sun Almanac gives the most important facts connected with this conflict.

The leading events of the war are described in detail, but concisely, so that the reader is enabled to secure such information as he desires without wading through a mass of verbiage.

Other valuable features of the Almanac are the list of new warships now under construction, a list of the auxiliary vessels purchased for the navy, with the price paid for each, and the names of all the commissioned officers of the army killed or wounded in the different operations of the war.

Among the important events of 1898 not related to the war with Spain which find a place in the Almanac are the reconquest of the Sudan and Kitchener's brilliant victory over the forces of the Mahdi; the loss of the French steamship La Bourgeois, and the steamship Mohegan of the Atlantic Transport Company; the removal of the remains of Christopher Columbus from the Cathedral at Havana; the annexation of Hawaii by the United States, and the action of Congress. These and many other happenings, which made 1898 a year long to be remembered are recorded in the Almanac, and there is also a complete list of the members of the next Congress, as well as of the present, together with the names of all our ambassadors and ministers and the diplomatic representatives of foreign nations in Washington. Altogether The Sun Almanac for 1899 is an exceptionally valuable and interesting publication. The Almanac is a gift from the publishers of The Sun to all who are subscribers at present or who become subscribers before the delivery of the work is completed.

THE PRESIDING ELDERSHIP
AGAIN.

MR. EDITOR:—

Please allow me space to reply to my Brother Deshazo's article in your issue of January 26. If there is a nobler soul on earth I do not know him, and I do not think he meant all those harsh and severe things he wrote about me. He charges me with being uncharitable, and I may have been, but if I were to judge him by his words, he goes away beyond me in the very thing that he condemns. I do not think many people ever thought of me as being unkind or uncharitable, and how could they think of me as being ambitious or envious when for years I have declared that I have had the best places in the Conference? I wish everybody had a good place, and I certainly wish every place had the right sort of man, for I am more concerned for the Church than I am for individuals.

In answering my Brother's article I will have to pass over his exclamation points. They are very difficult things to answer. I will have to skip, too, his lurid rhetoric. Arguments of that kind are beyond my power to meet. I would say also that when I said in my article that "this criticism comes from the truest, bravest, most efficient, most loyal members of our Conference," I did not refer to myself, but to the resolution offered at our last Conference, signed by three as brave soldier preachers as bore arms in the Southern army, supported by others as true and brave.

Let me say that I do not know personally a large number of presiding elders he mentions. Of the most of them, however, I have heard nothing but words of praise as men, preachers, and presiding elders. The things I complained of, I did not say were characteristic of all the presiding elders that even I have known; certainly not all who are now presiding elders, or all who have been since the war.

1. My Brother gets out of patience because I said I had known some presiding elders that I believed were lacking in the grace of liberality. I have known some presiding elders whom I have reason to believe were generous and open hearted. I have known others whom I have no reason to believe at all were generous and open hearted.

And I do not consider a presiding elder liberal who gives fifteen or twenty, or even fifty dollars to church and charities. Many of our preachers give a tenth out of their small salaries, and a tenth out of a six hundred dollar salary is more of a sacrifice than a tenth out of a fifteen hundred dollar salary. If some man will say what business is this of yours, my reply is—none, except for the good of the men and for the glory of my Master's Church. A liberal preacher will have a good influence over the members of his charge. And a liberal presiding elder will have a good influence over his district.

If every presiding elder would preach once a year in each charge on his district a red hot, rousing sermon on missions, and then say "Brethren, I am helping this cause on every charge on this district,—here is five dollars to help it at this Church,"—a mighty impetus would be given the noble cause. A man can have his private charities which are between him and his God, and then there are times when he ought to set an example—show his faith by his works.

The word "wring out," over which Brother Deshazo gets off so much lurid rhetoric, only meant that it was not given until I was asked for. "God loves a TITHEFUL giver."

I have just received a letter from a loyal steward of the Methodist Church, and he has been in the Church, I am sure, as long as I have been in the ministry, and he says that the one dollar which I have seen given is fifty cents more than he has seen given by presiding elders during his connection with the Church.

2. But my Brother gets wrathful because I said inefficient men have filled, and do now fill, the office. I will say that I have heard some very excellent sermons from presiding elders—sermons that edified me—were marrow and fatness to my soul; but I say that it has been my lot to hear a number that were otherwise. And many brethren with whom I mingle tell me that my experience is similar to theirs. Even Brother Deshazo, in his hot haste after me, catches his breath to say: "MOST of the men were acceptable before their elevation to the presiding eldership." That is concession enough. I was speaking of the others. I say that enough of these have gotten in to seriously hurt the office.

What I mean by inefficiency is this: (If Brother Deshazo will let me interpret my own words.) A man whose preaching ability does not measure up to the expectation of the people and the demands of his high office is in my judgment an inefficient man as a presiding elder. So far as executive ability is concerned, about the only display that I have ever seen of that was to sit in the Quarterly Conference and ask the twenty odd questions of the discipline. We preachers who are deficient in preaching ability can make it up in singing and praying and pastoral visiting. If a presiding elder is deficient in pulpit power tell me what will supply the lack?

If Brother Deshazo wants some illustrations of what I mean by inefficiency he may have them.

I sat in a Church one Sunday morning, on the front seat of one corner of the Church, and on the front seat of the opposite corner sat one of the brightest men in our connection. A large crowd was present. Expectation ran high. The presiding elder preached. He was perfectly at ease, so far as I could judge. His words flowed without hindrance. There was not the least indication that he was in the brush. After the service I said to our visiting Brother: "W—what did you think of that?" His reply was: "That was the only sermon I ever heard that from start to finish did not have a thought in it."

I have heard a number of sermons from that presiding elder and the one that Sunday morning nearly touched high-water mark. Brother Deshazo in his zeal may think that that presiding elder efficiently and worthily filled and fills the high office. I do not. And yet I have seen the most complimentary notices of this brother's sermons in the papers. If I must be hung for saying that, then let me hang.

Again, one of our oldest and most experienced educators after hearing one of these presiding elders preach, said to one of our preachers: "Why, sir, he has no grip on his subject at all."

Once more: I asked one of our preachers, who is now at one of our first churches: "Have you heard the presiding elder preach?" and his reply was: "I have heard him try."

Then another one of our purest and best preachers told me that he asked his presiding elder to stay over after Quarterly meeting and help him in a protracted meeting. He consented to do so. When he reached the ground on Saturday, however, he began to beg off. After many entreaties from the preacher he consented to stay over till Monday and HELP IN A REVIVAL MEETING. The preacher told me that he had not been preaching ten minutes before he himself was wishing that he had gone, for he had before him some old notes that were so creased that as he preached, stooping over them, he could scarcely read them. Brother Deshazo says that preacher worthily and efficiently filled the office. I say he did not. I could give many more instances of what I mean but these must suffice for the present. It may be that my views as to what kind of preaching ought to be expected of a presiding elder are wrong, but they are my views nevertheless.

3. Now with reference to favoritism being practiced by some of the presiding elders, I say that I believe it, and I know that others believe it, but it is one of those things we cannot prove, and therefore it may not be wise to charge it, and while I firmly believe it, and our experience at the last Conference shows that others do also, as I cannot prove it, I withdraw that part of my previous article.

4. But Brother Deshazo's indignation hardly knows any bounds when he comes to the travelling expenses of the presiding elders. He has certainly discovered a new element in old Virginia hospitality. According to his idea of hospitality a Church ought to send twenty miles for a presiding elder, bring him to Church, send him twenty miles further to another appointment on an adjoining circuit, and put him on somebody to carry twenty miles further. Brother Deshazo thinks that this ought to be done cheerfully in order to be hospitable. I am a great mind to put in some exclamation points for effect. I will say that if Brother Deshazo's idea of hospitality be correct, then I have never tasted the genuine article. I thought all along that I had exceedingly hospitable people, but I have been mistaken, for I have always carried myself in my own buggy, pulled by my own horse, when I visited them. I am certain that my noble hearted people do not know what the genuine article is, for their long-suffering has reached its limits. Men may jump on me with both feet because I am trying to protect the people from a manifest injustice. But they will never hush me. I am just saying what thousands of others have been thinking and talking. The brethren had just as well know that the people have gotten tired. A number of years ago I heard a delegate to the Virginia Conference say that he wanted to be elected to the General Conference to have this question put in the discipline: "Who will go after the presiding elder?" And all those words my Brother puts in that last, long paragraph about blacking shoes, etc., had just as well been left out. They were not worth the printers' ink. The question on its merits is this and nothing more: OUGHT THE PRESIDING ELDER, AS WELL AS THE PREACHER IN CHARGE, TO PAY ALL HIS TRAVELLING EXPENSES and not add an extra expense to the people? I say he ought. So say the people, though they will carry him if he does not provide a way of his own. So said those noble Romans, E. M. Peterson and L. S. Reed, who kept each one his own horse and buggy. But Brother Deshazo thinks that I ought to have corrected those things privately. In reply let me say (1) I did try in a measure. I wrote a most kind and brotherly letter to one of my presiding elders on a delicate subject, trying to save him from embarrassment. I had always treated him with the greatest kindness and courtesy. What effect did it have? Not only did I receive no thanks for my attempt, but my letter was not even answered, and in addition, without writing one line to me, he sent copies of my letter to several of my members, which action might have done me harm, had not the sentiment of the people coincided with my own on the matter in question. (2) Brother Deshazo, how am I going to help a presiding elder who cannot preach? I am not a professor of Homiletics. The only remedy that I know of is to call the attention of those who put him in the office and ask them not to repeat the blunder. (3) And, Brother Deshazo, a man who fills such an office as that of the presiding eldership ought to be able to see some things that are as plain as the nose on a man's face,—for instance, some of those who are now occupying the office ought to know that a majority of the Virginia Conference think that they ought to have retired at the last Conference. Will Brother Deshazo kindly speak to them in private and let them know? It would surely be a very brotherly act. I confess that I have not the grace to do so. If Brother Deshazo will try it, I expect he will be treated as I was.

When I wrote that article I did not for a moment think of Brother Deshazo. If others had staid in the office no longer than he did, had been as acceptable to the people as he was before and after his elevation to the presiding eldership, I am sure some of my first article could not have been written. That he efficiently and worthily fills his place in the Church a glance at the noble report that he made to the last Conference will demonstrate.

But the presiding eldership has become unpopular—very, and I am sure that I do not make any mistake when I say that one of the chief reasons is, that as filled and administered in our Conference it is a sinecure—an office with a good salary and comparatively little labor. (That the salary is a good one, far above the average, a glance at the minutes will show.)

About the only capital required to fill this office, except at the Conference session, is a few ministers' R. R. cards, a grip sack, some postal cards on which to write "please meet me," and about three dozen sermons which may be good, better, best, or poor, poorer, poorest. This capital will keep a presiding elder going for twenty cents and more. Railroads grip sacks and postal cards are good things for the world, but they have been a positive injury to the presiding eldership. It is known that very little work of preparing new sermons and of making pastoral visits is done by presiding elders, and it is this sort of work that really tries and exhausts the preacher. The hundred or more times the presiding elder stands in the pulpit and preaches during the year is about the sum of his labors and this is the easiest part of the minister's work. What is the remedy? This: Let them stop travelling railroads and talking to people on trains, and own a horse and buggy,—travel their districts, become acquainted with the people, endear themselves to them by mingling with them and praying with them in their families. If it be said that this cannot be expected of them, that such labor is too arduous, and that it would require too much absence from home, I would reply by citing some examples of what I mean. The best comparative illustrations will be the work of men who also are engaged in other occupations, which require them to spend days and nights on the road, and to be absent frequently from home.

In sight of my home is the home of a country physician. He relieves suffering humanity as far as he can, and makes out of his occupation a competency for his family. His income is not larger, I am sure, than the average salary of a presiding elder. He rarely spends a whole day at home. He has to go all hours of the night. He braves all sorts of weather. There are several days and nights together when he does not see home. In his busiest times, I am certain, he can hardly take off his clothes when he sleeps.

I am considered a good pastor, Neither the rich nor the poor find any fault with me, I reckon, on the score of neglecting my pastoral work. I am sometimes away from home three and four days at the time visiting my people, not making social calls. I reach home with my nerve force exhausted, and yet the labors of that physician make me ashamed of myself that I do so little. Why Brother Kilby, this physician, would consider the office of presiding elder not only a picnic but an earthly paradise.

I have it from the most careful collector of facts in my knowledge that a presiding elder so arranged his appointments in a large city that he had six or seven weeks off in the Spring. These he spent in the mountains fishing and in other forms of vacation. He came back to the preacher's meeting, preached a sermon and told them that he had not heard a sermon while he was gone. I am certain that this country physician, who has only the care of men's bodies, never had even a vision of such pastime.

Again, I see the commercial men in their buggies driving through the mud of winter, sweltering in the heat of summer along our public roads, travelling over as much territory as a presiding elder, seeking every country store, taking such fare as they can get, often turned down by impatient merchants, away from home nearly all the time and living on a salary not so large as a presiding elder's. If we put the toils, the sacrifices and disappointments of these men by the side of the labors of a modern railroad presiding elder the angels will blush.

Again, I call to mind our brethren who are engaged in the educational work of the Church. I know one of them who has charge of one of the largest schools in our State, and has the management of all its departments. He also has a regular monthly appointment. He travels in the prosecution of his school work (in his own vehicle by the way) over a territory as large as that embraced in that of any two districts in the Conference. I am confident that he knows every thoroughfare and by-road in this territory and that he could pass over the most of them any night without moonlight. I know that he frequently drives nearly all night, covering in his circuits from one to three hundred miles, and this he does not only in the summer but all the year round. I am confident that he knows more people by name and has visited more homes in this territory than any presiding elder in our Conference. I am confident that he has preached in nearly every Methodist Church in this territory—in most of them several times. If such labor is not too great for our workers in the educational department of the Church, can it be considered too great for presiding elders, and ought not our presiding elders to be doing such work, and if they say that they are not able to do it, ought we not to have elders who are able?

Above all, when we see our Lord with nowhere to lay his head, tramping through inhospitable Samaria, sweltering under the Syrian sun, sitting on Jacob's well, hungry, thirsty, weary, and yet forgetting his hunger and thirst and weariness in his anxiety to save a sinful woman; when we see Him eating with sinners, curing lepers, healing the sick, going to the house of mourning, and then look around on those in the high offices of our Church today and see how little suffering and self-sacrifice they seem to endure for the Master's cause, and how little of their time is given to hand-to-hand conflict with sin, and to services for the direct salvation of sinners, one turns again in bewilderment to the New Testament to see whether the Master and His apostles, Peter and Paul, really did strive for the salvation of sinners, and whether they endured toil and hardship and travel if by any means they might save some soul.

Our presiding elders stand on the Conference floor and give reports of their districts. They tell of churches and parsonages built and repaired, of souls converted, of improvements along all lines. The faithful preachers that have done the work and borne the heat and burden of the day listen in silence and smile to themselves. I suggest that at the next session of Conference they make this addition to their report which can be made with the utmost truthfulness: "During the year, on my district, there was a total eclipse of the moon." I am sure some of them have as much to do with an eclipse of the moon as with the conversions of souls and improvements on their district.

I earnestly believe that we will have to adopt Brother Kilby's suggestion—cut down the salaries of the office so low that nobody but a hero will have them, or disconnect the presiding elder's salary from the preacher's, and let his salary rest on his own merits and labors. May be they would then buy a horse and buggy, learn the public and private roads on their districts and put to shame our doctors and drummers and educators by the abundance of their labors.

Something must be done to relieve matters. They are getting worse continually. The only object I have had in writing is to see if by a discussion of the matter a remedy cannot be found.

If anybody replies to this he can call me all the names he pleases, but please do not answer with exclamation points and rhetoric.

I did not sign my name to my first article because I simply desired to give my observations in a general way and thought that to sign my name would render my article more personal than I desired to make it, but inasmuch as my motive for withholding my name has been misunderstood, and these brethren seem so anxious to know it, I shall sign my name to this article with my own hand. My brethren have known me as a quiet, peace-loving man that has had nothing to do with controversies, but I have looked on until I thought it was time to speak on these things and give the results of my observations without regard to persons.

JOHN O. MOSS.

OR

TWENTY-YEAR PASTOR.

HOLLYDALE, VA.

P. S. Brother Deshazo said in his article "Let my Brother," Twenty Year Pastor, "take the Lord's candle and go down into the labyrinthine windings of his heart and make diligent search; if he doesn't find a 'root of bitterness' and wounded ambition and envy of presiding elders as big as the elder he is willing to hang on such insufficient testimony, then I will ask all pardon for this conclusion as soon as he takes off his mask and discloses his real identity." I have tried my best to do so, and I have found none of these things of which he speaks, and I would further inform him that the evidence he speaks of was neither "hearsay" or "unreliable."

TWENTY-YEAR PASTOR.

(REV. R. H. MULLEN.)

MR. EDITOR:—

With many others I can truly say I admire independent journalism. But independent journalism does not mean unlicensed or unrestricted journalism. The fact is, the more independence exercised the more necessary it becomes for an editor or publisher to scrutinize with care whatever is offered for publication; because, if he is not responsible for the sentiments or style of the communication, he is responsible for their publicity. I may not be responsible for a slanderous or damaging report some one person makes of another, but when I make myself the vehicle through which the slanderous report is circulated, I become in part responsible, and as the law says, particeps criminis.

If you will apply this rule to that remarkable production of "Twenty Years a Pastor" you will then, like this writer, be sorry it found a place in your columns. Indeed it is a pity that it ever found a place in so fertile a brain and emanated from so facile a pen as he seems to use. What on the earth is the matter with this pastor? Is he like Paul, troubled with defective or sore eyes, so that he has to wear green spectacles, and the things he sees take on that hue? Or has the green-eyed monster, jealousy, gotten hold of him? Something dreadful must be the matter with him to cause him to write as he did in your issue of the 12th inst., on the Presiding Eldership. Hear him: "One of the complaints that I hear on almost every hand, and one that I make, is that the office is largely filled by inefficient men. * * The majority could not sustain themselves in the pastorate before they were appointed to the office, and they could not sustain themselves if they were put back in the pastorate. * * The same dry-as-dust sermons which he gave to the people when he was preacher in charge he unloads on the preachers and people when he gets to be presiding elder." And in paragraph 2, he goes for the preachers who show courtesy to the presiding elders, as well as for the elders themselves.

Now, Mr. Editor, I am sorry "Twenty-Year Pastor" wrote and published that article for several reasons.

First, it appears to me to be too uncharitable and unkind for a preacher to write about his brethren. Certainly I have read no more uncharitable and unbrotherly assault upon the brethren in the eldership than the article referred to, not even Brother Hobday's article which he so manly retracted when made to see it through another's eyes. To say nothing of the other part, if there is a kind, or brotherly, or Christian sentence in paragraph No. 2 I have failed to discover it. "Twenty-Year Pastor" seems to have forgotten that the law of love makes us brethren, but such wranglings as his will make us ravening wolves.

Second, such articles cannot be productive of any good. If they have any influence it will be with the "few fellows of the baser sort," who will seize upon it to disparage the ministry generally, and belittle the Church. The fact is, if we have much more of this sort the rear will be that many good ones will not only lose respect for the office of elder, but will lose respect for the entire Methodist Church, South.

Third, I am sorry because there is so much in it that is not true. I do not wish to be offensive—far from that, because that would bar the door against any approach to his heart, and I would be guilty of what I condemn in my brother. But in all kindness, I say to him there are many things he says which, strictly speaking, are not true. The majority of the elders are not inefficient preachers. It has been my privilege to serve on districts presided over by Rev. L. M. Lee, D. D.; Revs. D. P. Wilks, E. P. Wilson, F. J. Boggs, Jas. O. Moss, Jas. C. Reed, and Drs. Garland, Rosser, and Brown, and my present presiding elder is Rev. J. R. Kiddick, whose ministry is to education and whose presence in the home is a benediction. Whatever objection is to be urged against Dr. Whitehead, no one can say he is inefficient in his ministry and that he thrashes old straw to give dry-as-dust sermons. Certainly Dr. Brown has lost vigor wonderfully of late if the same is true of him. Dr.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON VIII, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, FEB. 19.

Text of the Lesson, John vi, 1-14.
Memory Verses, 9-11—Golden Text,
John vi, 35—Commentary Prepared
by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1898, by D. M. Stearns.]

1, 2. "A great multitude followed Him because they saw His miracles which He did on them that were diseased." The true disciples followed Him because they believed Him to be the Messiah, Israel's deliverer and King, but the majority of people saw no beauty in Him; they only saw a wonder working man who could heal them when they were sick or feed them when hungry. He had crossed the sea, perhaps to be more alone with His Father, for He was so misunderstood by men, even by His disciples, but His Father understood Him perfectly. The multitudes, however, would not let Him alone, their needs were so many and He was so able to meet them.

3, 4. "And Jesus went up into a mountain, and there He sat with His disciples, and the Passover, a feast of the Jews, was nigh." The Passover was a feast of the Lord, but it had become a mere feast of the Jews, anything but an honor to God. To Him all was very real; the animals slain by His own hand to provide coats of skins for Adam and Eve (Gen. iii, 21); the lambs by whose blood the firstborn were saved in Egypt; the sacrifice He was soon to offer of Himself—all were to Him very, very real, but to them a religious ceremony, a weary form.

5. "When Jesus then lifted up His eyes and saw a great company come unto Him, He saith unto Philip, Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat?" He was full of compassion for the multitudes, who were as sheep without a shepherd. As to their spiritual condition, their teachers, the scribes and Pharisees, would neither enter the kingdom themselves nor suffer others to enter. Whatever religious rites they performed the object was to be seen of men (Math. xxiii, 5, 13).

6. "And this He said to prove him, for He Himself knew what He would do." Man's thoughts and ways are very earthly. The Lord needs none of them. His are as far above ours as heaven is higher than the earth (Isa. lv, 9). He intends to fill this earth with His glory, and He knows just how He will do it. It was all plain to Him from the beginning. He will complete His body, the church. He will make Israel all righteous. He will subdue all things unto Himself, and He will let us be partners with Him in His kingdom and in all things tending to it, but He needs no suggestions from us as to how it shall be done.

7. "Philip answered Him, Two hundred pennyworth of bread is not sufficient for them that every one of them may take a little." Therefore the matter of feeding them was wholly out of the question, the money necessary was not to be had, and if they had the money where was the bread to be found? So to Philip's mind the idea was simply preposterous. He did not know his Lord, nor did he know Him even up to the night before He was crucified (John xiv, 9).

8, 9. "One of His disciples, Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, saith unto Him, There is a lad here which hath five barley loaves and two small fishes, but what are they among so many?" We look around and find that we have just so much, just the veriest trifle of what is necessary for the work, so little that it is not worth considering, and so we, like Andrew, feel that it is folly to think of it. These things are written for our instruction. May we learn from them and from other Scriptures to have faith in God, to dwell with the King for His work (1 Chron. iv, 23), sure that what the King purposes He is able to carry out. All power in heaven and on earth is His.

10. "And Jesus said, Make the men sit down. Now, there was much grass in the place. So the men sat down, in number about 5,000." All suggestions, encouraging or discouraging, are now ended. The Lord, who knew just what He would do, takes the matter in hand and begins to work. He is the author and finisher of every good work. He is the only Creator, the only Redeemer, there is none but He, and none like Him. He says, I will work, and who shall let it or turn it back? (Isa. xlii, 13). All the disciples have now to do is simply to watch Him and obey His orders. He fed millions for 40 years. He gave them flesh to the full without killing a single ox or sheep.

11. "And Jesus took the loaves, and when He had given thanks He distributed to the disciples, and the disciples to them that were set down, and likewise of the fishes, as much as they would." He might have rained bread from heaven as He did in the wilderness, but He took what was at hand, and looking to His Father that He might work He multiplied it, as He did the oil and meal for the prophet and those with whom He lodged, and the oil for the widow that her debt might be paid (1 Kings, xi, 14; 11 Kings iv, 7).

12. "When they were filled, He said unto His disciples, Gather up the fragments that remain that nothing be lost." While He provides abundantly He will have nothing wasted. Filled and overflowing but all to His glory, and that many may be benefited. An abundance of wine at the feast in Cana and much over, an abundance to eat on this occasion and much to spare, but nothing wasted, nothing lost. Whatever He gives us is that He may be glorified. How sad when He has to say "the God in whose hand thy breath is and whose are all thy ways hast thou not glorified" (Dan. v, 23). When He perceives in us a real desire to glorify Him, we shall be abundantly filled.

13. "Therefore they gathered them together and filled 12 baskets with the fragments of the five barley loaves which remained over and above unto them that had eaten." People filled and baskets filled, and He did it all without any help from man. How wonderfully He used the lad and his loaves. Years ago I prayed that I might be like one of those loaves, fully in His hands, to be blessed and broken, and as I go from city to city, from day to day and from week to week, I think how wonderfully He has answered my prayer.

14. "Then those men, when they had seen the miracle that Jesus did, said, This is of a truth that prophet that should come into the world." So they would take Him by force and make Him a king, but He, having sent His disciples away by boat, departed alone to a mountain. The wind blew, the sea rose, and He did not come until the morning watch. Then He came walking on the sea, and as soon as they received Him into the ship she was at the land. The people still sought Him, but only because He had fed them.

LESSON VII, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, FEB. 12.

Text of the Lesson, John v, 17-27.
Memory Verses, 24-27—Golden Text,
John iv, 42—Commentary Prepared
by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1898, by D. M. Stearns.]

17. "But Jesus answered them, My Father worketh hitherto and I work." Because He had healed the impotent man at Bethesda on the Sabbath day they persecuted Him and sought to kill Him. Dr. Weston says that their Sabbath day was to them their national banner, and it was not well for any one who would dare break their laws concerning it. God's Sabbaths and feasts which He instituted had become the Jews' Sabbaths and feasts, and instead of observing His laws concerning them they had multiplied traditions of their own, thus making the commandment of God of none effect by their tradition (Math. xv, 3, 6).

18. "Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill Him, because He not only had broken the Sabbath, but said also that God was His Father, making Himself equal with God." On another occasion they were going to stone Him because, as they said, He, being a man, made Himself God (John x, 33). What spectacle is this, the Creator hated by the creature, stick-kers for the Sabbath day seeking to kill the Lord of the Sabbath! Yet such is religion that is not of God.

19. "Then answered Jesus and said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, The Son can do nothing of Himself but what He seeth the Father do, for what things soever He doeth these also doeth the Son likewise." Their unbelief and opposition did not and could not alter the facts in the case, so without argument He quietly went on with His teaching. When one is right, the only thing to do is to keep right on saying and doing right, sure that they who war against us shall be as nothing and as a thing of naught (Isa. xli, 12).

20. "For the Father loveth the Son and showeth Him all things that Himself doeth, and He will show Him greater works than these that ye may marvel." In chapter iii, 35, "The Father loveth the Son and hath given all things into His hand." In chapter x, 30, "I and My Father are one." In chapter xiv, 9, 10, "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father; I am in the Father and the Father in Me." In chapter xv, 9, we read, "As the Father hath loved Me so have I loved you," and in xvii, 23, that the Father loves us as He loves the Son. We wonder at the manifestation of God in Christ, but what shall we say when we read that it is His pleasure that Christ should be manifest in us? (Gal. ii, 20; 11 Cor. iv, 11.)

21. "For as the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom He will." In the following verses this is explained as referring not only to those who are dead in sin, living in pleasure unto themselves (Eph. ii, 1; 1 Tim. v, 6), but also to those whose bodies are dead in the grave. In verses 28, 29, we read that all that are in the graves shall hear His voice and shall come forth either unto life or damnation.

22. "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son." He hath appointed a day in the which He will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom He hath ordained, whereof He hath given assurance unto all men in that He hath raised Him from the dead (Acts xvii, 31). One day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day (11 Pet. iii, 8). At the beginning of the day shall be the judgment of the righteous, and also of the living nations, and at the end of the day that of the unrighteous.

23. "That all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father which hath sent Him." He will be honored by all kings and all nations, and to Him every knee shall bow (Ps. lxxii, 11; Phil. ii, 9, 10). A day is coming in which every high thing shall be brought down, and the Lord alone exalted (Isa. ii, 11, 17). He is the only Saviour of sinners (Acts iv, 12), the only Judge as we saw in the last verse, and He will be the only Ruler, for He must reign till He hath put all things under His feet (1 Cor. xv, 25).

24. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth My word and believeth on Him that sent Me hath everlasting life and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life." Here is the way of life, described in chapter i, 12, as receiving Him, in chapter iii, 16, as believing on Him, and here as hearing His word and believing on Him. This verse was blessed to my soul in the summer of 1873 with a blessing that has lasted ever since and will to all eternity. It was somewhat like this: Do you hear the word of God and believe that Jesus died for you and rose again, and do you receive Him as your Saviour? I do. Then you have everlasting life. No, I cannot feel that I have. What does God say? He says that I have. Is His word sufficient? I would like to feel it. Will you take Him at His word or make Him a liar? (John v, 16) I will believe God.

25. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live." This hour has already lasted over 1,800 years and is still on. The dead in trespasses and sins are hearing the word of God, and receiving it and life in it, or rather in Him who is the Word and the Life. Faith cometh by hearing the word of God. I had been hearing it from my childhood, and before 1865 I had been received into church membership and was regular in my attendance upon ordinances and outwardly consistent, but until the time and the experience mentioned in the last verse I did not know that I had passed from death to life.

26. "For as the Father hath life in Himself, so hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself." He is the Life. He that hath the Son of God hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life (John xiv, 6; 1 John v, 12). We can neither earn nor in any way deserve the life, for it is the gift of God (Rom. vi, 23). But whosoever will may receive the Bread of Life, the Water of Life, the Life itself, and even Christ Himself, and in Him find a life begun here, consummated at the resurrection and enjoyed through all eternity. We must come as empty and helpless as the impotent man at Bethesda; then all is ours.

27. "And hath given Him authority to execute judgment also, because He is the Son of Man." In the final day of judgment all men shall come forth from the grave and be judged. And all those who have done good shall see the resurrection of life and those who have done evil the resurrection of damnation.

A Good Lesson For the Navy.

It has been said that Commodore Dewey sought to obtain the command of the Asiatic station because he foresaw the opportunity that was to come to him. In one sense this is true. Dewey has always been a man of action, a natural fighter. That he went gladly to the East Indies command, when at least two other flag officers could have had it if they had wanted it, and that he preferred taking service afloat to any kind of comfortable duty on shore, is true. But it was the seaman's instinct that led him rather than any prophetic power. There were several questions of grave importance likely to come before the country, and Commodore Dewey knew that the man in command at sea is the man who is in a position to make opportunities for himself, while the men who cling to easy billets ashore must—when warclouds threaten—stand around and wait for chances to come to them.

It was no mere chance that put George Dewey in command in the east. It was the logical working out of the principles of a lifetime. The men who had always had sufficient influence to keep them in time of peace in easy places in New York and Washington, while others did the hard work of the service at sea, discovered that all their influence could not give them the places of danger and of honor in time of war. It was a good lesson for the navy, and it should be remembered by every young officer.—Joseph L. Stickney in Harper's Magazine Extraordinary Holdings of Gold.

The director of the mint is authority for the statement that the United States now holds $910,000,000 in gold. This is an estimate, of course; for there are no data available to determine the amount held by depositories other than the United States treasury and sub-treasuries, the assay offices, the clearing houses and the national banks, and the holdings of these do not by a very considerable percentage reach the total indicated. Assuming that the estimate is approximately correct, however, the gold in the United States would by far exceed the amount held here at any time heretofore.

The largest sum of gold held in the United States in any previous year, according to the mint estimates, was $705,818,855, in 1888. The stock of the precious metal held in the principal countries of Europe, in Australasia and in the United States in 1873 was $1,209,800,000. According to the director of the mint, the present stock of gold is $3,780,000,000—which is more by $1,500,000,000 than the total stock of both gold and silver in the same countries in 1873.—Exchange.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction. REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teacher's Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Practice School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent or Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

THE CANNON-WHITEHEAD COMMITTEE REPORT.

sure with admonitory advice for the time to come, after the administration of which medicine—not drastic, we allow, yet physic, after all, and not suga- plums—the committee, in item "3," recommended that his character pass.

PAUL WHITEHEAD.

Richmond, Va., Dec. 6th, 1898.

To the above I sent the following reply on January 5th:

THE CANNON-WHITEHEAD MATTER.

To the Editor of The Landmark:—A friend has sent me a copy of The Landmark of December 8th, containing Dr. Whitehead's article. It had escaped my notice. Even since reading the article I have delayed replying, because I did not wish to say anything unless absolutely necessary. Finding, however, that my silence has been misunderstood, and that a wrong interpretation is being placed upon it, I feel constrained to reply.

I was greatly surprised at the spirit and substance of the article. My note of November the 24th was written because of the mistake of Brother Butts in his publication of the report of the committee. I tried to give my reasons for the correction of this report, by showing that his rendering was exactly opposite to what the committee meant. I stated what I thought they meant, and then asked for the publication of the report, in order that the readers of The Landmark might judge for themselves. I did not insist that anyone should accept my interpretation of the report. I gave my interpretation of it as a reason why it ought to be published in the exact language used by the committee. If my interpretation of the report was incorrect, the readers of The Landmark could compare it with the report and form their own conclusions. I had not thought of stirring up a controversy as to the meaning of the report, but simply to point out the mistake and to give sufficient reason for asking for the correct report. If in so doing I had fallen into gross inaccuracy, the report followed immediately afterward, and contained the antidote for the poison.

As Dr. Whitehead has seen fit to give my note a prominence which it would not have had otherwise, and has thought it necessary to try to refute my interpretation of the finding of the committee (although my note was published side by side with the exact wording of the report, and the public could easily read all the items and see what language was in the report and reject my interpretation, if it was incorrect); inasmuch, I say, as he has seen fit to do this, he has compelled me to give the circumstances under which my note was written, which circumstances I did not give in the note, as I was not then trying to argue for any particular interpretation of the report, but for my right to have the exact wording of the report published.

My note was written on the Norfolk & Western train the morning after Conference adjourned. Brother Butts (the reporter of The Landmark) and three members of the committee were on the train. While on the train I read The Landmark's report and also read a press dispatch which appeared in the Washington Post and the Richmond Dispatch of that morning, which dispatch used the following language in reference to the report: "The element of censure is apparent in the report, and the remarks are adjudged to be ill-timed and in bad form, but the editor-preacher is not found guilty of un-Christian conduct." I immediately carried this report to the members of the committee on the train and asked whether that was their interpretation of their report; that if so, I had misunderstood it, as I had not taken the report as censuring my conduct, but as advice. The members of the committee stated plainly that the printed interpretation of the report was incorrect. They said that it was distinctly understood and stated, before the report was signed by the members of the committee, that there was no censure expressed or implied upon the conduct of Brother Cannon.

I therefore wrote in my card to The Landmark: "I am entirely satisfied with the report of the committee in the exact language which they used (which does not even censure me, but advises me not to use such strong and uncompromising language in defense of my views)." I considered the report in The Landmark a grave injustice to me, but before sending my note I found out from the ones most likely to know—the members of the committee—what they understood their report to mean, and then, without referring to the committee in my note, I stated as a reason why the full report should be published that it did not censure me, but simply advised me. Dr. Whitehead says it censure me, and calls it medicine and physic. I understood it to be simply advice, and not censure or medicine, and the committee stated to me that it was distinctly agreed in the committee room, before the report was signed, that there was no censure expressed or implied upon my conduct. If Dr. Whitehead is better satisfied to interpret the report as a censure upon my conduct, I have no objection to his so doing.

The report is now the action of the Conference, and every man can dissect it and interpret it to suit himself. My object now is to show that I did not publish my interpretation of the report in my card in The Landmark (which interpretation Dr. Whitehead has criticised and rejected in his article) until I understood what interpretation the committee itself placed upon its own report; for, as the committee heard all the testimony, and knew what it meant to say, I was more interested in their interpretation than in that of any one else. Knowing what they said they meant, I shall not be troubled by Dr. Whitehead's attempt to prescribe for me a dose of medicine which he has fortunately no power to make me take. At one time I thought that a note should be given to the secular press contradicting the erroneous interpretation of the committee's report, and later on that I would make a statement in the Recorder, but I finally concluded that as I had made the correction in The Landmark, I would refrain from any reference which might seem to imply a disposition to perpetuate a matter passed upon by the Conference.

Dr. Whitehead's article has, however, left me no choice in the matter, and it has become absolutely necessary to show that my note was not based upon my view alone, but that it was written with the knowledge that the committee did not mean to censure me in their report, but to advise me.

I think, therefore, I have made it clear that the purpose of my note was not to stir up a controversy, but to give a reason for the publication of the exact words of the report, and that I did not write my note in order to produce a false impression on the public mind, but I stated that the report did not censure me after knowing what the committee meant, although I did not think it best to say so in my note.

So much in general for the interpretation of the committee's report as to whether it was censure upon my conduct or not, this being to my mind the main issue involved. Dr. Whitehead may continue to think as he pleases on that matter and I shall do the same.

Dr. Whitehead in his article has seen fit to make statements about some matters which cannot be passed upon on the basis of the public records in the case, but which involved what happened in the committee room. I do not think it necessary to discuss these questions now. In fact, should I discuss them at all, I should do so fully, and I do not now see sufficient reason for that course. But if forced to do so, I shall not hesitate, but shall give a plain, unvarnished tale of what did happen there.

I thank you, Mr. Editor, for the use of your columns to make this necessarily lengthy reply. If occasion should arise in the future for further extended statements, I shall probably make them through the columns of the METHODIST RECORDER.

JAMES CANNON, JR.

Blackstone, Va., January 5th, 1898.

To the above letter Dr. Whitehead sent the following reply on Jan. 14th:

THE CANNON COMMITTEE FINDING.

To the Editor of The Landmark:—I see by your issue of January the 7th that Rev. Mr. Cannon has labored through a column to dissipate that "element of censure" which the common sense of the press dispatch people saw in the committee's report.

The two instances of being "grossly inaccurate," which I pointed out, he signally failed to relieve. On one he virtually confesses judgment by omitting distinct allusion to it. The other he endeavors to bolster by the statement (reported by himself) of three of the nine committeemen, which fraction he several times terms "the committee."

Such a statement was improper in itself, and is of no more force than the statement of one man of a board of arbitration consisting of three referees, as to what the whole board meant by an award signed by all.

When the committee made their report in writing and the Conference adopted it and adjourned November 23d, the committee was functus officio, and neither one nor three of its members, nor all of them together, have the least right to say a word as to the intent and meaning of the report or any circumstance of its adoption. To do so is a manifest impropriety.

Had any such "understanding" as Mr. Cannon alleges been attached to the report, its adoption would have been opposed in Conference and possibly defeated.

Mr. Cannon had no occasion, in his card of November 24th, to say anything except to object to Mr. Butts' confessedly incorrect report and to ask for the publication of the correct paper. He went a bow-shot beyond this by tinging into the mouth of the committee (by use of quotation marks) "they never said or intended to say," by claiming, against modesty and propriety, to interpret the finding as a "advice" to him. As he admits made no allusion to the talk with fragment of the committee. It is this that called forth my reply of December 5th.

Should he discuss the matter in Recorder, his personal property month-piece, he will have the fight himself; but I trust for the peace of Conference that he will heed the "vice" of the committee, which he recognizes as "brotherly."

Begging pardon of your readers yourself for the necessity of further allusion to the matter, I remain your obliged correspondent.

PAUL WHITEHEAD.

January 14th, 1898.

In reference to the above article have the following remarks to make:

There are many statements in two articles of Dr. Whitehead which would ordinarily take up and consume upon.

For instance:

"Two of the statements made by are GROSSLY INACCURATE."

This was neither "charged" nor by us ANYWHERE or at ANY TIME.

"The committee in item '2' give the benefit of HIS DISCLAIMER a 'intention,' and SO save him from criminal charge and trial therefor."

"On that point they gave him M C I F U L and CHARITABLE J U M E N T." "On one he virtually confesses judgment by omitting distinct allusion to it. The other he endeavors to bolster up by the statement (REPORTED BY HIMSELF)." etc.

"Neither one nor three of its members nor all of them together have the LEAST RIGHT TO SAY A WORD to the intent and meaning of the report or any circumstance of its adoption do so is a MANIFEST IMPROPRIETY."

"Had any such understanding as Cannon ALLEGES been attached to the report its adoption would have been OPPOSED in Conference and POSSIBLY DEFEATED."

"By claiming against MODESTY PROPRIETY to interpret the finding as merely advice to him." (Cannon's mine.)

These statements and others like them are all characteristic of the man, and the fact that I shall not take them and answer them one by one, is not proof that I "confess judgment" to them, as he states about one of charges. My reason is a very different one and to me a very good one, namely, I have decided, after careful thought that it is best that I should not discuss with Dr. Whitehead any matter which depends in any way upon his personal testimony or involves in any way views as to personal conduct, except so far as these things may involve principles which are of importance to the welfare of the Church at large. Thinking this way, I did not reply to his article for a full month, and finally when I decided that it was necessary to do so, I simply discussed my first note, stating why I wrote at all, and why I wrote as I did, giving the circumstances under which my first note was written to show that it was not intended to stir up a controversy, nor to produce a false impression. I purposely refrained from any discussion of the statements made by Dr. Whitehead as to my conduct or as to any matter of fact, involving his testimony. He is mistaken, therefore, in his statement when he says "On one he virtually confesses judgment by omitting distinct allusion to it." That matter involved his personal testimony and FOR THAT REASON, I said nothing about it.

His second letter, given above, does not add anything further except his personal opinion as to the conduct of the committee and of myself. His remarks about the "understanding" among the members of the committee before the report was signed, that nothing in the report was intended as a censure upon me, in which connection he uses such statements as "REPORTED BY HIMSELF," and as "Mr. Cannon Alleges," have not changed the fact that THIS UNDERSTANDING DID EXIST, OR THAT AS THE COMMITTEE HEARD THE WHOLE MATTER, THEIR INTERPRETATION OF THEIR OWN REPORT IS THE ONLY INTERPRETATION WORTHY OF ANY SERIOUS CONSIDERATION. This second letter, therefore, I shall not take up and discuss any more than I did the first one, for to do so would be to discuss matters involving his personal testimony or his views of personal conduct, entirely apart from any principle of importance to the church at large. I did not give any reason in my letter of Jan. 5th for my failure to go in any discussion of his statements, but as he seems to think the only reason was that I could not answer him, and so continues the same line of discussion in his letter of Jan. 14th, I give here my reason for not discussing with him matters involving personal conduct and testimony, (which reason is based upon my experience with him in the past.) My experience with him has convinced me THAT THE ORDINARY STANDARDS OF CONDUCT, OF LANGUAGE, AND OF TESTIMONY CANNOT BE USED IN JUDGING THE CONDUCT, LANGUAGE, AND TESTIMONY OF DR. WHITEHEAD, and as I am not, and never have been, on intimate terms with him, I have neither time nor opportunity to formulate the extraordinary standards by which correct judgment is to be rendered, and this being the case, it is better that I should not discuss any statement of his that relates to personal conduct and testimony. When I have applied ordinary standards of judgment I have been obliged to reach conclusions which I could not agree to be correct, and yet if I laid aside the ORDINARY standards, I did not know what standard to apply and I knew not what to think or how to characterize certain statements and conduct.

I want to be exactly understood in the matter, and so I give two or three illustrations of what I mean.

(1.) On Nov. 10th I received the following letter from Dr. Whitehead:

407 E. Main street,
Richmond, Va., Nov. 9, '98.
REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.,
BLACKSTONE, VA.

You are hereby notified that at the ensuing session of the Virginia Annual Conference, M. E. Church South, I shall, when your name is called in the examination of character under "Minute Question 20" present a complaint against you, founded upon the unjust, uncharitable and offensive articles concerning myself and other members of the Conference, written by you and published in the METHODIST RECORDER and SOUTHERN METHODIST RECORDER during the present ecclesiastical year.

PAUL WHITEHEAD.

To this communication I replied as follows.

BLACKSTONE, VA., Nov. 10, '98.
DR. PAUL WHITEHEAD,
RICHMOND, VA.

DEAR DR.—Your letter of Nov. 9th received and contents noted. As I suppose you desire that I shall be able to explain and justify any language of mine to which you object it would facilitate my preparation, and make certain that I carry with me a sufficient number of copies of the papers in which objectionable language was used, for the use of committees, counsel, etc., if you could send me a list of the statements to which you specifically object. I have never had occasion to investigate the matter personally before, but I suppose that the idea of paragraph 55 which requires that the preacher be advised in advance of the complaint intended that the complaint should be sufficiently specific for him to have due time for reflection as to the character of his reply. A merely general complaint of unjust, uncharitable and offensive articles leaves the party complained of very much in the dark as to what sort of a reply would be necessary.

In conclusion, let me say, that I regret of course that you should think my utterances sufficiently wicked to justify the course you propose to pursue. I have followed in all of them what I believed to be a clear duty, and have in my heart no ill-will or hard feeling toward any person about whom I may have written during the past Conference year. I simply spoke the truth as I saw it, in all cases, and not because I felt uncharitably, but because I thought it was necessary to speak the truth in the strongest, most pointed way possible. I have not been ignorant of the fact that there have been many who have entirely dissented from my methods and language, but that knowledge could not affect my action so long as I conceived that I ought to do as I have done. I have, of course, my opinion of the actions of the persons of whom I have spoken, but I have not, nor do I expect to have, any evil or uncharitable thoughts toward any of them. I stand perfectly ready and willing to justify and make good every statement I have made or withdrawn the same. If you and others feel that you have just cause for complaint, I cannot blame you for taking the action you propose to take. I regret, however, that there should be such apparent hard feeling toward me that in your letter you did not feel yourself able to address me in any way except as Rev. James Cannon, Jr., and that you could not sign your letter with any form such as "Yours truly," or "Yours sincerely," but felt obliged to omit it altogether. For myself I do not hesitate to sign in all frankness my letter to you as to all others.

Yours sincerely,

JAMES CANNON, JR.

In answer to this letter, I received from Dr. Whitehead the following reply:

407 E. Main street,

REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.,
BLACKSTONE, VA.

SIR:—

Yours of yesterday has been duly received. My communication to you, dated Nov. 9, was entirely formal, being the notification required by law. It was not an expression of feeling, "hard" nor soft, but simply a legal document.

I am every way disposed to give you whatever information as to the details of "the complaint" you may need for your defense.

I therefore say that my complaint will be specially based on the articles in the Recorder entitled as follows:

"The Election of General Conference Delegates,"—First January issue, '98.

"More Virginia Notes,"—March 17, '98.

"The General Conference of '98,"—June 16, '98.

"The Epworth League Conference,"—July 7, '98.

"The Member of the Book Committee From Va. Speaks,"—August 23, '98, and that in reply to R. M. Maxey,—September 15th, '98.

I am, Yours, etc.,

PAUL WHITEHEAD.

No other letter passed between us. Conference met. Not a word had passed until Saturday, when he arose in his place and arrested my character. To my genuine astonishment he addressed me in the presence of the Conference and of the Bishop as "BROTHER Cannon." The committee was appointed and before the committee he continued to call me "Brother Cannon," and to speak of me as "Brother Cannon." Conference adjourned, and two weeks later he writes of me in the secular press, and "Brother Cannon" has disappeared from view. It is now "Rev. Mr. Cannon," "Mr. Cannon," and "Mr. C." Before Conference, I am called "Sir," during Conference, and before the committee, I am addressed and spoken of as "Brother Cannon," and after Conference I become once more simply "Rev. Mr. Cannon," "Mr. Cannon," and "Mr. C." Now were I to judge this conduct by ordinary standards, I know exactly what judgment I should form of it. But I really have not been able to agree that such judgment would be correct in this case. I have a better opinion of Dr. Whitehead than I would have from such a judgment. But I do not know what standard of judgment I should apply, and so I really do not know what to say or think of such conduct.

(2.) On Tuesday night of the Conference session, in trying to bring out before the committee the previous relations existing between Dr. Whitehead and myself, I asked that Rev. J. H. Kiddick be called in as a witness. He could not be secured, having gone to Norfolk. The committee asked if I could not state what I wished to prove by him, and perhaps Dr. Whitehead would admit it without question. I then stated that Brother Kiddick had approached Dr. Whitehead and had asked him if the difficulty could not be settled by a private meeting, and after some conversation, Dr. Whitehead had taken the matter under consideration. Brother Kiddick then approached me, and asked me if I would agree to talk the matter over privately. He told me of his conversation with Dr. Whitehead. I said that I feared it would not amount to anything, but that I was willing if Dr. Whitehead was, and I went and saw two friends, Brothers Lipscomb and Young, and they agreed to act with me, and I so reported to Brother Kiddick. Upon the close of the morning session I went to the platform to talk with Bishop Mangrove, and saw Brother Kiddick go to the secretary's table and speak to Dr. Whitehead. The conversation was brief, and Brother Kiddick went out of the chancel and waited in the aisle till I came down, when he told me that Dr. Whitehead said he would not agree to a private settlement, but that he intended to bring the matter before the Conference and let it be settled there. This testimony I considered of some importance. Dr. Whitehead said that he had no objection to allowing it go in, but he denied that he had more than one interview with Brother Kiddick, and that was in the council chamber. I told the committee that if the testimony went in it must go in as I gave it, or we would have to adjourn till we could get Brother Kiddick, for I had witnessed the interview between them at the secretary's table and that I expected to use the testimony as cumulative evidence of his attitude toward me. Dr. Whitehead then voluntarily arose, raised his hand to Heaven, and said, with great emphasis, "I swear before Almighty God that I have not had but one interview with Joseph H. Kiddick about this matter during Conference." I at once told the committee that we would have to adjourn till Brother Kiddick could be found. The committee met the next morning. Brother Kiddick was the first witness. He had not heard what he was wanted for, nor did he know of what had occurred the night before, and did not know indeed until ten days after Conference. He was asked to state what conversation, if any, he had held with Dr. Whitehead about the matter since the Conference began. He stated the same things that I had stated the night before, but with greater particularity, told of the interview in the council chamber, which Dr. Whitehead agreed to; then of his conversation with me, of his conversation with Dr. Whitehead at the secretary's table which I had witnessed, and his second conversation with me. Thus two interviews were positively proven to have taken place. But Dr. Whitehead had in the most solemn manner voluntarily sworn before Almighty God that only one interview had taken place. He did not attempt, by cross-examination, to get any explanation of the contradiction from Brother Kiddick. He never referred to it afterward or attempted to explain it in his speech before the committee. Now what was to be said about this? Here were events all occurring in one week's time in reference to a very important matter in which he was greatly interested, concerning which he voluntarily made oath in the most impressive manner, but in which he was directly contradicted by a disinterested witness and myself. Did Dr. Whitehead intentionally swear to a falsehood? In my closing speech before the committee, in referring to this scene, I used the following language: "I do not believe that Dr. Whitehead intentionally swore to a falsehood. I do not understand how he could have forgotten, or how he could have gotten these two distinct interviews blended into one, but I decline to believe that he intended to deceive the committee. I believe this is a Providential example of the very statement which I made in the RECORDER, and against which he makes complaint. I said in the RECORDER, in reference to his report of the action of our Conference on the Presiding Elder Memorial: 'All ordinary rules of interpretation must be laid aside, or severe judgment must be pronounced.' So here, I say of the occurrence before this committee, 'all ordinary rules of interpretation must be laid aside, or severe judgment must be pronounced.' He has sworn that he had but interview. Two others have sworn to two. By ordinary rules of interpretation he has sworn to a statement which is false. But I do not believe he meant to do so. I throw aside ordinary rules, and I say he must have forgotten. But this fact is clear proof before this committee that Dr. Whitehead is not a trustworthy witness, though he does not intentionally mislead." I used these words, quoted above, in my closing speech before the committee, notwithstanding the fact that Dr. Whitehead had arrested my character and had done his best to convict me of uncharitableness and had in his speech accused me of being full of spite and uncharitableness, of having the devil in my heart, of increasing all ungodliness by my conduct, etc. Notwithstanding this clear proof of inaccurate statement on his part, I absolutely declined to believe that this was intentional and so stated in my closing speech before the committee.

But I honestly confess that I do not know how to interpret such testimony, or what standards are to be used in forming my judgment. I do not know who her in his report to the Nashville Advocate the blunder arose from poor hearing, poor memory, confusion of mind or what. I do not know in the case with Brother Kiddick who her the contradiction arose from poor hearing, poor memory, a blending of the two

Topic For the Week Beginning Feb. 19, "A Missionary Church."
Text, Acts xiii, 1-3.

"When they had fasted and prayed and laid their hands on them, they sent them away."

It was in a great city, filled with wealth and luxury and moral corruption. An obscure company of religiously enthusiastic people had banded together. It was a strangely mixed band. They were worthy Jews, but from many lands, drawn to the great city by their business. The strictness of their religious prejudices had been somewhat relaxed and new notions added. They were followers of Jesus the Nazarene. They allowed gentiles to meet with them on equal terms. A strange innovation for the exclusive Jews.

Now occurs a still stranger thing. The impression gains currency that of the considerable number of religious teachers among them two should be sent together to the islands and neighboring provinces to teach the people the new views which they had themselves received and call the people to share in their religious experiences.

This was indeed a new spirit for those who had for ages been known as most intolerant toward all other religions and people. This was the beginning of Christian missions. All previous work had been unpremeditated, the result of an exigency or a special occasion. This was planned with deliberation. Other efforts had been individual and spasmodic. This was a movement of the whole church, and was to be a sustained and continued labor.

The preparation for the work is noticeable. "They fasted;" not those alone who were to be sent out, but the whole company. It was not as a form, but as a religious preparation of body and spirit to more clearly discern the will of God. "They prayed." After the mind was clear and active, freed from all sluggishness of sleep and eating, they directed the powers of soul to learning the divine pleasure. "They laid their hands on them." Assurance of fraternal regard was in it, but more than that—authority to represent the church and carry the knowledge and practices of the church to others was imparted. Alone, no one of them possessed the right to bring others into this fellowship. The whole company united in the act of sending these messengers with the gospel message to the people in the regions beyond.

So should it be now. The whole church should send out the missionaries and sustain the work as its own.

Growth of Brotherhood.

Our recent war with Spain has opened eyes and hearts in wondrous ways and to wonderful extent in unexpected places. We entered the conflict with an avowal such as no nation ever before made as the basis of battle. We sought no conquest of lands for ourselves, no vindication of wounded honor or righting of wrongs of our own, but we could no longer tolerate the evils and wrongs under which our neighbors were suffering.

Though of different race and speech, with customs and traditions unlike our own, of a religion which made small appeal to many of us, they were our neighbors, oppressed, struggling, almost helpless and well nigh hopeless.

The most hopeful sign of all the conflict is the evident growth of human brotherhood. In the third of a century past we as a people have accumulated wealth beyond all historical precedent. It was a grave question if we were not growing avaricious in spirit and losing all the nobler qualities of heroic manhood. This war has shown the spiritual as well as material and physical fiber of the young republic. We have the spirit of brotherhood. This is the impulse of all missionary effort. In a broader and deeper sense than he intended the "cry of kinship" is caught by us from the lips of Tennyson's successor and rung around the globe. We are brothers not only to those of Anglo-Saxon birth and breeding, but to all men everywhere.

Keep Posted.

In many public schools the pupils are required to furnish lists of current events and explain them. It would be a good plan in the League to have once a month a review of the important events in the church at large. Affairs in Methodism and in other denominations are as important to us as the doings of congress or crowned heads.

Cry of Kinship.

What is the voice I hear
On the wind of the western sea?
Sentinel, listen from out Cape Clear
And say what the voice may be!
'Tis a proud, free people calling loud to a people proud and free.

And it says to them: "Kinsmen, hail!
We severed have been too long.
Now let us have done with a wornout tale—
The tale of an ancient wrong—
And our friendship last long as love doth last and be stronger than death is strong."

Answer them, sons of the selfsame race
And blood of the selfsame clan.
Let us speak with each other face to face
And answer as man to man
And loyally love and trust each other as none but freemen can.

Now fling them out to the breeze—
Shamrock, thistle and rose—
And the star spangled banner unfurl with these.

A message to friends and foes Wherever the sails of peace are seen and wherever the war wind blows,

A message to bond and thrall to wake,
For wherever we come, we twain,
The throne of the tyrant shall rock and quake
And his menace be void and vain,
For you are lords of a strong young land and we are lords of the main.

Yes, this is the voice on the bluff March gale;
We severed have been too long,
But now we have done with a wornout tale—
The tale of an ancient wrong—
And our friendship last long as love doth last and be stronger than death is strong.

Britain.

Topic For the Week Beginning Feb. 12, "Joy In Finding the Lost."
Text, Luke xv, 1-10.

"This man receiveth sinners and eateth with them."

There are many who admire purity and desire to be clean. The most natural feeling to all such is dislike of the impure and shrinking from the unclean. Can one handle coals and his hands not be soiled? Can one wade in mud and keep his garments unspotted? How much less can one keep company with the vile, hearing their talk and seeing their actions, and remain clean in speech and uncorrupted in thought. "Evil communications corrupt good manners." So to the Pharisees it seemed a proof of unholiness in Jesus when he made friends with the common people.

Filth breeds disease surely, and disease is contagious and deadly. Spiritual evil is the worst of all. How, then, can the pure come in contact with the polluted without becoming itself unclean?

There is power in life and good to transform the noxious into the wholesome. Lilies can grow in mire and transmute muck into beauty and fragrance. Holiness can touch sin and not only be uncontaminated itself, but also send the taint or power and sweetness into the bad. Evil can be overcome of good. Fire can make the blackness to glow with light and burn out all dross.

No joy in this world is comparable to the pleasure of being pure and right, loving and gentle, except that glory of imparting one's own purity and rightness, of communicating love and gentleness to others who have been hateful and passionate. An uplift of soul, an enthusiasm of sacrifice, drives one forward, careless of pain, forgetful of self, only so that the lost one be saved. Fear is for the time unknown, and all feeling is merged in the exultation of self giving, of conquest of the evil by the pure.

This uplift is felt not only by Jesus, but by every one of His followers who overcomes. It is shared by all the heavenly hosts. "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth."

Secretary of First General District.

The president and secretary have usually been ministers, but at the Bangor convention last July it was thought wise to depart from the custom, and Mr. Penniman was elected as secretary. He is one of the most widely known Leaguers in the east through his connection with the secular press and his lectures.

He was born in Quincy, Mass., is somewhat under 40 years of age, has traveled extensively throughout the United States and Canada and Mexico and been very efficient in temperance work. He has been connected with several of the large daily papers of Boston and is at present on the staff of The News, the leading daily of Fall River, Mass., where he resides. His patriotic, historic, temperance, art and travel lectures have been given in all parts of the country. He is prominent in several fraternal orders, has been a member of the Massachusetts legislature and assistant clerk of the house of representatives. He is an officer of the State Sunday School association.

He is energetic, resourceful, tactful, courteous and spiritual. He makes a good secretary.

The League's Place.

It is settled that the League is not to be used as a money gathering device. That is well. But the very fact that the League exists should be a pledge that the contributions of the church to all worthy objects increase greatly. The Methodist idea is peculiar. No other church makes a pledge to support the church and the benevolent causes a condition of membership. No one can legitimately enter the Methodist Episcopal fold until this pledge has been made. The League is a branch of the church, or rather a department. The quarterly conference committees in most churches do little of the work assigned them in our disciplinary plan. The League should supplement and fill this lack. Let the various fields of missions be studied in succession and presented at public services. Thrill and enthuse the church with missionary zeal by presenting to them the romance of the conquering Christ.

Self Seeking.

It is not easy, even for a follower of Christ, to humble himself and accept second place. Many renounce the world who are never able to renounce self. They are not blind to the importance of humility in others, but they are content to live without this personal adornment for themselves. They condemn selfishness in others, while they unwittingly or secretly foster this un-Christlike spirit in their own hearts. It is no easy matter to purge out this leaven of unrighteousness. —Lutheran Observer.

FIGHT AT MANILA

Aguinaldo's Forces Make War Upon Our Soldiers.

THEIR LOSSES VERY HEAVY.

Our Own Casualties Number a Hundred and Seventy-five.

VERY FEW WILL RESULT FATALLY.

The Killing of an Insurgent Who Had Repeatedly Broken Through Our Guard Line Precipitated the Battle—Shots From Admiral Dewey's Ships Aid in Putting the Insurgents to Flight and in Enabling General Otis to Capture Several Towns—An Unconfirmed Spanish Dispatch Says Towns Were Destroyed.

Manila, Feb. 6.—The long expected rupture between the Americans and Filipinos has come at last. The former are now engaged in solving the Philippine problem with the utmost expedition possible. The clash came at 8:45 Saturday evening, when three daring Filipinos darted past the Nebraska regiment's pickets at Santa Mesa, but retired when challenged. They repeated the experiment without drawing the sentries' fire. But the third time Corporal Greely challenged the Filipinos and then fired, killing one of them and wounding another.

Almost immediately afterward the Filipinos' line, from Caloocan to Santa Mesa, commenced a fusillade, which was ineffectual. The Nebraska, Montana and North Dakota outposts replied vigorously and held their ground until reinforcements arrived.

The Filipinos in the meantime concentrated at three points, Caloocan, Gagalangin and Santa Mesa. At about 1 o'clock the Filipinos opened a hot fire from all three places simultaneously. This was supplemented by the fire of two siege guns at Balik-Balik, and by advancing their skirmishers at Paco and Pnadacan. The Americans responded with a terrific fire, but owing to the darkness they were unable to determine its effect. The Utah light artillery finally succeeded in silencing the native battery. The Third artillery also did good work on the extreme left.

The United States cruiser Charleston and the gunboat Concord, stationed off Malabon, opened fire from their secondary batteries on the Filipino's position at Caloocan and kept it up vigorously.

At 2:45 there was another fusillade along the entire line and the United States sea going double monitor Monadnock opened fire on the enemy from off Malate.

With daylight the Americans advanced. The California and Washington regiments made a splendid charge and drove the Filipinos from the village of Paco and Santa Mesa. The Nebraska regiment also distinguished itself, capturing several prisoners and 100 Howitzers and a very strong position at the reservoir, which is connected with the water works. The Kansas and Dakota regiments compelled the enemy's right flank to retire to Caloocan.

The engagements have proved a veritable slaughter for the Filipinos. their killed being reported as amounting to thousands. The American forces could scarcely have been better disposed. It is now known that the attack was fully expected and that every preparation had been made to meet the contingency.

Firing slackened at noon yesterday, the enemy being apparently demoralized. The American troops, however, are fully equipped to meet a possible attack.

Aguinaldo's private secretary has been arrested as a spy in Manila.

More than a hundred wounded Filipinos, taken from the trenches, are being cared for in the American hospitals.

The splendid police system prevented a general outbreak in the city, though several soldiers were attacked by natives in the streets. Lieutenant Charles Hogan and Sergeant Wall were shot by three natives, the former being seriously wounded and the latter slightly. Lieutenant Colonel Colton was attacked by a native with a sword, while riding in a carriage to the front. He killed his assailant with his revolver. A sharpshooter within the American lines shot and killed a sergeant while he was sitting at a window of the Second reserve hospital. Colonel William C. Smith died of apoplexy. Many of the insurgents were driven into the Pasig river and drowned, and several hundred were taken prisoners.

THE NEWS IN WASHINGTON.

Brief Reports From Admiral Dewey and General Otis on the Battle.

Washington, Feb. 6.—Admiral Dewey yesterday cabled the navy department that hostilities had begun between the American army and naval forces in and about Manila and the Philippine insurgents. The insurgents, he said, had been the aggressors and had been repulsed. The dispatch, dated Sunday, is as follows:

"Insurgents here inaugurated general engagement yesterday night, which was continued today. The American army and navy is generally successful. Insurgents have been driven back and our line advanced. No casualties to navy."

The news came like a shock, for the administration, though apprised that an ugly situation prevailed in the Philippines, had clung steadily to a hope that by tact and patience actual fighting might be averted, and even those public men who felt that hostilities would follow should the treaty be ratified and the United States attempt to occupy the island believed that Aguinaldo would not force the fighting when the treaty of peace was in its most critical stage.

Shortly before midnight dispatches were received at the war department from General Otis. The last dispatch was as follows:

"Insurgents in large force opened attack on our outer lines at 8:45 last evening; renewed attack several times during night; at 4 o'clock this morning entire line engaged; all attacks repulsed; at daybreak advanced against insurgents and have driven them beyond the lines they formerly occupied, capturing several villages and their defense works; insurgent loss in dead and wounded large; our own casualties thus far estimated at 175, very few fatal; troops enthusiastic and acting fearlessly; very splendid execution on flanks of enemy; city held in check and absolute quiet prevails; insurgents have secured good many Mauser rifles, a few field pieces and quick firing guns, with ammunition, during last month."

General Otis has in his command 21,649 men, and approximately 6,000 men are on their way to join him. Besides his soldiers General Otis has at his back in Manila bay, commanding the city, a veritable Rock of Gibraltar in Dewey's fleet. No one here knows the real strength of the insurgents opposed to General Otis. The accounts of their numbers are conflicting, and none of them comes from reliable sources. Still, the best belief of the authorities at the war department is that they number about 30,000 men, but they are not comparable to the American forces in personnel, discipline or quality of arms.

EXCITEMENT IN MADRID.

General Rios Reports That Our Warships Destroyed Several Towns.

Madrid, Feb. 6.—Intense excitement was caused here by the receipt last evening of the following official dispatch from General Rios, the Spanish commander in the Philippines:

"The insurgents have violently attacked and captured almost the whole of the exterior American line. The Americans offered a vigorous defense at the exterior barriers, using their artillery, as well as the squadron.

"The warships destroyed and burned Caloocan, Paco and several towns in the neighborhood. Both sides suffered materially. Very sharp firing continues. The Spanish troops have been confined to quarters, but a sergeant has been wounded by a stray bullet."

The popular sympathies here are on the side of Aguinaldo, but thinking people are anxious regarding the consequences of the fighting, especially on account of the Spanish prisoners still in the hands of the insurgents.

SOME NEBRASKA VICTIMS.

Of the Battle of Manila—Corporal Who Fired the First Shot.

Lincoln, Neb., Feb. 6.—A private cablegram from Manila gives the following list of killed of the First Nebraska regiment in the battle of Manila: James Pierce, musician, merchant, David City; Harry Hull, Company A, hotel clerk, Hastings; Davis Lager, Company I, lawyer; Sergeant Orrin T. Curtis farmer, ex-member of the legislature, Ashland; Charles Keck, wealthy stockman, Chadron; A. Bellinger, son of a doctor at Beatrice and a young society man; Lewis Begler, clerk, Lincoln; Edward Eggers, lawyer, Fremont.

Corporal Greely, of Nebraska, credited with firing the first shot at Manila, was a recruit who joined the First regiment at San Francisco several weeks after the muster in and departure from Nebraska. His name does not appear on the roster, but his home is thought to be either at Madison or Norfolk, Neb.

Agoncillo Fleeing to Canada.

New York, Feb. 6.—A dispatch to The Herald from Albany says that Agoncillo, representative of the Filipino junta in this country, passed through that city last night en route for Canada. According to information received by the correspondent of The Herald the United States government has no intention of arresting Agoncillo, and will allow him to proceed across the Canadian line.

Awful Scenes at a Fire in Hungary.

London, Feb. 6.—The Daily Telegraph publishes the following dispatch from Vienna: Terrible scenes were witnessed in the conflagration last Tuesday night which destroyed the whole village of Nagyprobocz, in the Liptau district of Hungary. Twenty men, literally in flames, ran about the streets until they dropped insensible. Many were trodden down by maddened animals. Others were frozen to death in the open fields. Twenty charred bodies have been recovered and 90 of the survivors are suffering from dreadful burns, several being blinded. The flames destroyed 600 head of cattle.

Suspected French Lieutenant Arrested.

Paris, Feb. 6.—The Paris police arrested here yesterday a former lieutenant of French infantry, for whom a warrant had been issued at Nancy, on the charge of carrying on an illicit correspondence with a foreign government, involving military secrets. The man's name is Durand, and he had described himself as a commercial traveler. He was dismissed from the army two years ago. On searching his apartments the police found and seized a number of photographs of French fortresses and other defensive works.

Mrs. Place's Electrocutation Ordered.

Albany, Feb. 4.—The court of appeals yesterday handed down an order directing the warden of Sing Sing prison to electrocute Mrs. Martha Place some time during the week beginning Feb. 20. Mrs. Place killed her step-daughter at their home in Brooklyn. The governor was petitioned by sympathetic women to commute the sentence to life imprisonment, and he has the case under advisement.

Increased Army Bill Passes the House.

Washington, Feb. 1.—The bill to reorganize and increase the standing army to about 100,000 men, but giving the president authority to reduce the size of infantry companies and cavalry troops to 60 men each, thus fixing a minimum of about 50,000 enlisted men, passed the house yesterday by a vote of 168 to 125.

AGUINALDO'S OFFER.

Willing to Release Spanish Prisoners For $500,000 and Their Arms.

Madrid, Feb. 6.—It is announced that arrangements for the repatriation of the Spanish troops in the Philippine Islands are being made at New York and San Francisco. The American government, it is added, bears the expense of the repatriation, which is to be carried out by the Spanish Transatlantic Steamship company. The Spanish government, through the French embassy at Washington, has sent a communication to the government of the United States saying that, in view of non-success of the Americans to obtain the release of the Spanish prisoners, the government itself has taken steps to obtain their release. But as this will necessitate a certain expense the government of Spain recalls the fact that the stipulations of the treaty of Paris oblige the Americans to obtain the liberation of the Spaniards.

General Rios, commanding the Spanish troops in the Philippines, cables that Aguinaldo offers to release the Spanish prisoners on the payment of $500,000 and the handing over to him of the cannon, rifles and 3,000,000 cartridges belonging to the Spaniards. The government here replied that it could not accept this transaction, as it would be equivalent to indirect protection of the insurgents, which would be a breach of the Spanish engagements with the United States.

Aguinaldo, it appears, still retains the civil prisoners and monks.

Canada's Cabinet Meets in New York.

New York, Feb. 6.—The Canadian cabinet held a session in this city yesterday at which official business of the dominion was discussed. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, premier, presided, and the entire ministry was present. The council, which is the first of a foreign power to be held in this city, was made necessary by the absence in Washington of Premier Laurier, Sir Richard Cartwright and Sir Louis H. Davies, who are members of the joint high commission for the settlement of differences between the United States and Canada. The other members of the cabinet were summoned to this city, and the meeting was held at the Waldorf-Astoria.

Spoiled Beef at Havana.

Havana, Feb. 6.—Inspector General Breckenridge has discovered among the army rations issued to the destitute in Havana hundreds of cases of spoiled beef, and it is believed there are others, just how many only the inspection can determine. The marks on the cases show "Chicago, July, 1898." They were bought from Armour and Libby, McNeill & Libby, and were sent to Porto Rico. In due time they were issued to Captain Noel Giants, who is in charge of the relief work here.

THE CANNON-WHITEHEAD COMMITTEE REPORT.

interviews into one, or what? I know the conclusion which would be formed in a Civil court, where ordinary rules of interpretation are applied. But I refuse to adopt any such conclusion in Dr. Whitehead's case. I do not believe that he would intentionally deceive. But I do not know what extraordinary rules I should apply, or how to interpret his conduct and testimony. Nor do I understand how, after this occurrence, and my refusal to believe him incapable of intentional false testimony, he could, within two weeks, accuse me of gross inaccuracies, and never qualify his charge by stating that he did not think them to be intentional inaccuracies.

I have given these two cases to show what I mean when I say that the ordinary standards of conduct, of language, and of testimony, cannot be used in judging the conduct, language, and testimony of Dr. Whitehead. Whether I have made myself clear to others I do not know, but I do know that it is clear to my mind that it is not best for me to discuss any matters with Dr. Whitehead which involve opinions as to purely personal conduct and personal testimony. I have managed to live on and do the work assigned me by the Church without any commendation from him in the past, and I shall try to live on and do my work in the future notwithstanding any personal opinion of me, which may be publicly or privately expressed by him. But whenever any question arises, involving a principle or policy of importance to the Church I shall in future, as in the past, say what I think ought to be said regardless of his views or relation thereto.

In conclusion I would repeat what I wrote to Dr. Whitehead before Conference in my letter of November 10th: "I have in my heart no ill-will or hard feelings toward any person. * * * I have, of course, my opinion of the actions of the persons of whom I have spoken, but I have not, nor do I expect to have, any evil or uncharitable thoughts toward any of them."

JAMES CANNON, JR.

A CARD.

The Editor takes this method of expressing his appreciation to the many friends who have written to him letters of sympathy. It is very helpful to know that one's friends have him on their hearts and prayers in hours of trouble and affliction. It is with an humble and thankful heart that the realization comes that the scripture is true: "My grace is sufficient for thee."

TWENTY-YEAR PASTOR.

Garland was an acceptable preacher at Trinity, in Richmond, and Monumental, in Portsmouth, when he was put in the eldership, and, when he was my elder, was very acceptable to the people generally. Wm. P. Wright is a good preacher. He can, like all of us, make mistakes, but he is an acceptable preacher, and a big-hearted brother. Joseph H. Amis, if judged by his sermon at the opening of Conference, the only time I have heard him, is vigorous in the pulpit. Here, then, is a majority of the present elders, and not one can be called inefficient, dry-as-dust preachers.

Now, I am as much opposed to the life-tenure in office of presiding elders as "Twenty-Year Pastor" or any other preacher in the Virginia Conference. I believe the Bishops make mistakes in keeping brethren in that office too long. Preachers and people get tired of them in the office, but in trying to correct what we think wrong let us not commit a more grievous wrong.

It has not been necessary for me to do any "pushing" for the elder, but it has been a real pleasure for me to do some of the "pulling" "Twenty-Year Pastor" speaks of, and I have usually counted it a pleasure rather than a burden and do not think I have ever been anybody's "pet." Let brotherly love continue! Amen.

NORTH VIEW, VA., JAN. 24th, 1898.

(The Editor of the RECORDER does not feel that any apology is needed for publishing the article signed "Twenty-Year Pastor," or for the article published in this issue by Brother Moss, signed with his own name. The question he discusses is the most vital issue before our Conference today, and in the judgment of this Editor, such a workman as John O. Moss has a right to tell his experience and his views. This paper believes in fair play and both sides will always get a hearing in its columns. I therefore refer Brother Mullen and all the brethren who have made inquiries about the article to Brother Moss. His article in this issue shows that he is ready and willing to tell the brethren what he thinks.—EDITOR RECORDER.)

"VIRGINIA NOTES" AMENDED.

Dr. Paul Whitehead wields the pen of a ready writer, and his utterances are to me pleasing and often instructive, but his last batch of notes on the recent session of the Virginia Conference, held at Portsmouth, Va., Nov. 16-23, 1898, and published in the Nashville Advocate of Jan. 12th, 1899, need amendment, at least, in one section. Referring to the appointment of presiding elders, he says: "The Bishop did not disturb the elders whose terms were unexpired, and contrary to the doctrine of some of our ecclesiastical statesmen, he reappointed several who had held the office continuously for very long periods." He then refers to the following resolutions which were offered by myself, Richard Fergusson, and James C. Reed, signed in the order named:—

"Resolved, 1st; That we, the Virginia Conference, reaffirm the sentiment embodied in the resolution adopted by an overwhelming majority of this Conference at its last session, in the city of Danville, in reference to the appointment of presiding elders for a longer term of service in that office than eight years consecutively.

"Resolved, 2nd; That we believe the good of the Church, and peace among ourselves, demand the retirement, after this year, of all who have been in that office for over eight years."

The vote on these resolutions stood sixty to sixty for tabling them, and Dr. Sledd, who was in the chair, cast the deciding vote, and the resolutions were tabled. Dr. Whitehead makes little of this action of the Conference when he uses the following language:

"It is obvious that nearly half of the body abstained from even voting on what is practically a dead issue at present."

Can Dr. Whitehead believe that he truly represented the sentiment of a large majority of the Virginia Conference when he says "they abstained from even voting"? I do not accuse Dr. Whitehead of willful misrepresentation of his brethren, but he has certainly failed to understand the temper of his brethren on the subject he was writing about, and where he says "they abstained from even voting," intending thereby to make the impression that they cared nothing about the substance of the resolutions on which they had the opportunity to vote, he did misrepresent them. The Conference has not changed its deep convictions as set forth in its Memorial to the late General Conference, asking for the limitation of the presiding elder's term of office to eight years consecutively. But on the other hand, we are sure that the principle lying at the basis of that "Memorial" has more deeply permeated the thought and judgment of the Conference than on the day when, by a decisive vote of 133 to 9, it adopted the "Memorial." The judgment of the Conference being unchanged, we think that fairness, justice, equity, and righteousness demand that the Bishops should honor our contention, and give us new men in the places of our notably "very long period" men. I am sure I represent the disposition of every member of the Virginia Conference when I say they would neither hamper nor dictate to our Bishops, but I am equally certain that this contention will never cease until some abuses among us are corrected, and to this end we will continue to labor by resolution, and if need be, by a committee outside of the eldership to confer with our next presiding Bishop.

If our correspondent had been in possession of the facts in regard to the temper of the Conference when the vote was taken on the above resolutions he would have seen that we were in "safety from him that puffeth at" us, for after the "improvised love-feast" I was approached by a number of brethren and urged to take the resolution from the table. This I thought best not to do for several reasons. Chiefly, for fear that my insistence would be construed as personal opposition to our "very long period" men.

As to our second resolution, we are more deeply impressed than ever that the good of the Church demands the retirement after this year of all our "very long period" men and the substitution of others. Harmony being the strength of all federative bodies of men,—more especially an Annual Conference of Methodist preachers,—and it being evident that harmony will never come to us as a Conference until these brethren retire, we think they ought, on their own motion, to ask for other work. We have certainly had friction enough to satisfy the most contentious, and if unbrotherly controversies are not soon ended how can we go to our people as recognized ministers of peace? The Churches are already suffering and our laymen, in some places, will lose loyalty for our institutions if the evils complained of be not soon abated.

That the appointments are largely made up weeks and, in some cases, even months before the meeting of the Annual Conference, nearly every one believes. It is equally evident that the appointments are really made by the presiding elders, and that the bishop simply confirms what has been done by them.

The results which have followed such a policy have been to disintegrate, to destroy confidence, and engender bitterness of spirit. So long as such a state of affairs continues the Conference will be divided into two parties, and the opinion will prevail that these offices are being sought for other reasons than the best interests of the Church. If them to retire, and different men in their places, would allay the ings and prejudices which are strongly manifested among us. the preachers could then whether they are being fairly treated in the matter of appointment whether the appointments are ly used as rewards and punishment for friends and supposed enemies.

I have written these things for the purpose of correcting (believe) published errors, and our "very long period" elders be assured that we are not fighting them as individuals, but as those who, in the judgment of many, outlived their usefulness in the tions which they fill.

BROTHERLY LOVE.

In the death of Rev. W. R. Smith we have lost one of our noblest. He was cultured, consecrated, faithful. Men loved him and trusted him. He was never conscious of powers which he had. He did not seek places of prominence but preferred to labour in less conspicuous fields. But I do not write of him. I desire to speak to the Christian liberality of our people in behalf of his bereaved family.

Brother Smith spent a quarter of a century as a travelling minister and never received more than a hundred or eight hundred dollars a year. It is needless to say he did not save much out of this small salary. He leaves a wife and five children, but one of these children to take care of himself. The four are young and need to be educated.

It occurs to me that this is an opportune time to increase the paid to the beneficiaries by our conference brotherhood. I think, matter is properly presented by pastor to his charge, we can pay the widow and the children of a beloved brother at least $1000.

I sincerely hope that each will take a few minutes in which to lay this case on the minds and of his people. "He that giveth the poor lendeth unto the Lord."

MILES OF STAMPS.

Some Idea of the Millions That Were Issued Last Year.

Uncle Sam printed just a few postage stamps during the year 1898. The number of 2 cent stamps issued during the year was about 2,500,000,000. Such a number obviously is beyond the grasp of the human mind, but perhaps the matter may be made more clear by putting it otherwise.

An ordinary 2 cent stamp is exactly one inch long. From this fact by a little calculation it is easy to discover that the number of stamps of this denomination issued in 1898 placed end to end would extend a distance considerably exceeding 39,000 miles. In other words, they would make a continuous strip of stamps, each one adorned with the head of the Father of His Country, stretching in a belt more than once and a half around the equator.

Of course, though the 2 cent stamps are those principally used, there are others. Enough 1 cent stamps have been issued during the year 1898 to stretch from New York city, by way of Europe and Asia, to Bombay if similarly arranged in one strip. All other stamps, as to production and sales, are of minor importance, comparatively speaking, but it is interesting to know that almost exactly one mile of $1 stamps was manufactured for the demand of 1898. Of $5 stamps the production was equivalent to a little more than half a furlong, or about one-fifteenth of a mile.

Now, if all the postage stamps printed by the United States government in 1898 were placed one on top another as neatly as might be without putting them under pressure how high do you suppose the pile of them would be? There is no use guessing; you would never get it nearly right unless you went to work to calculate it for yourself. The 3,506,000,000 stamps of all denominations printed during the current year—the statement, of course, is approximate—would tower to an elevation of 21 miles. This is more than three times the height of the highest mountain in the world—Mount Everest, in the Himalayas. If the same number of stamps was piled up in the form of the ordinary sheets of 100 each, it follows that the stack would be over a fifth of a mile high.

During the year 1898 the number of special delivery stamps sold was about 5,250,000. It is only reasonable to suppose that the average journey of the special delivery messenger is half a mile. Indeed that is an absurd underestimate, but let it go at that. On this assumption the total distance traveled for special delivery in 1898 was about 2,625,000 miles. That is a very considerable space to traverse, as may be realized when it is considered that a messenger boy, in order to accomplish that total distance, would have to go about 1,100 times around the world, or five times to the moon and back.

It appears from figures furnished by the postoffice department that the average person in Massachusetts, including men, women and children, spends $2.30 on postage per annum. New York comes second with an expenditure of $2.27, the District of Columbia third, with $2.16. Colorado is fourth, with $1.93, and Connecticut is fifth, with $1.80. The states ranking lowest in this regard are South Carolina, with 25 cents per capita; Mississippi, with 24 cents; Alabama, with 35 cents; Arkansas, with 37 cents, and North Carolina, with 41 cents.—Washington Star.

Wounded in Battle.

Dr. James Creighton of Louisville, who was one of the contract surgeons on duty at the front during the Santiago campaign, was in the city the other day, and in course of conversation somebody asked him whether much fear of death was exhibited by mortally wounded men.

"Fear is hardly the word," replied Dr. Creighton. "A good many mortal wounds did not produce any great shock, and in such cases it seemed impossible for the men to realize that they were going to die. The idea was monstrous, unnatural, inconceivable, and they raged against it. They felt that something could be done to save them, and they rebelled bitterly at the thought of being blotted out. It was simply a strong man's instinctive grip on life. Other wounds were so benumbing that the victims had no power to resist the inevitable. The nerve centers were paralyzed, the springs of energy snapped and the vital forces so shattered that they accepted death as do worn-out old men.

"Between those two extremes were all manner of gradations. There is no standard of behavior in the face of imminent death. It is entirely a matter of vital force. Very few men sent messages. Those who realized fully that they must die were silent, mostly, and seemed to be thinking. I am speaking, of course, of cases, in which death ensued very shortly after the wound, not of those who lingered in the hospitals." —New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Railway Rates in Porto Rico.

A short line is in operation between Yanco and Ponce, a distance of 22 miles, with two stations on the line at Guayanilla and Tallaboa. This railroad has an average annual income of $2,760 per mile, but it should be noted that because of the high freight rates, $2.25 per ton for a 22 mile haul, or 10 cents per ton mile, a great part of the freight carrying between Yanco and Ponce is performed by ox carts, in successful competition with the railroad. The freight rates of the ox carts are not much lower than those of the railway, and the speed is about the same. Besides this excessive charge, the railway does not offer the facilities which should obtain in this district, as it does not reach to the harbor of Ponce, where the great bulk of business is done. Bulk must be broken and the goods transferred.—Antonio Mattei Llaveras in Engineering Magazine.

CHRISTMAS IN GERMAN ARMY

At Metz, Where 30,000 Men Are Always Ready to March.

As all the world knows, Metz, the great outpost of the German army, faces watchfully toward the west. From its gates the road to Paris tapers through wall after wall of entrenchments, which end in the "stricken field" and heights of Gravelotte. Thence to the French frontier is only a shortish walk by the mounds of graves which cover the battleground. Between Metz and France is one long "glacis," unsailable by the invader, and when you have walked through one street of the old French city you can see that you are in the entrenchment of an army on a war footing.

Infantry, artillery, cavalry and the rest are all equipped as if for instant active service; the stores are all to hand; harness and carts lie ready by the side of the transport animals. "Not a gaiter button is wanting"—in half an hour 30,000 men can be marching out of Metz with all the machinery and munitions of modern war—with all the stores and equipment needed for a campaign. But still, in spite of all this, you cannot help feeling that Metz is no threat, but merely a warning, a reminder and a recognition of the instability of Germany's neighbor.

It is only at Christmas that this great frontier force has a brief holiday from the incessant work which is necessary to keep the continental war machine in working order, but at Christmas even the iron routine of the German army, sterner than ever on the frontier, gives way to the homeliness of the German race.

Every private who has the money may go home for Christmas. For those who cannot go home a little festival is held in the barracks, which seems characteristic of the simple affection for old homely customs which the Germans, most of all people, have preserved.

By order of the company officer the barrack room of each company is closed on Christmas afternoon, while a Christmas tree is decorated by the sergeant and his wife with lights and small presents paid for by the canteen fund are tied to the boughs. Near it stands a huge cask of beer.

The childish fiction of a surprise is innocently maintained, and each company is ordered by its commanding officer to assemble in the evening. At the appointed moment he leads the way, unlocks the door and enters the gayly lighted room, while a few singers chant an old nursery carol of rejoicing for the event which Christmas celebrates.

Then the officer, broaching the barrel of beer, drinks to the health of his men, proposing it in the words of an old formula of mediæval German, and then he leaves them to the sociability of toasts and talking and to the simple, childish pleasure of the loaded tree, which, heightened by mild but plenteous beer and tobacco, are the joys of the German people at Christmas.—London News.

Civil War Correspondents.

Of the regular correspondents who followed the army from 1861 to 1865 several notable writers have survived John Russell Young, George Alfred Townsend, whose battle pictures surpass everything of their kind in literature, is still a prolific contributor to the press. He spends his winters in Washington and his summers at his farm in Maryland, called Gaplands. George W. Smalley is the New York correspondent of the London Times. Henry V. Boynton is chairman of the Chickamauga park commission and a brigadier general in the volunteer army. Bull Run Russell is still writing in London. Henry Villard is a millionaire, with one place in Germany, another in Madison avenue, New York, and a third on the banks of the Hudson, near Dobbs Ferry. Whitelaw Reid is editor of the New York Tribune and was a member of the peace commission. Edward H. House lives at Tokyo and writes for several American papers. He is the Japanese representative of the Associated Press. Joseph Howard, Jr., still follows his profession in New York, as also do Murat Halstead, W. F. G. Shanks and several others. In fact, more of the men who became famous as correspondents during the war are living than are dead. They were nearly all between 25 and 30 years of age at that time, and it is only 34 years since the war closed.—Chicago Record.

A Woman's Voice.

Crusty old bachelors and henpecked husbands have often expatiated on the carrying power of a woman's voice, but the average man, with the memory of soft, sweet words lingering in his mind, has not hesitated to denounce such statements as pure fiction. Scientific investigation proves, however, that the woman haters were right. An English aeronaut has just registered on a very delicate instrument the human voice heard at different altitudes. He has noticed that the voice of a woman is audible in a balloon at the height of exactly two miles, while that of a man has never reached higher than a mile. There is no reverberation in the sounds which are carried to those altitudes, but the sounds once heard are gone forever. At this point, however, the aeronaut and woman hater part company, for the latter is haunted by the reverberations. Whatever else the experiment has proved, it has certainly confirmed the fact of the "penetration" of woman.—New York Times.

Telephones in Use.

The advance sheets of the consular reports present statistics showing that the world has in use 1,288,163 telephones, with 1,509,499 miles of distance covered. The United States leads, with 772,627 telephones, followed by Germany, with 151,101; France, with 27,736 (in 1894); England, 69,645 (in 1894); Sweden, 56,500; Norway, 20,378; Canada, 33,500; Switzerland, 28,346. Russia is but poorly equipped, with 18,495.

A Japanese Giant.

A soldier of gigantic stature and enormous strength has been presented to the emperor of Japan. He is Private Jamashita, of the Third regiment of the Nogoya Field artillery. He enlisted in December last and is now 22 years of age. His muscular strength is such that he can carry a fieldpiece on his shoulders and climb mountains with it where horses are not available. He regularly receives two men's rations of food and his uniforms are especially made to fit him.

THE PENNSYLVANIA DEADLOCK.

Mrs. Botkin's Life Sentence.

San Francisco, Feb. 5.—Judge Cook on Saturday rendered an opinion sustaining the jurisdiction of the superior court of California to try Mrs. Cordelia Botkin for the murder of Mrs. John P. Dunning, of Dover, Del., by sending her poisoned candy through the mails, which also caused the death of Mrs. Deane, her sister, because of Mrs. Botkin's infatuation for Mr. Dunning, and sentenced Mrs. Botkin to imprisonment for the term of her natural life in the state penitentiary, at San Quentin. The convict asserted her innocence.

A MODERN HAY BARN.

An Open Center Barn Frame Illustrated and Described.

Inventions change conditions. Once any high barn was a white elephant. Next the harpoon fork running up to a track under the roof peak made height an essential of the model barn. Then came the invention of the hay sling, that final perfection in unloading of hay. With the sling came the problem of waste of power, of time, in hoisting the drafts over the great beam or "tie" that in all old barns connects the tops of the posts at the upper ends. Not only was there prodigious waste of energy and time in hoisting these great drafts of hay to the peak before running in, but when it was dropped from the height, if at all green, it might pack so solidly as to "mowburn" at that place. Next followed the "open center" barn, and today there is no barn built by up date builders with a tie across the center of it, says an Ohio Farmer correspondent in illustrating and describing it follows a common and generally applicable sort of frame, possessing the advantages of open center, simplicity and great strength:

I have said that the modern barn has a tie across it. This is true, yet not in an accurate way of stating the facts. The barn must of course have a tie to hold the thrust of the rafters, else the roof would spread and the roof sag. Really, the tie is at the level of the mow floor, at t, as shown in the cut. From the strain is taken by the standing beam, b, to the short ties, c, c. With this arrangement the building is quite as solid as though the ties, c, c, were continuous. Perhaps I should have stated that the modern hay carrier has the fault of gripping the rope at any desired height and taking the load in whenever it is high enough to clear the mow floor or height of hay in the mow. Thus it is readily seen how convenient it is not to have the tie, c, cross the path of the traveling draft of hay that may perhaps be quite below its level.

When we built our barn, our carpenter was quite anxious for fear something would give way and the thing would break itself. I had no fears, yet I watched it curiously when first we began to lift the hay. Our barn takes in hay at the end, from outside, so that it is not tied together above at this end. It is often hauled up as much as 1,000 pounds of hay at a draft, and not the smallest fraction of an inch of giving was anywhere noted, although I watched it very closely.

Sweet Potato Slips.

The main crop of slips should be set out in June. Those set out in July are not apt to produce full crops unless they are of an early variety and the season exceptionally favorable. Vines from the first slips set out may be used if the supply of slips is short. Experiments indicate that there is little or no difference in a crop grown from pieces of vine or one grown from slips. The Southern Cultivator, the source of this advice, pronounces it a good way to put out vines to open a furrow on top of bed and lay vines along in it, two or three vines side by side, and then cover them at intervals, leaving portions of vines uncovered at usual distances of potato hills, say 15 to 20 inches. When hills are too crowded, they do not make large tubers. If the ground is damp, vines managed as above root quite readily.

The Form of the Sugar Beet.

Deep plowing is generally recommended in sugar beet culture. Except where the subsoil is very porous it should be loosened up with the subsoil plow. The proper preparation of the soil represents a most important feature of sugar beet culture. The cut, from a report of the Cornell station, shows the ideal form of sugar beet, grown in good soil with a porous subsoil. It also represents a less desirable form of beet, which may be due to a subsoil so hard or other conditions so unfavorable that the root has grown mostly near or above the surface of the ground.

Salting the Wild Carrot.

"Can anybody explain why our farmers are so reckless concerning the encroachments of weeds?" asks a Farm and Fireside correspondent. "The wild carrot might easily have been headed off if we had the right sentiment among our landowners. The only difficulty now in eradicating it is the fact that there is so much of it. It is easily pulled before going to seed. I would much rather deal with it than with the hawkweed, which is spreading through the fields of New York state and elsewhere. The best way of dealing with this pest, as well as with the moneywort, where it gets lodged in the lawns, is to sow liberally with salt. Buy a barrel or more of damaged salt, which you can generally find at any country store and obtain for less than half price. While the salt kills the weeds it fertilizes the grass. Apply three or four times in order to thoroughly reach every plant and root."

FORCING ASPARAGUS.

Simple and Profitable Ways of Doing It in the Field.

Asparagus is commonly forced by transplanting mature roots to some warm place, as in hotbeds or under greenhouse benches. Strong plants 4 or 5 years old are removed from the field late in the fall with as little damage to them as possible and stored in a cold place until wanted for forcing, when they are set close together in the beds prepared for them and covered with several inches of soil. In about two weeks cuttings can be made, and the plants will continue to yield for about six weeks. Since forced plants do not grow by becoming rooted in the soil, but are produced from material stored up in the roots the previous summer, when this reserve material is exhausted the roots must be thrown away and replaced by others. Commenting upon this method as a rather wasteful and expensive one of forcing asparagus, a recent bulletin of the department of agriculture enumerates various means which have been devised to force asparagus in the field, where it is so well established that it continues growth in the summer as though it had not been forced the previous winter.

A simple and rather common method of accomplishing this is to place barrels or half barrels over clumps of asparagus very early in the spring and pile fermenting manure about them, the warmth from the manure forcing the shoots into rapid growth. When the forcing season is over and danger from frosts is past, the barrels are removed and the plants continue growth in the open air.

Sometimes asparagus is forced by placing frames covered with sash over the plants in the field, the rows of asparagus being set rather close together. This is considered a very profitable method by many market gardeners.

Another method of forcing asparagus in the field is to dig ditches between the rows and fill them with fermenting manure. The surface of the bed may also be mulched with manure. Sometimes brick tunnels are laid between the rows and hot water pipes placed inside them to furnish the heat.

Tillage Unlocks Plant Food.

Writing of potato experiments at Cornell university, a correspondent of The Rural New Yorker says that for several years the experiment station has been making a careful study of tillage and the plant food of the soil. Potatoes have been grown upon a soil which carries far less plant food than the average soils, yet without any commercial fertilizers or barn manures crops have been grown which are far above the average of the state. The secret of the uniformly good results, if there is any secret, seems to lie in tillage. The soil, which is gravelly, is most thoroughly prepared before the potatoes are planted. The seed is deeply covered, and then intensive culture is practiced. Bordeaux mixture and paris green are freely used, and the foliage is preserved from attacks of the beetles and blight.

A HEALTHY POTATO PLANT.

The most important lesson which has been derived from the experiments so far is that complete and thorough preparation of the soil before planting the crop is of the utmost importance. No after tillage or spraying can make amends for a lack of proper preparation. The figure, from the paper mentioned, shows how a healthy potato plant should grow and how the tubers form in the soil when it is perfectly fitted. Wide, deep furrows were made and the seed pieces were dropped in by hand.

What a Quart of Average Milk Is.

A quart of average milk weighs 2 1-5 pounds and has a specific gravity of 1.032. The Rural New Yorker, in explaining what a quart of milk is, pictures one which contains 87 per cent of water and 13 per cent of solids and says: Of these solids the fat is lighter than water and the others are heavier. In making this quart of milk the cow took out of the food she had eaten 1.18 ounces of fat, 1.18 ounces of casein or cheesy matter, 1.76 ounces of milk sugar and .35 ounce of ash and mixed them with 30.62 ounces of water. This ash represents all that would be left if the water were all evaporated and the solids were all burned. A quart of milk, when clean and pure, is the most natural and healthful food that is known. A quart of such milk as we have pictured is equal in food value to 18 ounces of beefsteak. Whenever milk is largely used in any family, the bills for meat will surely be reduced.

WHAT A QUART OF MILK CONTAINS.

Items in Cotton Culture.

It is important to push along the growth of cotton in June as rapidly as possible and let its fruiting come on with slower growth at a later period, according to The Southern Cultivator, which says: Keep the plows going, therefore, and go over the crop at as short intervals as practicable. If the crop has been well cultivated, it ought to be clear of grass. If any be present, remove it at once, and do it effectively, so that no further hoeing will be necessary. So far as hoeing is concerned, a cotton crop should be laid by in June. The plows must run a good deal later of course. In going over with the hoes remove all imperfect, sickly stalks of cotton and let the food and moisture they would have appropriated go to stronger and more vigorous stalks. Weeding out poor stalks is one way of improving cotton, and on good land one stalk every 18 inches in drill will yield as much or more than more crowded growth. It is only where the season is short that crowding cotton does good by hastening maturity.

Amos Owen Cherry Trees!

The finest cherries and the largest cherry tree in the known world grow on the famous Cherry Mountain, near Ellenboro, N. C.

For the past few years trees from this famous orchard have been transplanted in the surrounding country, and has proved a surprise to the people by their rapid growth, enormous size, and delicious fruit. The trees grow very tall and spread out long, heavy limbs, and are filled with large, black, heart-shaped cherries. As many as five bushels have been gathered from one tree. The fruit is very fine in flavor, and suitable for canning, pies, drying, etc., and, ripening as they do in May and June, they come in when other fruit is scarce, and sell readily at ten cents per quart. Besides their great value as fruit trees, they make the finest of shade trees. Mr. John T. Patrick, chief industrial agent of the Seaboard Air Line, after examining them and seeing their great value as fruit and shade trees, says:

"These trees are rapid growers; they make a good shade, and yield an abundant crop of large, black cherries that find a ready market. One thousand trees will, in five years from planting, yield a revenue to the town that puts them out sufficient to pay town taxes, keep up the streets, and work the country roads leading into the town.

"It would be a big advertisement that would be worth thousands of dollars to be able to say 'our town has fruit-bearing trees enough on its side-walks and public parks to pay the expenses of the town and build good county roads,' and will give you a world wide reputation for thrift, enterprise, and good judgement."

Mr. Patrick did not only talk, but acted on his judgement, and we furnished to him and his agents over six thousand trees during 1897 '98 season.

The trees can be set any time from Oct. 20th to March 30th and it is a very rare thing for one to die. So rare that we gladly send another in place of any that die the first season, that have been carefully set out. We carefully pack all trees, so as to arrive in good condition. We can furnish them either by mail or express one to three years old. Small trees grow off better, and will make a large tree as quick as a ten-foot one, but we will furnish them any size up to ten feet high. We prepay all trees when cash accompanies the order. So it does not make any difference where you live, they will be delivered at the following prices:

One tree by mail.....	$ 0 25	Twenty trees by express.....	$2 50
Six trees by mail.....	1 00	Fifty trees by express.....	5 00
Twelve trees by express.....	1 75	One hundred trees by express.....	8 00

One tree free with each order, if you mention the Methodist Recorder. Send money by registered mail, post-office or express money order, or check, making them payable to FRANK BRIGHT, Secretary, and address:

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned from the Teachings of All Denominations.

Nature is an auctioneer, crying out over all the joys and sorrows of life, "Going, going, gone."—Dr. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago.

God's Laws.

The one thing we have to do is to find out the unutterable laws of God and conform ourselves to them.—Rev. Lyman Abbott, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.

True Teacher.

The true teacher defends his pupils against his own personal influence. He guides their eyes from himself to the spirit of truth that quickens him.—A. Bronson Alcott, Theosophist, Oakland, Cal.

Our Freedom.

We are all servants. Our freedom is simply liberty to choose our master. We are servants of sin or of Christ. It is for us to choose whom we serve.—Rev. Mr. Taylor, Presbyterian, San Bernardino, Cal.

God and Opportunity.

God desires opportunity. He wants human hearts for temples, for homes. He has need of our service to come in and occupy, and he will fill and use and bless. He is the need of the church to-day.—Rev. S. Merritt, Methodist, New York.

Seeking Guidance.

We should learn the absolute necessity of seeking the guidance of the Holy Spirit in prayer. We know not for what we should ask as we ought, but the Spirit helpeth our infirmities if we depend on him.—J. G. Klene, Presbyterian, St. Louis.

God's Controlling Law.

God, in creating man, so constituted him that he might be controlled by law. God provided the law by which that control is to be maintained. Therefore it behooves man to both know and obey that law.—Rev. C. C. Bowen, Swedenborgian, San Jose, Cal.

Memory and Education.

Memory plays too important a part in the education of the young. More stress should be placed upon observation, upon the power to describe what is seen, to reason from it and depict it accurately in words to others.—Dr. Boynton, Congregationalist, Chicago.

Faith.

Our faith must not only be one which is indispensable, accessible and helpful, but must be one which we actually live by and which controls our will power. Faith which we cherish in ideal moments and do not live by on week days is not faith.—Professor Felix Adler, Ethical Culture Society, New York.

The Newspaper.

Despite its acknowledged defects, we ought to thank God for the daily newspaper. Nevertheless let me entreat you to read discreetly and only the best. Cultivate the love of poetry. Cherish the products of genius and thus broaden the vision of your imagination.—Rev. George Adams, Methodist, Brooklyn.

History of All Nations.

It is the history of every nation that it flourishes so long as it abides with God, but its prosperity declines when it deviates from the way of the Lord. You who are representatives of a nation that has done so much for the Catholic church can take up in this new world the religious traditions of the old.—Archbishop Riordan, Catholic, San Francisco.

Ideals of Aspirers.

The aspirers have never and will never exchange their birthright for a mess of pottage. They will never be swerved from their ideals by the world's praise or blame. They will hold forever and ever that

It's wiser being good than bad,

It's safer being meek than fierce,

It's better being sane than mad.

My own hope is a sun shall pierce

The thickest cloud earth ever stretched,

That after last returns the first,

Though a wide compass must be fetched.

That what began best can't end worst,

Nor what God blessed once prove accursed.

—Rev. David Philipson, Hebrew, Cincinnati.

The Church's Greatest Problem.

The greatest problem to be solved by the church, the most important duty that today devolves upon ministers of religion is the correction of the seeming indifference to public worship displayed by all, but more especially by the young. Looser and looser the ties are growing day by day, feebler and feebler the power to draw and hold within the embrace of the church the thousands of educated men and women who are rapidly becoming the directors of the thoughts of their generation.—Rev. J. Nieto, Hebrew, San Francisco.

Theater in Modern Life.

We cannot overestimate the importance of the theater, as it deals with the application of emotion to problems of morality and practice. It has numbers of good characteristics in itself. For one thing, it is designed to please, which in itself is a moral aim. Laughter is conducive to health. Amusement is not merely defensible, but the want of it is a calamity. The right sort of amusement does not interfere with business, duty, sobriety, scholarship or virtue, but advances them all. It is unspeakably regrettable that there should seem to be a feud between piety and pleasure.—Rev. B. Fay Mills, Evangelist, Boston.

Our Everlasting Home.

The years may come and go as they will if we only see the golden gates in the distance and on the faraway hill-tops the cloud of witnesses who have guided us on our way and will take us by the hand when we wake from slumber. The heart need not beat like a muffled drum, as though we were sorry to leave these lower scenes, for if we are right minded we shall keep step to the echoing music of a better world and be more and more glad as it grows louder because we are getting nearer to the everlasting home. Our religion makes us content to live and ready at any time to exchange life for immortality.—Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

EDITORIAL

BLACKSTONE AND FARMVILLE.

Bishop Galloway will speak at the Methodist Church in Blackstone on Tuesday, February 28th, at 2:30 p. m., and at Farmville on Wednesday, March 1st, at 8 p. m. These addresses are for the purpose of giving information, and not for the purpose of taking a collection. Bishop Galloway is thought by many to be one of the most inspiring speakers on the Board of Bishops, and South Side Methodists should turn out to hear him.

ILLUSTRATED EDITIONS.

Beginning with this issue it is hoped to use one or two cartoons in each issue. The arrangement of the matter has been changed and certain departments have been put together on four pages, and called THE JUNIOR RECORDER. These pages will include the Sunday-School and Epworth League lessons for the second Sunday after publication, a column or so devoted to temperance and two pages of illustrated matter, selected from the choicest pages of the Ram's Horn—the liveliest and most aggressive fighter of the Devil in the world. These four pages are printed on a separate sheet and stitched in the middle of the paper and can be easily removed and carried to Sunday-school or given to the children while the other pages are used by other members of the family. In compliance with the request of many subscribers the Sunday-school and Epworth League lessons will be published ten days in advance, so that the lesson can be studied the Sunday before, and in case the mail is delayed and papers do not reach subscribers till after Sunday, it will still be in time for the next Sunday's lesson.

In pursuance of this purpose two lessons are given in this issue—one for next Sunday and one for March 5th.

Show the paper to your friends and tell them the price—only $1.00 per year for single copy, $1.50 for two copies, $2.00 for three copies, and $3.00 for five copies. Only 60 cents per copy in clubs of five or over.

ARE WE AFRAID?

What is to be done with Barbee & Smith and the Book Committee? The scandal will not down. The Atlanta Preacher's Meeting discussed the matter Monday morning and adopted resolutions demanding the resignation of the Book Agents. But these resolutions are ineffective. Barbee & Smith will never resign, until compelled to do so.

The time for passing resolutions demanding their resignation has gone by. This whole matter is now in the hands of the Bishops. If brethren wish to pass resolutions and write letters let them send them to the Bishops, demanding that the Bishops take steps to abate the nuisance and remove the scandal resting upon us.

If the Bishops are unwilling to assume so much responsibility in the matter then the following is a fair method for all parties.

Let the Bishops call a meeting of the General Conference to meet next January or February, and notify the various Conferences to elect delegates to the General Conference to represent the Conferences on this one issue. Then the matter will be settled in accordance with the moral sentiment of our Church.

Let us quit dodging. If we, as a Church, agree with the Book Committee and Barbee & Smith, let it be said officially, and then those who do not feel able to stay in a Church so morally corrupt can leave it. But if we, as a Church, condemn the conduct of these men, who have made us a by-word and a hissing, then we can say so WITH AUTHORITY, that cannot be ignored and despised as our resolutions have been, and we can take such action as will relieve us forever from this infamy which has been so long protracted as almost to be a part of our real history. Without repudiation of this affair no moral man will ever want to have the history of Southern Methodism written any further down than Jan. 1, 1898.

IF THE BISHOPS ARE NOT ABLE TO SETTLE THE MATTER, THEY SHOULD CALL UPON THE ANNUAL CONFERENCES TO ELECT DELEGATES TO A GENERAL CONFERENCE TO MEET NEXT WINTER TO PASS ON THIS MORAL QUESTION. ARE WE AFRAID TO MEET THE ISSUE?

RISHOP GALLOWAY AT WORK.

Bishop Chas. B. Galloway who has general charge of the work of raising the Twentieth Century Thank Offering of our Church, arrived in Richmond last Thursday despite the severe storm that had been raging for several days. The Conference of Ministers and Laymen announced for Thursday night could not be held, but a Conference of Ministers was held on Friday morning in Centenary Church. Bishop Galloway addressed the brethren on the general purpose of the work. Upon request Chancellor W. W. Smith outlined the Virginia Conference plan of operation. After an informal exchange of views, which showed clearly the determination and hopefulness of those present, the following resolutions were adopted:

RESOLVED. That we have heard with much interest Bishop Galloway's forcible presentation of the Twentieth Century Thanksgiving movement and pledge our hearty co-operation in the plans of our Conference Board for that object.

RESOLVED. That we shall be pleased to have the special aid in this work in our respective charges of our presiding elders and will welcome their active leadership.

On Sunday afternoon a mass meeting was held at Broad-Street Church in which Bishop Galloway made an eloquent and scholarly address, urging up on our people the thought of making at this time a great Thank Offering at the close of this century of marvelous Methodist growth.

At the close of the address, Mr. John P. Branch offered the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

WHEREAS, All bodies of Methodists the world over have set about to bring a great Thank Offering in gratitude to God for his signal blessing upon our Churches in the nineteenth century and the preparation for the great opportunities of the twentieth, and

WHEREAS, Our own General Conference at its recent session in Baltimore directed such a canvass to be made in all our Conferences for a sum of not less than $1,500,000, and

Whereas, We have heard from our honored and beloved Bishop Galloway, who has been charged by the General Conference with the leadership of this movement a clear, forcible and inspiring presentation of the privilege and duty of the Church in this matter, therefore

RESOLVED, That the Methodists of Richmond and Manchester will loyally and faithfully undertake to raise their proportionate part of the $98,000 assumed by the Virginia Annual Conference before January 1st, 1901, and will heartily co-operate with our pastors and special agents appointed by the Church to secure the same.

JOHN P. BRANCH, JOHN MORTON, C. E. BRAUER, W. J. HECKLER, JAS. W. BLANTON, D. R. MIDYETTE, G. I. HUNT, C. K. WILLIS, J. R. PERDUE, G. S. McRAE.

On Monday night Bishop Galloway spoke at Central, Manchester.

The following appointments were made for the next two weeks.

Tuesday, Feb. 21, Petersburg.

Wednesday, Feb. 22, Suffolk.

Thursday, Feb. 23, Norfolk.

Friday, Feb. 24, Newport News and Hampton.

Sunday, Feb. 26, Portsmouth and Norfolk.

Tuesday, Feb. 28, Blackstone.

Wednesday, March 1, Farmville.

Thursday, March 2, Lynchburg.

Friday, March 3, Charlottesville.

Sunday, March 5, Lynchburg.

Monday, March 6, Danville.

While at Norfolk Bishop Galloway will hold a conference of the preachers of that section, and while at Lynchburg he will hold a conference of the preachers of that section. It is his hope to bring the subject of the Thank Offering before all the preachers and laymen possible during his stay within the bounds of the Conference. HE IS NOT TAKING COLLECTIONS AT THESE MEETINGS, BUT GIVING INFORMATION.

"LET'S GET UP SOME SORT OF AN ENTERTAINMENT."

[REV. R. H. BENNETT.]

Of the several methods of raising money for the support of the Lord's work in the earth, there is one at least that is wrong in principle and damagin in practice,—and that is the fair, festival, lecture, concert, etc., method. The fact that this custom is widespread has no more to do with the morality of the question than the existence of 900,000 drunkards in America proves temperance a wrong creed. There is no warrant or precedent in the Bible for the Church of God going into the mercantile business. Merchandise is an honorable calling, but merchandise in the temple of God profanes the holy place.

DRAW THE LINE

Everyone agrees that some entertainments are not proper to be given in a Church. "We must draw the line somewhere," they say. But where? Shall we have a committee from the General Conference, or a censor of entertainments to publish an Index Expurgatorius? The only place to draw the line is outside of them all.

NOT TO GATHER LUCRE BUT TO SHED LIGHT.

No entertainment in the Church of God ought to have revenue for its object. The object of all Church services ought to be to do good, the betterment of the individual and the community, and not to make money. Sociables, concerts, lectures, etc., of the proper sort are not only harmless but necessary to all-round development of Church character, but they ought to be without entrance fee or goods on sale, and everybody ought to be invited without money and without price. If a lecture is beneficial or a concert improving and educative, pay the lecturer or company their price and throw open the doors to the public.

NO TAX AT DOOR OF GOD'S CHURCH.

No tax for admission ought to be placed at the door of Christ's Church. The poorest beggar or the neediest child should have the gates of God's temple thrown wide to them without condition. God is no respecter of persons. Christ himself was such a poor man He could not get into some of His Churches if He applied during a pay entertainment. Think of a door-keeper halting Him with "Twenty-five cents," or "A silver offering, please."

HOW THE WORLD SNEERS,

A Church devoted to fairs, festivals, etc., as a means of raising revenue, loses the respect of the worldly public as a spiritual agency and is pitied or condemned as a soul-saving institution. Think of the Church of the living God sneering for the patronage of sinners in selling its ice cream; think of the bride of the Lamb donning an apron and playing cook to any bar-keeper, gambler or other child of the devil who may happen to drop into the temple of God to buy a few oysters, when she ought, if obeying her divine mission, to be bidding only for their souls and commanding them with entreaties to repent.

THEY BREED DISCORD.

The judgement day alone can reveal the bad feelings, alienations and feuds hatched in and by reason of Church fairs, festivals, etc.; how many friends estranged, how many enemies arrayed.

DRIVE AWAY HOLY SPIRIT.

As Church entertainments for revenue flourish and prevail, the work of the Holy Spirit wanes or perishes in a Church. Festivals, etc., seem so inimical or incengruous considered alone with revivals. The Church noted for them is not noted for souls converted at its altars or for the spirituality of its members. This is a most alarming thought that ought to give pause. The Holy Spirit will not do His great work where such things are encouraged and where they hinder him.

NULLIFY LUTHER'S REFORMATION.

A mercenary spirit in our religious relations is profanation. The Church entertainment for revenue violates the very foundation principles of the Reformation. The inception of the Protestant Church was in a horrified protest against making merchandize of the forgiveness of sins—profanation of holy things.

CHRIST'S TERRIBLE INDIGNATION.

No wonder that we read of Christ's awful indignation as He beheld His Father's house profaned. "And He found in the temple those that sold oxen and sheep and doves and the changers of money sitting; (substitute other commodities and how like a modern Church fair it sounds!) and He made a scourge of cords and cast all out of the temple, both the sheep and the oxen; and He poured out the changers' money and overthrew their tables; and to them that sold the doves He said, TAKE THESE THINGS HENCE; MAKE NOT MY FATHER'S HOUSE A HOUSE OF MERCHANDISE."

It was in the "Sunday-school room," the fore court of the temple (where some people think an entertainment, not valid for the main Church room, may be held with impunity) that this cleansing took place. Moreover, these birds and animals were indeed in holy worship and sacrifice, and the money changer was a great convenience, for only Jewish coin was acceptable for the temple dues, and yet as we read the record, we can see the awful indignation of outraged love and reverence, with flashing eye and uplifted hand. Christ cleansed the temple here at the very beginning of his ministry, and again during the last week of His life. Thus His "first and last care was for the sacredness of His Father's house." (Next time we will suggest substitutes for Church entertainments.)

BISHOP POTTER ON SALOONS.

(BY REV. F. M. EDWARDS.)

The honored Prelate of New York has recently delivered a speech on "The Saloon a Social Necessity" which is very much to be regretted by every one that appreciates either the dangerous character of a liquor shop, or the great influence of an Episcopos whose reputation for talent and piety has reached as far as that of the distinguished preacher named above. How many advocates of liquor vending will quote the words of that speech; how many saloons may be expected to put in flaming letters and in a conspicuous place the motto: "The Saloon a Social Necessity."—Bishop Potter.

will not be known to the author of the unfortunate phrase. May we not hope that the honored man at the head of the Episcopal Church in Greater New York will quickly send out a document of recantation or explanation to head off the arguments of liquor men drawn from his hasty sentences. If he was misquoted by the press or his aims not well expressed by himself he would serve the cause of truth and virtue by spreading as widely as the speech has been read a plain and positive declaration of his desire to benefit the citizens of New York and elsewhere by the abolition of a commerce now engaged in the unholy work of making wives widows, children orphans, and all of them paupers and beggars.

It seems that the good ecclesiastical was making an argument that good citizens should supply places of rendezvous for the common people who are not able to pay fifty dollars for admission to a club as he and his friend Mr. Choate were able.

Mr. Choate (Ambassador to England) has spoken as follows:

"As I understand it, the special work of the Society which I am to present is its desire to resist the evil influences of saloons, which have been the curse of this city for so many years and continue to yet. There are more than 7,500 saloons, and each represents damage to families incalculable. I believe that more money is spent for drink in this city than for food or for the education of children. The law can attend to the reduction of the number of saloons but it cannot prevent the debauching of policies, disgrace to families and ruin of the community which is accomplished through them."

Following this plain indictment of the liquor evil, Bishop Potter comes forward to inform Mr. Choate and the public that under existing circumstances, i. e., until something else is given for the hours of leisure, "the saloon is a necessity so far as social intercourse, relaxation and refreshment are concerned. The saloon exists because you and I have given our brother no better thing. It is the truth. You may not like to hear it, but so it is. We who belong to the so-called favored classes have our clubs. But the poor man cannot afford the cost of a club, and so he frequents the saloon. Let there be no mistake, the man who keeps a saloon defends it, and justly, as the poor man's club. There are more poor than rich, hence more saloons than clubs."

Still further the Bishop is quoted as saying "what wonder that the toiler should leave his untidy wife and crying children and seek recreation in the saloon, where he finds light and warmth and sometimes music."

Two or three assumptions in these remarks of Bishop Potter are as remarkable as they are lamentable because coming from a noted and influential prelate. He assumes that the place of dissipation and vice is a necessity because man needs recreation and that either a club or the saloon must be the resort. If every man were able to belong to a club there need be no saloons, but otherwise otherwise seems to be his logic. Now, the fact is, that neither is a necessity to the moral, mental or pecuniary advantage of the real citizen if by "clubs" he means places of resort where guests are supplied with intoxicating drinks, and by "saloons" places where the same drinks are sold.

Intoxicants are not social necessities, unless it be true that drunkenness and all other vicious things are necessities. Now, if the club is divested of the drink characteristic, and is a place of moral and mental improvement, it cannot be compared to a saloon, but becomes just such a place as a Young Men's Christian Association, a Society of Christian Endeavor or an Epworth League will supply, and we are at a loss to know how Bishop Potter can say that the poor man in New York cannot find such, or cannot find an open Church or a place of some sort of religious influence. If the poor man desires a place at which to purchase comforts in food or raiment, is it a difficult matter to find stores? If he desires to take his family out for exercise or for social gratification are there no parks or neighbors that can be visited with profit? Are there not men who would quickly establish any kind of a cafe without liquor if such would be patronized instead of the saloon? But this cannot be with the license of liquor saloons.

If our children had found a den of vipers and had become infatuated with playing with them the first thing we would do would be to kill the vipers, and then give other amusements to the children. Let the same policy be adopted as to the places that are worse than a den of vipers.

Another curious assumption of Bishop Potter is that the poor man, unable to join a club, can afford to be a patron of the saloon, whereas the average visitant to the latter spends thereat many times more than the sum put down as the cost of the club, and then adds the loss of his immortal soul.

Nor can we see how there could be much moral advantage by going to a club if it be one in which the same temptations to dissipate are found as at the saloon. We are very sorry that the language quoted implies that Bishop Potter and Mr. Choate both have joined what the Bishop compares to a saloon. We hope that it is not true.

The assumption that untidy wives and crying children drive men to the saloon we can but regard as approximating a slander upon the average working man's family. The Bishop has (it seems to us) put effect for cause. What has made the wife's clothing so poor? What has caused the children to cry for bread? Why is there not light and warmth and music in the poor man's home? Why does he not with others say, "there is no place like home?" The visits to the barroom will tell the story. Abolish the saloon and let the toiler's money go to the support of the home and there will be very little difficulty in finding happy wives and laughing children to greet the laborers returning from their daily tasks. Then it will also be possible for "the something else" which the Bishop talks of to be carried to an advantageous position. But this cannot be expected so long as the saloon is a legalized educator for vice.

SALT OF THE EARTH.

(BY REV. GEO. H. M'FADEN.)

Ye are the salt of the earth, but if the salt has lost his savor, wherewith shall it be salted? It is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men.—Matt. v-13.

Did the reader ever know any salt that did or could lose its savor, and was thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out and to be trodden under foot of men? I trow not. The salt with which we are familiar, and with which we season our food, does not and cannot lose its savor, and yet remain salt to be used in some other way. It must cease to be by undergoing chemical decomposition and becoming resolved into its elements, and thereby cease to be salt before it can lose its savor. It is then no longer salt, but hydrochloric acid and soda. And yet this metaphor was not founded in fiction, but in reality, in something well-known in his day as salt of the earth. The fact is that the Jews of our Saviour's time knew of and had experience with two kinds of salt—the salt of the sea and the salt of the earth. The first was obtained by evaporating the water of the sea either by exposing it in shallow vessels to the rays of the sun for a considerable time, or by boiling it down and drying out the residuum. The result is the salt of the sea, and to this the passage above cited makes no allusion. It would not afford the metaphor here employed. The second was dug out of the earth in certain localities of Palestine, and was a sort of marl largely commingled with salt, which was comparatively cheap and very useful in the preservation of meats, but which once so used lost its savor and yet still the salt of the earth. The only further use it could be turned to was in making and repairing walks or paths for the feet of men. Now, I have known walks made of marl, and admirable walks they were, being firm and hard, and not easily made muddy by rain. It is this kind of salt, salt of the earth, that the metaphor of this passage is founded. Now, when Jesus spoke these words and in them employed this metaphor He, of course, addressed a Jewish audience who were familiar with the uses of this kind of salt, and by the use of this metaphor gave them to understand that they were in the hands of God for the sake of the good they could do to the Gentile world. For this reason they had been carried away into captivity and been dispersed among the Gentiles, and for this reason they had been returned to their native land. If they would not serve God's purpose in the good of the world in the first and chosen way, He would make use of them in another and more degrading way, even in becoming walks for the Gentiles. For, now they had lost their savor, their piety to God, and were incapable of answering His higher purpose, and would be soon cast out again from their native land as fit only to be trodden under foot of men. As He thus said, so it was and yet is. For more than eighteen centuries it has been the hard lot of the Jews to be trodden under foot of men by all nations in all lands through the Christian centuries, save by this nation of the United States in America. They have certainly had a long and rough experience under foot of men, and the end is not yet. In like manner the Christian Church is now used, and whenever any branch or part of it loses its savor and ceases to be of any benefit to the world, it also will be cast out and trodden down under foot of men. It is equally true that whenever any individual Christian loses his savor, his piety, he also will be cast out by God, and be trodden down by the world. This latter statement is necessarily implied in the first, and both are implied in what is here predicted and fulfilled in regard to the Jews. For in this respect the same divine policy is impartially carried out both toward Jew and Gentile, both toward communities and individuals. Hence those scriptural cautions:—Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.—First Cor. x-12. For if ye

Miss Greene—You sing in the Wesley Street Church, don't you?

Miss Crochet—Yess.

Miss Greene—Then you must know that gentleman over opposite. I have seen him going into the Wesley Street Church Sunday after Sunday.

Miss Crochet—Oh, yes; he fills in the intermission when the choir is not singing. He is the pastor of the Church.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON X, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, MARCH 6.

Text of the Lesson, John viii, 12, 31-36—Memory Verses, 34-36—Golden Text, John viii, 36—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

12. "Then spake Jesus again unto them, saying, I am the light of the world. He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." By reading the first verse of this chapter with the last one of the previous chapter we see something of the homelessness of our Lord many a time. While all go to their own homes He goes to the Mount of Olives, probably to Gethsemane, for He oftentimes resorted thither with His disciples (chapter xviii, 2). Early in the morning He was again in the temple and teaching the people. Now the self righteous Pharisees bring to Him a woman, whom they say was taken while committing sin, hoping that He will condemn her or proving Him to see what He will do, but He, by writing on the ground, would tell them where their names were written because they had forsaken God (Jer. xvii, 13).

31. "Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on Him, If ye continue in My word, then are ye My disciples indeed." The evidence of true discipleship is continuance, patient continuance in well doing (Rom. ii, 7). He is able to keep us from falling and to present us faultless, and He who hath begun a good work in us will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ. No power can take us out of His hand, but if we are truly there, truly His, there will be the fruit of righteousness manifest in our lives, there will be outward evidence of the life within. The light will shine unless it is only a painted light (Jude xx, 21; Phil. i, 6; John x, 27, 28). God will work in us those things that are pleasing in His sight (Heb. xiii, 20, 21). There are those who have a name to live, but are dead (Rev. iii, 1). There may be so little life that it is scarcely manifest, but where there is abundance of life (John x, 10) it cannot be hidden any more than you can keep a bright, healthy child still.

32. "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Then shall we know if we follow on to know the Lord (Hos. vi, 3). By nature we are in bondage to sin, the world, the flesh and the devil, and only He who is the Truth can set us free, but He is able and as willing as He is able. He does it by His word, by which we are not only born again (Jas. i, 18; 1 Pet. i, 23), but by the same word we are sanctified, cleansed, built up (John xvii, 17; Eph. v, 26; Acts xx, 32). From Gen. i, 1-4, where the Spirit moved and God spake and light came, all that is accomplished is done by the Spirit of God and the Word of God. From the new birth, when we began to live until we shall be made like Him, all is wrought by the Spirit and the Word. Many a Christian is in bondage to some besetting sin or weight, and only the Word of God can set him free, even as it is written, Where withal shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto according to the word (Ps. cxix, 9, 11).

33. "They answered Him, We be Abraham's seed and were never in bondage to any man. How sayest Thou ye shall be made free?" Their statement will not agree with Ex. i, 13, 14, where it is said that the Egyptians made their lives bitter with hard bondage, nor with their confession in John xix, 15, "We have no king but Cæsar." After the flesh they were children of Abraham—that is, they were descended from him—but if they were true children of Abraham they would do the works of Abraham and not go about seeking to kill Christ. Their conduct made it manifest that they were of their father, the devil, who was both a liar and a murderer (verses 39, 44). Cain and Abel were brothers, both sons of Adam and Eve, but Abel was a true son of Adam saved by grace, while Cain was of the wicked one (1 John iii, 12).

34. "Jesus answered them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin." In Rom. vi, 16, it is written, "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death or of obedience unto righteousness?" The teaching of John iii, 6-10, and similar passages seems to be that the new nature in the believer, that which is born of God, cannot sin, but the old nature or carnal mind cannot but sin. If one professing to be born of God continues in sin, then it is manifest that he is not a child of God, but of the devil. A Christian may, under temptation, stumble into sin, but he will not continue in it, while a mere professor, one not born again, though he may run well for awhile, will turn again like a dog to his vomit and like a sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire (II Pet. ii, 22). We are slaves or servants to that which controls us, whether it be sin or innocent pleasure or the life of righteousness. Our Lord did nothing of Himself. He only spoke what the Father taught Him and did only those things that pleased the Father. He was a perfect servant of God.

35. "And the servant abideth not in the house forever, but the Son abideth ever." In chapter xv, 15, He says to His disciples, Henceforth I call you not servants, but have called you friends, for all things that I have heard of My Father I have made known unto you. In Rom. viii, 15, 16, we read, Ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but ye have received the spirit of adoption whereby we cry, Abba, Father! The Spirit Himself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God. It is truly a great thing to be a servant in the family of God and to be able to say, Thy servants are ready to do whatsoever my Lord the King shall appoint! (II Sam. xv, 15.) But to be a child of God, an heir of God and joint heir with Christ—who can estimate this? Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God, and then to think that we shall be like Him and sit with Him on His throne and come with Him in His glory.

36. "If the Son, therefore, shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." No one can make us free but the Son, and He does it thoroughly. The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus makes us free from the law of sin and death, and this only by God sending His Son in the likeness of sinful flesh (Rom. viii, 2, 3). How much it cost to set us free! He also frees us from the fear of death, for He came to deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage (Heb. ii, 15). He frees from besetting sins and every weight and all that is unbecoming in a child of God. All those who are willing to be delivered He is ready to free. He does it when we trust Him and yield ourselves to Him that He may do it.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning March 5, "The Gates of Zion"—Text, Ps. lxxxvii, 1-7; c, 1-5.

"The Lord loveth the gates of Zion."

"Enter into His gates with thanksgiving."

Zion was the name of the citadel of Jerusalem taken by David from the Jebusites. It was a high hill originally, much like the Acropolis at Athens, the citadel at Quebec or at Edinburgh. It was made immensely strong by walls and battlements and towers. Here David brought the ark of the covenant and placed it in a tent prepared for it. Priests performed service, and it became the central sanctuary of the new national life, the former sanctuary at Shiloh being abandoned, and the brazen altar of sacrifice located at Gibeon.

When the temple was built by Solomon on Moriah, it was reckoned as belonging to Zion, and the fortifications of the two were made the common defense of the whole city. Zion was the religious name of the city as Jerusalem was its secular title. It was the special center of Jehovah worship, the distinctive and peculiar religion of Israel.

The term Zion means sunny or dry, perhaps in allusion to the natural character of the cragged height. It became the synonym of safety and happiness. As the citadel was the military defense of Israel's capital city and the abode of their great King David, so was Zion the abode of their great God and the hiding place from all evil powers. From thence God's law was given, and here He was to be praised. Because of this worship special regard for the place and for those coming there to offer worship is in the Psalms attributed to God—"He loved the gates of Zion."

The service of this sanctuary was far different from that found in the holy places of the surrounding nations. As their deities were the powers of nature or the evil forces of the world, so their worship was sensual, often vile and frequently cruel. They sought to propitiate fierce and vengeful gods or to indulge bodily appetites. The Jehovah of Zion was a God of justice, purity, holiness and mercy. Blood of beasts was offered instead of human life. The great festivals were feasting times. Songs of praise and thankfulness were part of the ritual. Cleanliness of body was everywhere to be observed, and this was to be a symbol and incentive to purity of desires and action. Goodness and kindness were to rule all actions.

The name Zion came to be applied to the people of Jerusalem and to the city as a whole. In the New Testament it is not often used, but in Revelation the term New Jerusalem is found, signifying the future abode of the people of God.

The church of Jesus Christ is often spoken of as Zion, and there is much reason for such use of the name.

Gates of Pearl.

The bronze gates of the capitol at Washington are of great value and of wonderful beauty, those of the Baptistery in Florence, Italy, are even greater works of art; but John describes the portals of the New Jerusalem as 12 in number and each door made of a single pearl. It is well to think of the gates which open on earth into the paradise of God's presence.

The gate of song is one of exquisite beauty. How many souls have passed by this door into the mystic grace of the Spirit and stood rapt in the very presence of the Master!

The gate of prayer is ever open. Night and day the redeemed of God pass in through it and find peace. Strong are the towers and firm the foundations around this entrance.

The gate of meditation is not so much used as the other two, but is full of quietness and wondrous visions of the celestial city are had by those who stand within its open doors. Vistas of unutterable glory and thrilling delight have made glad the souls of pilgrims since the days of Abel and Moses and Paul.

The gate of the scroll, where one sees God's word, the gate of the helping hand, where one learns the blessed helpfulness to others, and many another opening pierce the walls of the city of God and give entrance to its pleasures. "Enter His gates with joy."

The Unseen Hand.

In all times of prosperity the prophets of Israel declared that the blessings came from Jehovah. In times of disaster they found the cause to be the displeasure of God at the disobedience of the people. One may look at the law which governs events and close his eyes to all behind the law or one may take the Scriptural position and regard both the law and the lawgiver. In the recent events of our national history it is easy to say all has come about in a perfectly natural manner and is only what was to have been expected, but it is equally true and much wiser to discover the ruling hand of God working out the problem of human history. Why things happen is a deeper question than how they happen. Men may think they rule, but it is certain that God overrules.

Daughter of Zion.

Daughter of Zion, awake from thy sadness!
Awake, for thy foes shall oppress thee no more!
Bright o'er thy hills dawns the day star of brightness.
Arise, for the night of thy sorrow is o'er!

Strong were thy foes, but the arm that subdued them
And scattered their legions was mightier far.
They fled like the chaff from the scourge that pursued them.
Vain were their steeds and their chariots of war.

Daughter of Zion, the power that hath saved thee
Extolled with the harp and the timbrel should be!
Shout, for the foe is destroyed that enslaved thee!
The oppressor is vanquished, and Zion is free!

THE JUNIOR RECORDER.

RICHMOND AND BLACKSTONE, VA., FEBRUARY 23, 1899.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON IX, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, FEB. 26.

Text of the Lesson, John vii. 14, 28-37—Memory Verses, 28-31—Golden Text, John vii. 37—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

14. "Now about the midst of the feast Jesus went up into the temple and thought." It was the feast of tabernacles, and His brethren who did not believe in Him had in a sort of sneering way advised Him to go up to the feast. His reply was, "My time is not yet come," so they went without Him, but He went up later, and as He taught the Jews wondered at His knowledge and His teaching, as He had not been to their schools. His reply to them was, "My doctrine is not Mine, but His that sent Me" (verse 16). He took no credit for His words or works. He sought no glory for Himself.

28. "Then cried Jesus in the temple as He taught, saying, Ye both know Me, and ye know whence I am, and I am not come of Myself, but He that sent Me is true, whom ye know not." They had said, We know this man whence He is, but when Christ cometh no man knoweth whence He is (verse 27). They knew that He was from Nazareth and of humble parentage, and that was all they professed to know, but if they had been honest they would have said, We know that Thou art a teacher come from God (John iii. 2).

29. "But I know Him, for I am from Him, and He hath sent Me." He said again, "As the Father knoweth Me, even so know I the Father" (John x. 15) and again, "No man knoweth the Son but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father save the Son and He to whomsoever the Son will reveal Him (Math. xi. 27). In His prayer He said, "O righteous Father, the world hath not known Thee, but I have known Thee, and these have known that Thou hast sent Me" (John xvii. 25).

30. "Then they sought to take Him, but no man laid hands on Him because His hour was not yet come." Many a time would they have taken Him, but they could not touch Him till the appointed time. When they did finally take Him, it was because He allowed them to, and when He died He freely gave up His life. He laid it down of Himself; they could not take it from Him (John x. 18).

31. "And many of the people believed on Him and said, When Christ cometh will He do more miracles than these which this man hath done?" While some believed and some believed not and many who professed to believe turned back and walked no more with Him (chapter vi. 66) He kept steadily on bearing faithful testimony and doing the Father's works and will, sure that all whom the Father gave to Him would come unto Him (chapter vi. 37) and that He would see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied (Isa. liii. 11).

32. "The Pharisees heard that the people murmured such things concerning Him, and the Pharisees and the chief priests sent officers to take Him." They might have remembered that a certain king of Syria did his best to take Elisha, but in vain, or that Ahab did his best to find Elijah, but also failed; that Sennacherib would have taken Jerusalem, but could not. When will the enemies of God stop imagining vain things? Not till the antichrist, yet to be manifested, is destroyed, and satan shut up in the pit, and even after that there shall be enemies of God until satan is finally cast into the lake of fire and the kingdom comes.

33. "Then said Jesus unto them, Yet a little while am I with you, and then I go unto Him that sent Me." The time was short until He would give Himself up and let them take Him and kill Him, but even in death He would go to the Father, and after the resurrection He would in His glorified body ascend to the Father. For more than 30 years He had willingly absented Himself from His home in glory, bearing all manner of humiliation and scorn for our sakes, and soon He was to become our sin offering, bearing our sins in His own body on the cross.

34. "Ye shall seek Me and shall not find Me, and where I am thither ye cannot come." In chapter viii. 21, He says: "I go My way, and ye shall seek Me and shall die in your sins. Whither I go ye cannot come." In verse 24 of the same chapter He says, "If ye believe not that I am He, ye shall die in your sins." Now is the time to seek Him, for it is written, "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found," and all who truly seek surely find (Isa. lv. 6; Jer. xxix. 13; Math. vii. 8), but if the sinner will not yield to the seeking Saviour—for He is always seeking ever since He sought Adam hiding from Him in Eden—then there is a possibility of the experience of Prov. i. 28: "Then shall they call upon Me, but I will not answer. They shall seek Me early, but they shall not find Me."

35. "Then said the Jews among themselves, Whither will He go that we shall not find Him? Will He go unto the dispersed among the gentiles and teach the gentiles?" If they believed Him to be possessed of a devil, as they said, they could not think of His going to heaven to leave them, but even if He should possibly be a good man and go to heaven surely they would find Him, for were they not all going that way, at least in their own opinion? Anything more than a mere man they could not see Him to be and so they understood Him, not because they would not receive Him.

36. "What manner of saying is this that He said, 'Ye shall seek Me and shall not find Me, and where I am thither ye cannot come?'" It is not strange that these unbelievers could not understand His word, for even the disciples are heard saying on the night before His crucifixion: "What is this that He saith? A little while. We cannot tell what He saith" (John xvi. 18).

37. "In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink." Had they considered their own Scriptures they might have thought of Isa. lv. 1, or Jer. ii. 13, or the rock that Moses smote, but they were blinded. Their hearts were hardened, their ears heavy (Isa. vi. 10) because they would not see nor hear nor believe (Acts xxviii. 24-27). The fountain of living water was now in their midst, and yet they would not drink, for they preferred their own cisterns. In chapter 3 we learn how to be born of water and the Spirit, in chapter 4 we learn that we may be wells of water, but here we learn that we may be rivers of water, bringing health and life wherever we go (Ezek. xlvi. 9). Most saved people are content just to be born again, a few are willing to be well, but fewer still care to be rivers. It is for us to say how much of the Word we are to have in us (Eph. v. 48; Col. iii. 16).

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Feb. 26, "Palm Tree Christians."
Text, Ps. xcii. 12-15.

"The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree." Few objects are more beautifully majestic than the palm. The charm of the tropical landscape is greatly enhanced by the towering fronds of palms lifted high above the luxuriance of tangled jungles of shrubs and vines. So, says the Bible, does a Christian man appear in the mass of men. What dignity and power there is in a life like that of David Livingstone, of Bishop Hannington of Uganda, of Judson of Burma or of Chinese Gordon, of Havelock and the heroes of the Christian faith of many lands and times!

Whoever cares to know the truth can quickly assure himself of the fact that during the ages past as well as today the man who prospers most and the people who achieve most substantial success and progress are those who maintain the highest moral integrity. The man who disregards truth and the rights of others, the people who indulge in oppression, fraud and violence, may for a little while acquire an advantage over others, but in the long run they weaken themselves and will invariably fall.

Permanent wealth cannot be acquired by gambling or theft. Industry and frugality alone lay the foundations of stable fortunes. Experience teaches this, reason approves it.

Happiness is an element of all human advancement. No man or people are flourishing unless there are contentment of spirit and joyousness in the life. Happiness was never known to rest in the heart of one doing evil. No people can be prosperous and contented who are fraudulent and wicked.

Today in all the higher circles of trade the honest yard and honest dollar are recognized as necessities. Over all other considerations of self approval and the regard of fellow men rises the fact that the approbation of God is the most necessary thing to the human heart. He is pure and just and good. His blessing is on righteousness only. His mercies are over all, even the evil, but His promises of peace and prosperity are only to the upright in heart and life.

However iniquity may seem to abound no lie prospers and no fraud is stable. From the vantage ground of heaven we shall look back and see in human history that righteousness alone has been prosperous. "Trust in the Lord and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed."

What Is It Good For?

Thistles and thorns have their place and worth, but the man who cultivates them in hope of harvesting grapes and figs from them loses time and labor. So some folks have started in the Christian way, thinking it yielded fruits of a variety different from what it does.

MOVE OUT INTO THE LIGHT.

BY J. HOFFMAN BATTEN

O'er Judah's hills and valleys,
One dark and lonely night,
The pearly gates swung open,
And flooded earth with light.

There came the news from heaven,
That Christ, the Lord, was born,
The darkness all dispelling,
And changing night to morn.

Now over all earth's darkness,
With healing in His wings,
The bright "Sun of Righteousness,"
His blessed radiance flings.

O, weary, sin-dimmed wanderer,
Why longer dwell in night;
From guilt and self look Christward;
Move out into the light.

"UNCLE JERRY."

A TRUE STORY OF CONVERSION IN THE EVENING OF LIFE.

BY H. MARTIN KELLOGG.

THAT "history repeats itself," is so emphatic a truth, and so often demonstrated in human events, as hardly itself to need repetition. "Uncle Jerry" became "a living epistle" of redemption through Jesus Christ, "known and read" of all the dwellers along a certain country-side of Connecticut. He had been considered "a tough customer," and a reprobate. Ministers had severely let him alone, and pretty much everybody else did the same. A Sabbath-breaker, blasphemer, regardless alike of the laws of God and men, dwelling like a modern Esau! His wife had been a nominal Christian, but yoked to such a husband, her religious life was at a very low ebb. Finally, he reached his ninety-third birthday. On that day, a warm balmy spring-like day of February, he walked out upon his little farm "sayin' nothin' to nobody," as he expressed it. He began to soliloquize somewhat as follows:

"Well, well, I've a nice little farm, all my own. Don't owe anybody. Have two good cows, horses, all the pigs and poultry I want. Good health, my! What health for my age! There's old A—, laid up these dozen years, and not so old as I! There's B—. We were boys together, now he's good for nothing, wind all gone, doesn't know me nor his wife, nor anything. They have to keep him tied in his chair, and chair strapped to the floor! My! My brain is as clear as a lute. I can think, reason, talk, as well as ever I could. There's C—, well, poor boy, I attended his funeral last week, he's dead, gone sure, buried. How much we used to think of each other when we were boys together, until—, yes, until we quarrelled over that heifer that got into the corn. Well, that was a foolish affair. He cursed me, and I swore at him. I wish now I hadn't, he's gone first. What! Hold on! Must I go too? How much longer shall I live here to enjoy my farm? Not much! No! Can't! —Not much longer!

"Ninety-three today! Old! Old! How old? Yes. 'The oldest man in town,' they say! Whew! There was old Mrs. S—, lived to be 103, but she had to die, finally! Yes. So must I, too! Pretty soon, too, I fear! What! Do I fear it? How many times I've sworn No! But I do! Yes, I do fear it. Can't help it! Why! Yes. Of course I do! Old Mrs. S—, when 100, drove alone to church, and hitched her horse to the lightning rod, and went in,

'DOWN HE SAT, AND THOUGHT IT OUT.'

and told them all right in sermon time that she'd come to Zion once more before going to the New Jerusalem, and how she stirred them up! You see, her mind wasn't exactly right, a leetle off! Whew! When have I been to church? Not for many years. Old Parson H— said to me years ago, when I wouldn't listen to his pious talk, that the time would come when I'd stop to think of these things. Well! I declare! The time has come, sure enough! He's gone, too, and here am I, thinking and remembering! Wish I couldn't, but can't help it. Let's sit down on this rock and think it out!"

Down he sat, and he thought it out, long and well. The Holy Spirit came, spoke and entreated him. The hours sped by unnoticed, while he was buried in that reverie that became a great struggle on the battle-ground of his stubborn heart. Finally as the sun illumined the western horizon and began to sink behind the hills, he fell upon his knees and called aloud for mercy and pardon. Nor did he cry in vain. Peace and joy came. He arose in comfort, and with new aspirations and went into his house. His wife noting his peculiar, subdued manner, asked where he'd been. He replied: "I've been to the Lord, and got peace. I don't know what to make of it, but I feel happy! Come, wife, let's pray!"

And he immediately erected the family altar, and timorously, brokenly yet happily he prayed, as he never conceived of before. After supper, his neighbors came in, and hearing the strange news, went out and brought many more in, and he told them all the story of the afternoon, and held a fervent prayer meeting in that hitherto Godless home! He continued to hold them every evening for many weeks, declaring what the Lord had done for his soul, and urging all to repentance. And they came, crowded his house, and many came as returning prodigals to the Father's house, in repentance and faith.

That was several years ago. He did hope to live out a century as a monument of a Savior's mercy. I had many talks with him, for this is a true, unvarnished narrative. But five years later, when almost to the century point of time, the mortal could no longer hold the spiritualizing immortal life, and calmly and peacefully, as a babe goeth to sleep upon the maternal bosom, he fell asleep in Christ Jesus.

He marvelled that the Lord was so good as to save him and accept him at so great an age, and after so wicked a life. He specially urged the youth to come while in vigor and health and favorable circumstances, and not put religion off as he did. "The risk is so great," he said.

GOOD RESOLUTIONS.

MADE, AS USUAL, THE SUNDAY AFTER THE ELECTION.

BROWN and Jones are, as a rule, excellent friends. Their business relations are cordial and pleasant; they live in the same district; their wives and families are intimate, socially, and they are members of the same church. In spite of all this, a coolness grew up between them during the recent campaign. The one is a thorough believer in the platform and principles of the Republican party; the other, is a staunch advocate of Democratic doctrine. Each believed in and respected the honesty of the other in the matter of political faith, but the ardor of the campaign, and their intense partisanship had caused a difference between them that almost amounted to bitterness.

On the Sunday after election, they sat in church with their respective families, and listened, with nods of approval, while the pastor delivered a scathing denunciation against the rottenness that existed in the city government. Their eyes met when he declared that church members were to blame if the saloon keepers, gamblers and evil-doers in general, controlled the power and patronage of the executive, the council and courts of the city, and each acknowledged the truth of the statement while blaming the other for the failure.

Carried away by the intense excitement and enthusiasm of the political battle, they had countenanced certain questionable actions of their party associates, and had become familiarly acquainted with men whose names were synonymous with fraud and corruption.

"Their very touch is unclean," said the pastor, and Brown's shoulder fairly burned as, in imagination, he felt, once more, the impudent, yet hearty, slap of convivial fellowship bestowed thereon by the notorious "Boss" of a down-town ward.

Jones, as he listened, mechanically wiped dividual assured him of their party's success.

"It's a dead sure thing, Mr. Jones," said "Dinky," and the sentence echoed in his ears as an accusing accompaniment to the sermon of the pastor.

They met at the church door after the service, and cordially shook hands.

"Splendid sermon," said Brown. "I enjoyed it."

"Yes, indeed! so did I. It's the plain truth. The blame does rest on honest, respectable business men, church members and tax-payers. Look at the state of our streets! Look at them giving away valuable franchises without compensation! Look at the fellow they nominated for alder—"

"Well, well, I acknowledge he's a poor stick, but 'Bully' Boggs, in the Fortieth Ward, is a good deal worse, and you fellows elected him. The election's over, and I'm willing to join in any movement that will straighten things out and give us good government. The pastor says, 'Purity is higher and better than any Party.' I agree with him; and I heartily endorse every word he said this morning."

"So do I, and I'm willing to join in with all others on that platform."

"It's a go!" They shake hands again with great satisfaction.

And at the next election they will work hard to——?

LOVING SERVICE.

LADY was walking homeward from a shopping excursion, carrying two or three packages in her hand, while by her side walked her little boy. The child was weary; the little feet began to lag, and soon a wailing cry arose.

"I'm too tired! I want somebody to let me wide home!"

The mother looked about her, but there was no street car going in her direction. She took one of the parcels and gave it to the child.

"Mamma is tired, too, and Willie must help her to get home. She is glad she has such a brave little man to take care of her and help her to carry the bundles."

Instantly the little fellow straightened, his step quickened and he reached for the offered parcel, saying stoutly:

"I'll tarry 'em all, mamma."

It was only the old, old lesson that our Father is always teaching us: "Is the homeward way weary? Try to lighten another's burden and the loving service shall smooth thine own path."

THE STRENGTHENING HAND.

Amid the stress of a great battle, the Duke of Wellington ordered a young officer to charge and take a most destructive battery crowning a hill. The difficulty of this undertaking was appalling. The officer looked toward the spot where the order would take him, then, turning, to the Duke, said, "I can go, sir, if you will give me one grasp of your all-conquering hand."

The grasp was given, and the officer sped to his duty. Just so, the Christian will face his duty, no matter how appalling it appears. But he will not go alone or unhelped. Difficulty need not daunt him, for the hand which wields all authority in heaven and on earth is extended for his grasping, is energetic for his help.

THE BEST TEMPERANCE LECTURE.

It was on the street. A man recovering from a debauch was moaning to himself: "I must quit! I must reform! I must stop!"

"Don't say dat, boss," put in a darky. "Dat's no' good. Say: 'I am quit! I is reformed! I've done gone stopped!' Do it now, boss and' den you won't forget it."

THE BRIDGE WAS DONE.

This story, taken from our Civil War, was a favorite with Spurgeon:

Once when the Union soldiers were retreating from the valley of Virginia, they burned a bridge over the Shenandoah. Stonewall Jackson, who wanted to pursue them, sent for his old bridge builder.

"Sir," he said, "you must keep men at work all day and all night, and finish that bridge by tomorrow morning. My engineer shall give you a plan." Old Miles saluted and withdrew.

Early the next morning the general sent for Miles again.

"Well, sir," said Jackson, "did the engineer give you the plan for the bridge?"

"General," said the old man, slowly, "the bridge is done; I don't know whether the picture is, or not!"

Now, that is the kind of bridge builders, Mr. Spurgeon said, we want in the church—men to go right ahead with their own work, no matter what their neighbors are doing.

The only way to keep the spiritual thermometer at blood-heat, is to watch the fires of meditation in the heart.

AN EXPLODED IDEA.

THE COMMON FALLACY THAT ALCOHOL IS A FOOD.

Neither Does It Produce Heat Nor Conserve Energy—A Paralyzer and a Destroyer—Does Not Stimulate and Is Not a Tonic.

Food is defined as "anything used in the nourishment or formation of tissue" (Gould) and is divided into:

First.—"Albuminates or nitrogenous substances having the same, or nearly the same, composition as albumen."

Second.—"Fats, or hydrocarbons, containing carbon, hydrogen and oxygen, the proportion of oxygen being insufficient to convert all the hydrogen into water." Butter is a familiar example.

Third.—"Carbohydrates," containing the same ingredients, "the two latter elements in the proportion to form water." Examples—starch, cane sugar, milk sugar.

Fourth.—"Mineral water, salts, sodium and potassium chlorides, iron, etc."

Looking at this table of foods we can easily understand how our forefathers were misled into the idea that alcohol is a food because it contains carbon, hydrogen and oxygen. An incomplete study would naturally lead one to this conclusion, yet when we contemplate the changes which must take place in order that food may be absorbed and used for the nourishment of tissues we can easily understand that alcohol cannot be classed as a true food. In other words, it is now most generally admitted that the only way whereby alcohol can conserve tissue is by retarding tissue waste. As a well known author admirably states it, "All the alcohol in the world cannot contribute a drop of food, a filament of nerve, a fibrilla of muscle, a spiculum of bone to the human economy." Richardson says: "Alcohol contains no nitrogen. It has none of the qualities of the structure building foods. It is incapable of being transformed into any of them. It is therefore not a food in the sense of its being a constructive agent in the building up of the tissues."

Having exploded the idea that alcohol is a food, we necessarily disprove at the same time the theory that alcohol produces excessive heat, or, properly speaking, keeps up the body heat when a person is exposed to an undue amount of cold. It is not worth while to argue this matter further than to say that "north pole voyages, military expeditions and the diminished power of resistance to cold shown by drunkards have conclusively demonstrated that alcohol does not supply the place of other foods." Furthermore, those who use it even moderately when exposed to very low temperature will perish much quicker than their companions who are total abstainers.

It is no longer claimed that alcohol is a respiratory stimulant. On the contrary, its paralytic effect on the respiratory center of the brain is well known, and it has furnished the basis for many able theses in the last two or three years. But let us admit for the moment that alcohol is a vascular stimulant

Are we justified in administering it promiscuously in cases of disease? We see around us every day the effects of such administration of alcohol, and the medical profession cannot be held blameless for the 1,600,000 incurables which it is claimed are now to be found within our borders. Is it not time that we drop the use of this paralyzant, this destroyer of will power, of perception, of judgment and of reason, and by this means curtail at least a large number of the cases of insanity due to alcohol which are daily filling our insane asylums to overflowing?

Are there not other stimulants which are less dangerous, to say the least? It is a well known fact that a large part of the free use of alcohol, both by the profession and the laity, is due to the fact that it is easy to procure, easy to administer and is found in every medicine chest and in almost every home to which the physician is called. As a natural result it is the first remedy to be taken from the shelf in almost all cases of sickness, accident or emergency of any kind.

We cannot do better in closing this discussion than to make the following quotation from late articles on this subject:

"Alcohol is a poison and when taken into the system is not assimilated, and while passing through the body disturbs every physiologic process and is finally thrown off through the organs of excretion unchanged. Hence, if not assimilated, it cannot be a food, and as it disturbs every physiologic process it cannot be a medicine. Therefore, if alcohol is not nutritious and serves no purpose as a therapeutic agent, then mankind should be so instructed and its promiscuous use abandoned. This work can alone be done by the medical profession.

"Numerous scientific investigations by various distinguished authorities bear me out in the statement that alcohol is not a stimulant, but a depressant; is not a tonic, but an anesthetic; is not a food, for it is not digestible or assimilable. It impairs the senses, and that, too, in exact proportion to the quantity consumed.

"In view of such testimony as this, how is it possible for any one still to maintain the old error born of the ignorant and pernicious idea that alcohol is a food, a tonic, a stimulant, a rejuvenant, a conservator of energy? It would seem to be time that physicians were considering this question of the medical use of alcohol seriously and conforming their practice to the facts of science instead of the traditions of our medical forefathers and the formulas of obsolete textbooks."—C. L. Hamilton, M. D.,

Signing Pledges.

To a man raising objections to signing the pledge a reformed drunkard said: "Strong drink occasioned me to have more to do with pledging than ever teetotalism has done. When I used strong drink, I pledged my coat, I pledged my bed, I pledged, in short, everything that was pledgable, and was losing every hope and blessing when a temperance friend met me and convinced me of my folly. Then I pledged myself, and soon got my other things out of pledge, and got more than my former property about me."—Ex-

DR. GEORGE E. BOOKER.

Dr. George E. Booker died on Monday night, Feb. 13th, at his home near Cumberland C. H. He was buried here. The great storm kept his brethren from hearing of his death till too late for them to attend the funeral. Indeed it was with great difficulty that his immediate family were able to be present.

Dr. Booker's death was not a surprise, as his health had been feeble for the last few years, and his death had been reported once before.

He was born in Buckingham county, and in his childhood removed to Cumberland county. He joined the Methodist Church in 1848. He attended Randolph-Macon College at Boyd on and graduated in 1853. He taught in the Female Institute in Farmville for some time, but in 1859 joined the Virginia Conference, and was sent to Lexington; 1860 to Patrick. When the war broke out he went into the army and served his state faithfully till the end of the war. He then took up his work again and served Middlesex, Charlotte, Botetown, High Street, Petersburg; Elizabeth City, Suffolk, Union Station, Louisa, Albemarle, Southampton, Essex, Onancock, Cambridge, and Campbell. He was known from the mountains to the sea, and numbered his friends by scores at all his appointments. He was a man of more than average talents, had the manners and habits of the student, preached with ability and success. For more than thirty years he labored for the Master. In the last few years he was very feeble, but he could not bear to give up, and he did not take a superannuated relation until last Conference. He leaves a wife and several children, one of whom, Geo. E. Booker, Jr., is a member of our Conference, and stationed at Fairmont Ave., Richmond.

A CARD.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Acting on the advice of several members of the Conference, I have decided to spend my summer vacation in revival meetings. My work here at Vanderbilt for this season will close by the 20th of May, so that I can begin work the 1st of June and continue till the 1st of September. If any brethren of the Conference desire my services, they will please communicate with me at once, or at least not later than the 1st of March.

TALMAGE TELLS HOW HOUSEHOLD PERPLEXITIES BRING BLESSINGS.

The Manifold Duties of the Wife and Mother Are Not Fully Appreciated. Reward That Comes From Patient and Unselfish Service.

[Copyright, 1899, by American Press Association.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—This discourse of Dr. Talmage seems to open all the doors of home life and rouses appreciation of work not ordinarily recognized; text, Luke x, 40: "Lord, dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? Bid her therefore that she help me."

Yonder is a beautiful village homestead. The man of the house is dead and his widow has charge of the premises. It is Widow Martha of Bethany. Yes, I will show you also the pet of the household. It is Mary, the younger sister, with a book under her arm, and in her face no sign of care or anxiety about anything. Company has come. Christ appearing at the outside of the door makes some excitement inside the door. The sisters set back the disarranged furniture, arrange their hair, and in a flash prepare to open the door. They do not keep Christ waiting outside until they have newly appareled themselves or elaborately arranged their tresses, and then with affected surprise come out and, pretending not to have heard the two or three previous knockings, say, "Why, is that you?" No, they were ladies, and always presentable, although perhaps they had not on their best. None of us always have on our best. Otherwise very soon our best would not be worth having on. They throw open the door and greet Christ. They say: "Good morning, Master! Come in and be seated!" Christ brought a company of friends with him, and the influx of so many city visitors, you do not wonder, threw the country home into some perturbation. I suppose the walk from the city had been a keen appetizer. The kitchen department that day was a very important department, and I think as soon as Martha had greeted her guests she went to that room. Mary had no anxiety about the dinner. She had full confidence that her sister Martha could get up the best dinner in Bethany, and she practically said: "Now, let us have a division of labor. Martha, you cook and I'll sit down and learn."

The same difference you now sometimes see between sisters. There is Martha, industrious, painstaking, a good manager, ever inventive of some new pastry, discovering something in household affairs. Here is Mary, fond of conversation, literary, so full of questions of ethics she has no time to discuss questions of household welfare. It is noon. Mary is in the parlor. Martha is in the kitchen. It would have been better for them to have divided the toil, and then they could have divided the opportunity of listening to Christ. But Mary monopolizes Christ, while Martha swelters before the fire. It was very important that they have a good dinner that day, for Christ was hungry, and he did not often have luxurious entertainment. Alas, me, if all the responsibility of that entertainment had rested with Mary! What a repast they would have had! But something went wrong in the kitchen. Either the fire would not burn or the bread would not bake or something was turned black that ought to have been only turned brown, or Martha scalded herself, and, forgetting all the proprieties of the occasion, with besweated brow she rushed out of the kitchen into the parlor, perhaps with tongs in one hand and pitcher in the other, and she cried out: "Lord, dost thou not care that my sister has left me to serve alone? Bid her therefore that she help me." Christ scolded not a word. If it were scolding, I would rather have him scold me than anybody else bless me. There was nothing acerbic in the Saviour's reply. He knew that Martha had been working herself almost to death to get him something to eat, and he appreciated her kindness, and he practically said: "My dear woman, do not worry. Let the dinner go. Sit down here on this couch beside your younger sister, Mary. Let us talk about something else. Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things, but one thing is needful."

As Martha throws open the door I look in today, and I see a great many household anxieties, perplexities, fatigues and trials, and about them I am going to speak if the Lord of Mary and Martha and Lazarus will help me by his grace.

Household Perplexities and Trials.

As I look into that door, in the first place, I see the trial of nonappreciation. That was what made Martha so vexed at Mary. Mary, the younger sister, had no proper estimate of the elder sister's fatigue. Just as now men having annoyances of store and factory and shop, or at the Stock Exchange, come home at night and hear of some household annoyance, and they say: "Oh, that's nothing! You ought to be in a factory a day and have 10 or 15 or 20 or 100 subordinates. Then you would know something about annoyance and trouble." Oh, man, let me tell you that a wife and a mother has to conduct at the same time a university, a clothing establishment, a restaurant, a laundry, a library, and has to be health officer, police and president of the whole realm! She has to do a thousand things, and to do them well, in order to make things go smoothly, and that is what puts the awful tax on a woman's nerves and a woman's brain. I know there are exceptions to the rule. Sometimes you will find a woman who can sit in the armchair of the library all day without any anxiety, or tarry on the belated pillow, and all the cares of the household are thrown upon servants who have large wages and great experience; but that is the exception. I speak of the great masses of housekeepers, to whom life is a struggle, and who at 30 years of age look as though they were 40. The fallen at Chalons and Ansterlitz and Gettysburg and Waterloo are a small number in comparison with those who have gone down under the Armageddon of the kitchen. Go out to the country and look over the epitaphs on the tombstones. They are all beautiful and poetic, but if the tombstones could tell the truth thousands of them would say, "Here lies a woman who was killed by too much mending and sewing and baking and scouring and scrubbing," and the weapon with which she was killed was a broom or a sewing machine or a ladle.

The housewife rises in the morning half rested. At an irrevocable hour she must have the morning repast ready. What if the fire will not burn, what if the clock stop, what if the marketing has not been sent in? No matter that; it must be ready at the irrevocable hour. Then the children must be got ready for school. But what if the garments be torn? What if they do not know their lessons? What if the hat or sash is lost? They must be ready. Then you have the duty of the day, or perhaps several days, to plan out. But what if the butcher sends meat unmasticable? What if the grocer furnishes your articles of food adulterated? What if the piece of silver be lost, or a favorite chalice be broken, or the roof leak, or the plumbing fail, or any one of a thousand things occur? No matter. Everything must be ready. The spring is coming, and there must be revolution in the family wardrobe, or the autumn is at hand, and you must shut out the northern blast. But how if the moth has preceded you to the chest? How if the garments of the last year do not fit the children now? What if all the fashions have changed?

Relief For Ailments.

The house must be an extemporized apothecary's shop or dispensary; there must be relief for all styles of ailments; something to loosen the croup, something to cool the burn, something to poultice the inflammation, something to silence the jumping tooth, something to soothe the carache. Oh, man of business, if you had as many cares as that you would be a fit candidate for an insane asylum! If Martha make under such circumstances an impatient rush on the library or the drawing room, be patient, be lenient. Oh, my sister, though my words may not arouse in many souls any appreciation of your toil, let me assure you from the kindness with which Jesus Christ met Martha that he appreciates all your trials, from garret to cellar and the God of Deborah, and Miriam, and Abigail is the God of the housekeepers! Christ never married, that he might be the especial friend and confidant of a whole world of troubled womanhood. I blundered. Christ was married. The Bible says the church is "the Bride, the Lamb's wife," and that makes me know that a woman has a right to go to Christ with all her annoyances and perplexities and fatigues, for by his oath of conjugal fidelity he hath sworn to sympathize. George Herbert put the thought in three or four verses, quaint and peculiar, but strong, and in one verse saying: The servant by this clause makes drudgery divine;

Who sweeps a room as for thy laws makes this and the action fine.

A young woman of brilliant education and prosperous surroundings was called down stairs to help in the absence of the servant, and there was a ring at the bell, and she went to the door and an admirer entered. He said: "I thought I heard music in the house. Was it on the piano or the harp?" She said: "Neither; it was a frying pan accompanying to a gridiron! In other words, I was called down stairs to help. I suppose some time I shall have to learn, and I have begun now." When will the world learn that every kind of work that is right is honorable?

As Martha opens the door I look in and I also see the trial of severe economy. Nine hundred and ninety-nine households out of a thousand are subjected to it either under the greater or less stress of circumstances. It is especially so when a man smokes expensive cigars and dines at costly restaurants. He will be very apt to enjoin severe economy at home. That is what kills thousands of women—the attempt to make $5 do the work of $7. It is amazing how some men dole out money to the household. If you have not got the money, say so. If you have, be cheerful in the expenditure. Your wife will be reasonable. "How long does the honeymoon last?" said a young woman about to enter the married state to her mother. The mother answered, "The honeymoon lasts until you ask your husband for money." "How much do you want?" "A dollar." "A dollar! Can't you get along with 50 cents? You are always wanting a dollar." This 30 years' war against high prices, this everlasting attempt to bring the outgo within the income, has exhausted multitudes of housekeepers. Let me say to such, it is a part of the divine discipline. If it were best for you, all you would have to do would be just to open the front windows and the ravens would fly in with food, and after you had baked 50 times from the barrel in the pantry, like the barrel of Zarephath, the barrel would be full, and the children's shoes would last as long as the shoes of the Israelites in the wilderness—40 years.

Will Make the Contrast Brighter.

Oh, my friends, all these trials and fatigues of home life are to prepare you for heaven, for they will make that the brighter in the contrast! A dying soldier was asked by a friend, "Have you any message to send to your father?" "Yes," said he; "tell him I have gone home." "Well," said the friend, "have you any message to send to your wife?" "Yes; tell her I have gone home." "You have other friends. Would you like to send a message to them?" "Yes; give them the same message. They will understand it. Tell them I have gone home." And that heavenly home will compensate, will fully atone, for all the hardships and the trials and the annoyances and the vexations of the earthly home. In that land they never hunger, and consequently there will be no nuisance of catering for appetite. In that land of the white robes they have no mending to do, and the air of that billy country makes them all well. No rent to pay there. Every man owns his own house, and a mansion at that. It will not be so great a change to step into the chariot of the skies if on earth you rode. It will not be so great a change if on earth you had all luxuries and satisfactions. It will not be so great a change for you to sit down on the banks of the river of life if on earth you had a country seat.

But, oh, the joy for the weary feet when they step into the celestial equipage, and, oh, the joy of those to whom home was a martyrdom on earth when they go into that home where they will never have to do anything they do not want to do! What a change from the time she put down the rolling pin to the time she took up the scepter! If Chatsworth Park and the Vanderbilt mansion were lifted into the celestial city, they would be looked at as uninhabitable rookeries, and Lazarus himself would be ashamed to be seen going in or out of them, so great are the palaces awaiting all God's dear children, and so much grander the heavenly architecture than the earthly. It is often not only the toil of the housekeeping, but it is the sickness and the sorrow that go along. It is a simple fact that one-half of the women of the land are invalids. The mountain lass who has never had an ache or a pain may consider household work of no very great weariness, and at the eventide may skip out to the fields and drive the cattle home, and until 10 o'clock at night may fill the cabin with laughing racket; but, oh, to do the hard work of the household with a shattered constitution—after six weeks' whooping cough has raged in the household, making the nights as sleepless as the days—then it is not so easy! And then this work of the house has often to be undertaken when the nerves are shattered with some bereavement that has put desolation in every room of the house and sent the crib into the garret because its occupant has been hushed into a slumber that needs no mother's lullaby. Oh, it was a great deal easier for her to brood the whole flock than to brood a part of them now that the rest have gone! You may tell her that her departed children are in the bosom of a loving God, but, motherlike, she will brood both flocks.

putting one wing of care over the flock in the house, putting the other wing of care over the flock in the grave. Nothing but the old fashioned religion of Jesus Christ can take a woman happily through home trials. All these modern religions amount to nothing. They do not help. They do not comfort when there is a dead babe in the house. Away with them and give us the old fashioned religion of Jesus Christ, that has comforted so many in the days of sorrow and trouble!

Romance and novelty may for a little while seem to be a substitute. The marriage day has only gone by, just gone by, and all household cares are atoned for by the joy of being together and by the fact that when it is late at night it is not necessary to discuss whether it is time to go. All the mishaps of the newly married couple in the way of household affairs are not matters of anxiety or reprehension, but merriment. The loaf of bread turned into a geological specimen, the slushy custards and jaundiced and measly biscuits. Oh, it is a very bright sunlight that falls upon the cutlery and mantel ornaments of a new home! Romance and novelty will do for a little while, but after awhile the romance is all gone and there is a loaf to be made, a loaf that cannot be sweetened by any earthly condiments and cannot be flavored with any earthly flavors and cannot be baked in any ordinary oven. It is the loaf of domestic happiness. All the ingredients from heaven. Fruit from the tree of life and sweetened with the new wine of the kingdom and baked in the oven of home trial. God only can make that loaf. You can cut it, but it takes God to make it.

Solomon wrote out of his own miserable experience—he had a wretched home; no man can be happy with two wives, much less with 700, and out of his wretched experience he wrote—"Better is a dinner of herbs where love is than a stalled ox and hatred therewith." Oh, the responsibilities of housekeepers! Kings by their indigestion have lost empires and generals through indigestion have lost battles. One of the great statisticians says that out of 1,000 unmarried men 30 were criminals, and out of 1,000 married men only 18 were criminals, showing the power of home. And, oh, the responsibility resting upon housekeepers! By the food they provide, by the couch they spread, by the books they introduce, by the influence they bring around the home, they are helping to decide the physical, the intellectual, the moral, the eternal welfare of the human race. Oh, the responsibility!

That woman sits in the house of God today perhaps entirely unappreciated. She is the banker of her home, the president, the cashier, the teller, the discount clerk, and ever and anon there is a panic. God knows the anxieties and the cares, and he knows that this is not a useless sermon, but that there are multitudes of hearts waiting for the distillation of the divine mercy and solace in their hour of trials and their home duties and their own fatigues. The world hears nothing about them. They never speak about them. You could not with the agonies of an inquisition bring the truth out of them. They keep it still. They say nothing. They endure and will until God and the judgment right their wrongs. Oh, but says some sister, "Are you not trying to show that all a woman's life at home is one of self sacrifice?" Yes, my sister, and that is the only kind of life worth living.

ing. That has been the life of Florence Nightingale; that was the life of Edward Payson; that was the life of the Lord Jesus Christ; that is the life of every man or woman that is happy—a life of self sacrifice. Those people living for themselves—are they happy? Find me one. I will give you all the nations of the earth to find me one. Not happy—no, not happy.

Self Sacrifice Brings Happiness.

It is the self sacrificing people that are happy, for God pays so largely, so gloriously, so magnificently, in the deep and eternal satisfactions of the soul. Self sacrifice! We all admire it in others. How little we exercise of it! How much would we endure? How much would we risk for others? A very rough schoolmaster had a poor lad that had offended the laws of the school, and he ordered him to come up. "Now," he said, "you take off your coat instantly and receive this whip." The boy declined, and more vehemently the teacher said: "I tell you, now, take off your coat. Take it off instantly." The boy again declined. It was not because he was afraid of the lash; he was used to that in his cruel home. But it was for shame. He had no undergarments, and when at last he removed his coat there went up a sob of emotion all through the school as they saw why he did not wish to remove his coat, and as they saw the shoulder blades almost cutting through the skin. As the schoolmaster lifted his whip to strike a roseate, healthy boy leaped up and said: "Stop, schoolmaster; whip me. He is only a poor chap; he can't stand it. Whip me." "Oh," said the teacher, "it's going to be a very severe scourging! But if you want to take the position of a substitute, you can do it." The boy said: "I don't care; whip me. I'll take it; he's only a poor chap. Don't you see the bones almost come through the flesh? Whip me." And when the blows came down on the boy's shoulders, this healthy, robust lad made no outcry; he endured it all uncomplainingly. We all say "Bravo!" for that lad. Bravo! That is the spirit of Christ! Splendid! How much scourging, how much chastisement, how much anguish will you and I take for others? Oh, that we might have something of that boy's spirit! Aye, that we might have something of the spirit of Jesus Christ; for in all our occupations and trades and businesses, and all our life—home life, foreign life—we are to remember that the sacrifice for others will soon be over.

1. Instruction. REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teacher's Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Practice School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent or Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

Christianity without revivals is no more God's Christianity than weather without storms is American weather.—Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, Presbyterian, New York.

Doing Good Deeds.

Doing good is the burden we are to take upon us, so with the right yoke and the burden well adjusted we will find rest.—Rev. L. M. Hartley, Methodist, San Francisco.

Our Duty Toward Young Men.

It is our duty to appreciate our young men. They carry the future in them. We see very little ways ahead in judging and weighing our young men.—Rev. Dr. Gregg, Presbyterian, Brooklyn.

Gaining the World.

Jesus does not set forth a choice of worlds nor does he imply it. It is a contrast of world over against man. The caution is not against gaining the world, but against gaining it at the expense of personal soul.—Rev. B. E. Howard, Congregationalist, Los Angeles.

A Live Church.

A living church is always an inspirational church, a church with power to make clear the thoughts and right the hearts of men. A church without a message is already dead. A church through which the living God speaks by living words to living men is a live church.—Rev. L. M. Powers, Universalist, Buffalo.

The Protestant World.

In the Protestant world there is no such thing as unity of faith, worship or authority. All recognize the Bible, all draw their doctrines from the Bible, and thus the inspired word of God to one affirms the Trinity, to another denies it; to one demands infant baptism, to another forbids it.—Rev. Father J. M. Haveson, Catholic, Dallas.

Sweetest Songs.

The sweetest songs we sing are composed by those whose hearts are surcharged with emotions of joy or of sorrow. Songs composed under such inspiration can never grow old. Years may pass over them, but their freshness is as the morning breeze in springtime.—Rev. J. Knox Montgomery, Presbyterian, Cincinnati.

Past and Future.

The past is gone, the future is ours. Let us thank God for the grace of the past and let our prayers go up for the faults that we have committed. Let us so live that after all is passed we may be found ready to receive in the coming kingdom on high not the greetings of time but the blessings of eternity.—Archbishop Riordan, Catholic, San Francisco.

Man In God's Image.

Man, as a mental and moral being, is in God's image. He is capable of divine inspiration. In God he lives and moves and has his being. When he uses his power of reasoning, when he exercises his life of moral discipline, he moves by comes into fellowship with God, and God imparts to him his truth.—Rev. Henry W. Pinkham, Baptist, Denver.

Work of the Eternal Spirit.

"God's in his heaven; all's well with the world." He has not forsaken his people. There is more good in the world than we see or dream of. The Eternal Spirit is at work below the reach of human eyes, and even in a nation apparently given up to idolatry there is a host of saints whose hearts are still true to God.—Dr. C. E. Jefferson, Broadway Tabernacle, New York.

A Good Conviction.

The thought of God as your father is uplifting. The conviction that life can be molded into excellence if you keep your hand in his hand and follow his commands enlarges the soul, gives you endurance, cheerfulness, comfort and encouragement. The religion which offers you that conviction is the only true religion.—Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

Penance and Heaven.

The end of the church in preaching penance and mortification is that man may attain heaven. The worldly wise rebel against mortification of the flesh and self denial. They fly in the face of Christ himself, and they deny truths which he himself declared without the slightest chance of doubt when he said, "Unless you do penance you shall all likewise perish."—Rev. Father Mylott, Catholic, Cleveland.

Gifts of Godliness.

Golden tomorrows are not alone the gift of godliness. Pagans and atheists prophesy and hope for better things, but only as a reaction and contrast to the disastrous results of today. But godliness prophesies of the life which is to come and claims its fullness because it is conscious of the sweep and power of law with which life has been identified, and because it feels the uplifting of moral forces which can only eventuate in what is higher and better.—Rev. C. E. Patillo, Methodist, St. Louis.

Christianity's Glory.

It is the glory of Christianity that it solves the spiritual contradictions of the human soul. It furnishes a spiritual perspective that projects experience on the plane of eternity and bids hope and faith rise above the routine of existence with its doubts and defeats, because the present and the visible are but parts of a larger history in which not man only but the whole creation shall rise to the liberty of the "sons of God." And not alone in the outward life and pain and incompleteness but chiefly in the soul's inner experiences is this reconciliation made complete. Instead of sin there is a sense of pardon, and in place of alienation from God there is a partaking of the divine nature that brings the ideal into touch with the actual, and in the largeness of that love life we find the true heritage of the freeborn. All this and much more is the content of that familiar word "salvation," which is the keynote of Christian teaching and the basis of human aspiration.—Rev. S. G. Smith, People's Church, St. Paul.

WE ARE SEVEN.

(WILLIAM WORDSWORTH.)

I met a little cottage girl,
She was eight years old, she said;
Her hair was thick with many a curl
That clustered 'round her head.

She had a rustic, woodland air,
And she was mildly clad;
Her eyes were fair, and very fair,—
Her beauty made me glad.

Sisters and brothers, little maid,
How many may you be?
"How many? Seven in all," she said,
And wondering, looked at me.

"And where are they? I pray you tell."
She answered, "Seven are we,
And two of us at Conway dwell,
And two are gone to sea.

"Two of us in the Church-yard lie,
My sister and my brother,
And in the Church-yard cottage I Dwell near them with my mother."

"You say that two at Conway dwell,
And two are gone to sea,
Yet ye are seven! I pray you tell,
Sweet maid, how this may be."

Then did the little maid reply,
"Seven boys and girls are we;
Two of us in the Church-yard lie,
Beneath the Church-yard tree."

"You run about, my little maid,
Your limbs they are alive;
If two are in the Church-yard laid,
Then ye are only five."

"Their graves are green, they may be seen,"
The little maid replied,
"Twelve steps, or more, from mother's door,
And they are side by side.

"My stockings there I often knit,
My kerchief there I hem,
And there upon the ground I sit
And sing a song to them.

"And often after sunset, sir,
When it is light and fair
I take my little porringer,
And eat my supper there.

"The first that died was sister Jane;
In bed she mourning lay
Till God released her from her pains,
And then she went away.

"So in the Church-yard she was laid,
And when the grass was dry,
Together round her grave we played,
My brother John and I.

"And when the ground was white with snow,
And I could run and slide, (snow)
My brother John was forced to go,
And he lies by her side."

"How many are you then?" said I,
"If they two are in Heaven?"
Quick was the little maid's reply,
"O' master, we are seven,"

"But they are dead; these two are dead!
Their spirits are in Heaven!"

'Twas throwing words away, for still
The little maid would have her will,
And said, "Nay, we are seven."

EDITORIAL

WHAT CONCLUSION IS IN SIGHT?

Since the editorial of last week upon "ARE WE AFRAID," the editor has seen editorials in the Wesleyan Advocate and Zion's Outlook upon the subject, and in a matter of such vital importance to the Church the utterances of other papers should be read. These papers both take the position taken by the RECORDER lest weak, as a last resort if all else should fail. The statement of last week is repeated: IF THE BISHOPS ARE NOT ABLE TO SETTLE THE MATTER, THEY SHOULD CALL UPON THE ANNUAL CONFERENCES TO ELECT DELEGATES TO A GENERAL CONFERENCE TO MEET NEXT WINTER TO PASS ON THIS MORAL QUESTION. ARE WE AFRAID TO MEET THE ISSUE?

The articles referred to above follow.

The Publishing House War Claim trouble is talked about in such way as to show the intense and irrepressible feeling on that subject. One of the very foremost of laymen in the Church, one who is widely known in educational and literary circles, recently wrote thus: "I am in hearty sympathy with the course of the Wesleyan in the GREAT QUESTION now confronting us. We are in a most humiliating position as a Church. What satisfactory conclusion is in sight?" In line with this there are constantly coming to us inquiries as to what is being done, or what will be done. We could only answer these according to our hopes and fears.

There is a widespread conviction that the obligation is on our Church to take some step that will throw off this deadly incubus from her body. The Committee of the United States Senate, in its recent report, makes this strong statement: "If there was any mistake or omission on the part of the Senate, it was in failing to protect the beneficiaries against the Book Agents, Messrs. Barbee & Smith, whose duty it was to guard their interests, and this would have been done if information that properly belonged to them had not been withheld. The acts of those gentlemen can be passed upon by the authorities of the great religious organization whose officers they are, and of which they are members, and the responsibility of determining what action is necessary to preserve the honor and integrity of the Church, rests with the governing authorities, whose duty it is to enforce and carry out its laws and principles."

This declaration shows unmistakably that, while the committee recognizes the rights of our Church, it also clearly reveals the obligation we are under to sustain our laws and maintain the high standard of purity and integrity which we claim. Will their indications be ignored and our laws and principles, to which they refer, be allowed to languish? Shall Caesar shame the Church?

Correspondence . . .

"LET'S GET UP SOME SORT OF AN ENTERTAINMENT." No. 2.

(REV. R. H. BENNETT.)

"But cannot we rightly have an entertainment in a secular hall, or run an excursion, or serve entables at a public booth—say, after a political meeting has adjourned?"

No. Such an affair is either a Church service or it is not. If it is, it ought to be FREE. If it is not a Church service, it ought not to be conducted by a Church as such or in the name of the Church, no matter what the members may choose to do as individuals.

THE SINEWS OF WAR.

"But how can we raise the money without these entertainments?"

This is the standing answer when we object to this pernicious custom, and by many ardent or unwilling advocates it is considered triumphantly or resignedly conclusive.

A sufficient answer is that THE CHURCH OF GOD IS NEVER OBLIGED TO HAVE MONEY IMPROPERLY GAINED. And if the money obtained by these wrong methods cannot be placed at the disposal of the Church by any other means, then the Church of God can a thousand times better do without this money.

It is because too many Churches have learned to depend on the Church merchandise business that the springs of liberality have become frozen by a cold wave of selfishness, and free-will offerings are so scant. If a Church will burn the bridge behind it and take an unwavering stand NEVER TO TRAFFIC IN MERCHANDISE AGAIN, the money needed will come.

Let the time, anxiety, and labor given to such entertainments, or one half of it, be devoted to prayer for the return of the Holy Spirit to the Church, and to petitions that He will show how to raise the money needed; let one half the ingenuity, enterprise, skill, and enthusiasm spent on these pitiful follies that Christ commands us to "take hence," be devoted to legitimate means of creating and educating enthusiasm for FREE-WILL OFFERINGS, laid at the feet of our Lord as an expression of our love and gratitude to Him, and far more money than the palmy entertainments have yielded will flow into the treasury of the Lord.

LADIES AID SOCIETIES.

"But what is to become of our useful and faithful Ladies Aid Societies, which have their very birth and growth in the entertainment business?"

The tireless toil of the women, year in and year out, though in a bad cause, is worthy of much praise. In many places they have laid the very foundations of Churches in oyster shells and chicken bones, built up the walls with ice cream instead of mortar, and put on the roof with orange slices for slate; and every brick or board placed in such a Church at such costly toil for the pennies gained is a standing disgrace to the men of the congregation, the purseholders whose niggardly gifts of tens instead of hundreds, and hundreds instead of thousands, have seemed to make such makeshifts necessary.

WHAT SHALL THEY DO?

Let the Ladies Aid Societies continue, but let them go out of the entertainment and mercantile business at once and forever, without ever looking back to the fleshpots of Egypt.

Let them raise their dues up to the amount they give already in contributions to these entertainments and what they spend in buying back what they have given, in admission fees to concerts which they have already worked up; and then let them devote the time spent in discussing the WHAT, WHEN AND HOW of secular shows and theatricals in God's Church to the study of His Word (say the Bible by books), to the visiting of the sick, the distressed, the destitute, and godless, living about them by the hundreds, largely the proper work of the Church of God.

ENVOI.

When we have simply abandoned Church entertainments for revenue, we are far from perfection. To refrain is only negative. We need then to go down on our knees, if not on our faces, in deep repentance, entire consecration and strong faith for the gift of the Holy Spirit, without which all our work will come to naught.

AWAY WITH PESSIMISM.

(REV. E. P. PARHAM.)

This seems to be an age for untrammelled thinking and bold expression of opinion. Many are assuming the role of the critic. Measures, plans and customs, however venerable in age, if not productive of best results, fall under the ban of these persons of advanced thought and progressive ideas. To say that these persons are wrong, or that criticisms are pernicious and altogether evil, would be to take ground that the logic of facts would sweep away. Rather than deplore this state of things, we ought to hail such as a harbinger of better days in the country and Church of God. It is to be regretted that too much that is personal is allowed to figure in these discussions, but often even personalities may be necessary to indulge in in order to defend the Church and promote her good. Just as little as little of the merely personal as possible should be indulged, all right thinking people know, but for one, I regard us a hopeful sign these independent, fearless airings of impediments in the way of Zion's prosperity. No need for anybody to be alarmed as to the final outcome for the Church of God.

Don't let us be too hard on the critics and impute to them bad motives, for such may be very foreign to their hearts. Why can't we believe that good will result from these criticisms, as has in the past been often the case? The human part of God's Church needs overhauling, and mending, and remodeling very often. Such has been the case and such will continue to be the case. The machinery of Methodism has stood the wear and tear of time well, as we all know, but who will say that all its parts are perfect and will be so forever?

For instance, the presiding eldership will have to be greatly modified in the future in some of its phases. The eight year time limit will greatly tend, w believe, to help its waning power. Let us brethren discuss these things in a brotherly, loving spirit and the results will be good, as we believe.

What is needed for our Zion is a great baptism of the Holy Ghost upon preachers and members. For this let us pray and toil. But to take a pessimistic view of the future of the Church is exceedingly unwise. "The gates of hell shall not prevail against her."

JAY'S MORNING AND EVENING EXERCISES.

BY REV. J. A. RIDDICK.

The writer of this sketch took a great fancy to these "exercises" in his early ministry, and has been a profitable reader of them for more than fifty years. William Jay was a great divine and evangelist in his day, and this valuable work, in two volumes, was dedicated to his special friend, William Wilberforce, of distinguished fame in the legal profession.

These Exercises, intended for devotional reading, are compressed in more than seven hundred brief and striking notes, on as many or more passages of scripture. They are written in terse and compact language of spiritual import and adapted to every class of religious and serious readers.

It is said that the great Henry Clay, in his failing health, restricted his devotional reading to "Jay's Morning and Evening Exercises."

Besides their devotional character, they are a great help to preachers in giving them a great variety of texts and hints in sermonising. After all the pulpit helps that have been in use this writer gave preference to Jay's Exercises, and he would commend them to the careful reading of good men and women in connection with their morning and evening devotions.

SUNDAY TRAINS.

GEO. P. ADAMS.

I wish to state through the columns of your paper that I have been told by different lawyers that we have a law against freight trains running on Sunday. If we have such a law in Virginia, it is a sin and a shame that it is not enforced. If we have no such law, then we, as civilized people, and more than that, as Christian people, ought to have such a law and see that it is enforced. For the last few weeks I have noticed very closely and it seems to me that there are more trains running on Sunday than ever before.

This state of affairs ought not to exist in a so-called Christian land. I went before the Judge of our Court a few months ago and said to him that I wished to go before the grand jury and report the Norfolk & Western R. R. for running freight trains on the Sabbath, and he said that he thought it would be useless, as it was a great corporation; there was such a law in existence, and he had done his best to have it enforced, as far as his duty went, but it seemed as if it could not be stopped.

I believe it to be the duty of our citizens to stand together and see that the Sabbath is observed in this respect as well as others.

On last Sunday evening, while sitting in my chamber I saw several freight trains going East. The first one seemed to have about forty gondolas, loaded with coal, and just one box car, hooked on about five cars from the end. If that box car contained perishable stuff, and had to go through, then I claim it ought to be sent through with nothing but the engine and tender. Now, if these great corporations have a right to violate the Sabbath in this way, under the laws of our State, then let us have a bill passed that will not give them the right to do so. I sincerely hope that the proper authorities will investigate this matter thoroughly and see if there is not some step that can be taken in this matter that will prove a blessing to our State. Blackstone, Va.

PRESIDING ELDERS.

(REV. J. W. HECKMAN.)

While I voted for the Memorial to the last General Conference, limiting the term of the office of presiding elders to eight years in succession, I want to say just a few words in defense of two of the brethren under whom I have served. I have only been under four different elders since I joined the Conference. I have nothing to say against either of them.

As to the liberality of these men, I want to say that the first two years of my work was on Snow Creek Mission, now a part of South Franklin. Rev. J. H. Amiss was my elder at that time. I remember a move was made by Bro. E. G. Moseley, of Danville, in the District Conference, at Chatham, to purchase horses for a minister and myself. Brother Amiss responded with a contribution.

About that time the Board of Missions of our Conference decided that the presiding elder should have his prorata of the appropriation from the Domestic Mission fund. I remember very distinctly when I drew the last of this money due me at the Conference at Petersburg, I went to Bro. Amiss and offered him his part of the money. He said to me: "Keep it all. I do not want it. You boys have had a hard time." These are about the words used. Other brethren who had served some of the poor missions, told me he did the same with them. God bless Bro. Amiss!

Again: I served under Dr. Paul Whitehead three years in succession. I left his district—the West Richmond—after the Conference of 1897 for the charge I am now serving for the second year. When I arrived at Farmville I found out my horse was sick. He died there. The next morning I wrote to the Christian Advocate relating the fact and stating that I had no money to buy another horse. I left Farmville the day I wrote, arriving here a little after dark. Before the note written had been published in the Advocate, I received a letter from Dr. Whitehead with his check for $5 enclosed. God bless Dr. Whitehead.

Now, may there not be many more deeds like these which have not been brought to the light, and which eternity alone will reveal, by many of these men of God?

In conclusion, Dr. Whitehead is my presiding elder again. Praise the Lord! While I believe it would be better not to keep one man in this office too long, I do not know of a man in or out of the office that I would prefer to Dr. Whitehead. I, for one, welcome him to the Lynchburg district. He has always been kind and gentlemanlike toward me.

I have no harsh criticism for my dear Brother Moss. I love him, and believe he is conscientious. God bless him!

I have enjoyed the association of all elders under whom I have served, and they will always find a hearty welcome in my home. I will also be glad to help them get around through the country.

Yours ALL for Jesus.

ALCOHOLISM.

H. HANSEN.

All right minded people have decided that alcohol is a deadly poison, as well as tobacco and opium are. Alcohol is produced from fermentation and the rotting process of fruits and grains, and the alcohol is the body of all intoxicating drinks, and this is what makes men crazy so quick, and puts the devil in them and makes them beat their wives and children to death so often and kill their mothers and best friends, as we see in our papers every day.

Six thousand innocent women and children were most cruelly murdered last year in our United States through this deadly drug that is legalized and protected by our government to poison and to kill off our nation in order to get a little pocket money out of those thus poisoned. One hundred and fifty thousand of our noblest young men go down to drunkards graves every year in our U. S., but no protection by law for our young men. This deadly poison stays in the blood and body months and even years after they quit drinking it. It paralyzes the brain in a few minutes so that they are insane and destroy property, and destroy their clothes, and roll in mud worse than hogs. Over 5,000,000 young men of America are now helpless tramps and beggars, made so by this deadly poison that the government protects against the life of our nation. Even our President dare not say a word against this deadly poison, lest he offend the saloon, and the Devil, and crime-breeding houses. Pray to God for its downfall! Amen!

Self-government is very necessary to our salvation. Adam and Eve did not govern their appetites, therefore death and hell came on them. Order is God's first law—"Obey my laws and live; or disobey and die,"—and so it is with us at the present day. We may pray until we are gray headed, but if we do not govern ourselves aright our prayers will not be heard; and so with parents, if they do not govern their children properly, but let them grow up hoodlums, their prayers for their children will not be heard, and parents allowing their children to grow up in sin will be lost in hell with their children. Remember how God's wrath came on Eli, the High Priest, because his sons made themselves vile and he restrained them not.

And if there is illegal business going on in our neighborhood and we do not cry aloud against it, but are silent, then we are as guilty as the outlaws, for we are silent partners with them; and a we are silent on any sin or crime we are in partnership with it.

THE WONDERFUL GOSPEL.

The symbol of the Gospel of John is the eagle, the bird of the air, that builds her nest on "high," Jer. 49:16; the bird that soars "toward heaven," Pr. 23:5; the bird, that living to a great age, grows young again, Ps. 103:5; the bird that typifies spiritual living, Isa. 40:31; Re. 12:14.

John does not begin with genealogy, or ministry, or humanity, but with eternity. Jno. 1:1.

John does not end with a command to teach all nations, Mat. 28:20, nor with ascension, priesthood or worship, Mk. 16:19, 20; Lu. 24; 51:53, but with the coming. Jno. 21.

John does not refer to our Lord's birth, infancy, temptation, transfiguration, nor the agony in the garden, and shows that his death was imperial and voluntary. No mention of weakness or darkness. The divine transcends the human. Divine grace, overleaping all distinctions, 4:9; divine authority, baffling His enemies, 7:30, 44; divine glory, refusing to be hid, 12:28; divine majesty, overawing those who came to arrest Him, 18:6; divine power, protecting His disciples, 18:8, 9; divine calmness to the last, 19:26-30.

The first day, Sabbath (see the Greek), or the Lord's day, is prominent, Jno. 20:1, 19, 26, for long before this gospel was written the first day had superseded the 7th day as the rest day for the Christian.

"The key-words of John are BELIEVE, which occurs 100 times, 10x10; LIFE, 36 times, 6x6; LIGHT, 24 times, 6x4; TRUTH and TUE, 36 times, 6x6."

John alone calls our Lord the Word, 1:1; Life, 1:4; Light, 1:4; Lamb, 1:29; Bread, 6:48; Way, 14:6; Truth, 14:6; Shepherd, 10:11; Vine, 15:1; Resurrection, 11:25.

He alone calls the Holy Spirit the Comforter. 14:16.

He alone identifies Jesus with the Jehovah of the O. T. "I am." Ex. 3:14, 15; Jno. 8:24, 28, 58; Rev. 1:18.

Alone uses the self-assertive word, "Verily, verily." Uses it 25 times.

Alone indulges in comment. 7:30; 11:13, 51.

This gospel is theological rather than biographical. Its eight distinctive doctrines are:

1. The divinity of Christ. 1:1; 17:3.
2. Man's condition. Hungry, 6:5; thirsty, 4:15; blind, 9:1; impotent, 5:7; joyless, 2:3.
3. Regeneration. 3:5, 9, 12.
4. Holy Spirit. 3:5; 4:24; 6:63; 7:39; 14:26; 20:22.
5. Believing in Jesus. 1:12; 19:35; 20:31.
6. Oneness of believers with Christ. 7:22.
7. Resurrection. 11:25.
8. Translation. 8:51; 11:26; 21:22.—The Sunday-School Lesson Illustrator.

EDITORIAL:

In other high places of professional and business life our Church is held in the same confident esteem and is looked to for a righteous example. We cannot afford to occupy lower ground than they accord to us and expect us to hold. It will avail nothing to quibble about whether or not these parties are living up to the standard they set for us. That is not our business. Our Church contends for purity of life in all relations, and she must make good her plea by maintaining her own purity and integrity.

It is folly to think for one moment about leaving this trouble without some decisive settlement. Were we to consent that it should remain where it now is, we would never hear the last of it. It would be thrown into our teeth as long as we live, and we would hand it down to our children as a fearfully encumbering portion. We would transmit to them an enshackled Church. This we cannot afford to do.

But what is to be done? The money should be returned, or at least, tendered, and the Book Agents ought to resign, and thus save further trouble. If they fail to do that, then the Book Committee should require their resignation and take other steps to remedy their own mistakes. But if nothing is done sooner, then we will turn again to the Annual Conferences as they meet during the summer and fall. We will ask those Conferences to call an extra session of the General Conference and, if they think best, to elect new delegates to that body and instruct them as to how they will represent the Conferences in this matter. This will be a sad and weary delay, but it will be far better than sorrowful, silent and continued suffering.

Our hope, however, still is that the Bishops, to whom the eye of the Church is turned for help in this sad hour, will yet bring us some more speedy relief. They should by all means meet, and, in their corporate capacity, at least consider every possible means and use every possible influence to bring rest to our troubled and harassed Church. Surely they will do this much for us.

Georgia Methodism is practically solid on this matter. The two Georgia Conferences were practically unanimous in passing the pronounced resolutions they adopted. We understand that the same is true in other states.

This being the case, and our own convictions being in the same line, the Wesleyan Advocate can do nothing less than contend for a right settlement of this great question until it is settled right.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

We have been silent many weeks on this nauseous theme. Several reasons led to this course. First, we were sick at heart over the disgraceful affair. Then we saw plainly that there was a determined, inflexible purpose on the part of the guilty Agents and the Book Committeemen to wear out the patience of the Church and such of the Church press as desired and sought to obtain the removal from the Church of the shame and disgrace resting upon her by the deception of the guilty officials. We felt we had done enough to put the Church thoroughly on notice as to the enormity of the case, and that a constant weekly agitation of the question on our part would not accelerate a settlement, nor tend to the edification of our readers. We saw that time would be required for a stunned and bewildered Church to realize the gravity of the situation. Then again the equivocal, compromising promise of the Bishops about returning the money had misled the Church into expecting an early settlement. Time was necessary, therefore, for the Church to discover that the lapse of time brought us no nearer a solution.

We knew full well that the great heart of the Southern Methodist Church, when time should have revealed the settled purpose of the guilty parties and the do-nothing policy of those charged by their very positions with the duty of giving relief, would rise in revolt and repeat its demands for relief in tones and terms more unmistakable and potent even than attended their first protest in the freshness of the wrong.

We recur to the subject this week with sincere regret and pain, and only from a sense of duty to God and loyalty to the Church, whose honor and good name are dearer to us than life itself. Doubtless many parties implicated have vainly dreamed that the matter had worn itself out and that they had practically reached a position of exemption by a process of exhaustion. Such schemes might work in matters of mere differences of opinion, but never where the immutable principles of the Decalogue are involved. Such things are never settled until they are settled right. While perfectly aware of the schemes and policy of the Book Committee and the Agents involved in the guilt and of the seeming success of their plans, we have been thoroughly satisfied all the while that the question was not settled, and would never be settled until the money was refunded and the Book Committee and the Book Agents removed from office.

We were not the least surprised, that Dr. Glenn, editor of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, in his last issue came out in a strong and vigorous editorial, demanding a settlement of this vexing question on a basis protective of the honor of the Church. He very wisely and very properly gives the warning that, unless this is done soon, the matter will be taken up during the coming summer and fall and the Annual Conferences induced to call for an extra session of the General Conference, electing new delegates to the same, if they deem proper, for the final determination of this matter. The policy of the guilty parties and their defenders and protectors, if persisted in, will force just this course. We would be glad to have done with this whole matter and have maintained silence during and since the session of the Tennessee Annual Conference, but duty to the right demands this utterance on this unpleasant subject. The Atlanta Preachers' Meeting had this matter up last Monday, and the war claim fraud was condemned in the most vigorous language. The following resolutions were offered by Revs. J. T. Davis and B. T. Fraser. These brethren seem to have overlooked the fact that a majority of the Book Committee are just as guilty as the Book Agents, and cannot be expected, therefore, to do anything but defend and protect the Agents, which they have done with marked persistence.

The resolutions read:

"Whereas, The discussion and resolution of many of our strongest Annual Conferences and the expressed opinion of the great bulk of our loyal membership seem to have had little weight in settling the vexed question concerning the payment of our Publishing House claim; be it

"RESOLVED, By the Atlanta M. E. Preachers' Meeting, that we feel that this matter can never be settled until it is settled right.

"2. That if the Church, as such, was not free itself from the stain of practical deception, it cannot stand or remain free from rebuke by the world itself.

"3. That it is our firm conviction that the least that can be done is for the Book Committee to demand the resignation of Barbee & Smith.

"4. That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the Chairman of the Book Committee and the Secretary of the College of Bishops.

"J. T. DAVIS,
"B. T. FRASER."

The reading of the resolutions produced an excited discussion as to whether they should be accepted as they stood, or should be amended by incorporating a resolution asking for the resignation of the entire Book Committee, or should be altogether laid on the table. Finally they were accepted by motion as they stood.—Zion's Outlook.

BISHOP GALLOWAY'S WORK.

The following extracts from the Norfolk papers give some account of the twentieth century movement in that section:

The Methodists of Norfolk and her sister cities have been fully aroused to a full appreciation of the great work undertaken by that Church in its twentieth century educational fund by Bishop Galloway, the head of the movement. Thursday night he delivered a most powerful lecture on the subject to a large audience at Epworth Methodist Church. At the same place Thursday afternoon he held a conference with a number of prominent Virginia ministers on the subject, at which the plan was fully outlined and its various details were gone into explicitly. No plan of campaign was agreed upon, but every detail of the proposition was discussed, and the ministers present all pledged their hearty co-operation. Among the preachers from a distance who were present were the Rev. J. H. Amis, of the Rappahannock District; the Rev. J. S. Hunter, of the Charlottesville District; the Rev. Paul Whitehead, of the Lynchburg District; the Rev. William E. Judkins, the Rev. Thos. H. Campbell, the Rev. William E. Allen, the Rev. W. H. Gregory, the Rev. C. E. Watts, the Rev. D. B. Austin, the Rev. C. C. Wertenbaker, the Rev. James Cannon, Jr., the Rev. J. T. Whitley, the Rev. Mr. Batten, the Rev. Walter Bates, the Rev. J. H. Kabler.

At night Epworth Church was crowded with a large audience so eager to hear so learned a man as the Bishop speak on such a momentous topic, and ready, too, to co-operate with him.

Chancellor W. W. Smith, of the Randolph-Macon System of Schools and Colleges, was the first speaker after the devotional services. He outlined the twentieth century scheme tersely but entertainingly. The Rev. Dr. A. Coke Smith, of Lynchburg, he stated, was to have been present, but was detained on account of illness. He then introduced Bishop Galloway.

The Bishop stated that Victor Hugo's assertion that he who opens the door of the school house closes the door of the jail should be modified by the provision that the right person must open that door. He said that he believed there was a close connection between the spiritual and political life of the people. There is something deeper than materialism in all this, he declared. Nations are not made great by statute. It is a question of manhood and character, and back of that is religion. The thing that has made the swarming millions of the East subject to the smaller nations of Christendom is simply the difference between Christianity and Buddhism, Hindooism and the other religions of Pagan nations.

"I emphasize the Christianity of the people as the ultimate cause of our greatness or our fall in the future," he said. "Subtle materialism is invading the very Church of God, is remodeling our family circles, and only through the agency of Christian education can the tendency be checked and the faith of the people made to rise triumphantly above it. The greater the spiritualism of the people the nobler and purer government they will have." The Bishop drew comparisons between Spain and America, England and China, our own and the small republics of South America as being living examples of the truth of his declaration.

"The open Bible in the hands of the masses of the English people has been said to be the true secret of Britain's greatness," he continued, "and our own country, I firmly believe, has God in her great heart. That spirit has made us great and will make us greater.

"Now, therefore, I repeat that the morals, the true spiritual life of our citizens will make us the glorious people of the future, and how can we insure these qualities except through Christian education? Now, despite the sneers of certain small politicians, who claim that there is no place in law for the Ten Commandments, I assert that their principles is the common law of the land. And whenever we shall cast away the Bible we throw away the anchor of national safety; we pluck from our skies the sun which brightens and warms us; we follow then in the footsteps of France, when she solemnly declared that there was no God. And whenever we shall do this thing, whenever we lose sight of the Great Book, the result will be that we will write as bloody a chapter in our history as did that fickle and misguided nation an hundred years ago.

"I believe that in the open Bible rests our spiritual, material, industrial and mental progress and stability. Now, I am a non-producer but I believe that when I open the Holy Bible to the people I am doing more for them than any bank president or merchant prince can do. Truly has it been said that the battle for the future integrity of our country is to be fought around the cradle of American childhood. Let me but educate our youth and you may write the ballads and the books and you may make the laws. My work will then confirm or undo yours.

"I desire to say that I believe firmly in the doctrine of public education. It is the States' security. She must wipe out illiteracy. The attitude of the Church should be entirely friendly toward State education, but she should see to it that the instructors in these public schools shall be Christian men. It is the high function and sacred duty of the Church of God to educate. She must establish institutions of learning where the young shall have inculcated in them the great truths of Christianity and Methodism, synonymous terms. I tell you the Church which takes care of the children will be the Church of the future. The Church which does not look after the children will be no Church at all in the future.

"We are desirous of entering upon this great work we have before us of Christianizing nations and peoples, better equipped than ever in the century before us. We therefore desire, in the opening year of that century, to lay upon God's altar a great thank offering, which shall help us to make a better fight against the powers of darkness, to lead men in the way they should go, to accomplish the work God intended the Methodist Church to do, when He inspired that St. Paul of the eighteenth century, John Wesley, and made him establish this branch of His Church. Now, therefore, I entreat you all to work and pray for the success of this movement, which, if consummated, will result, I firmly believe, in the hastening by many years of the day when all men shall bow the knee to the living God, when His Church shall plant her triumphant banner on the heights of Asia, in the forests of the dark continent, on the coral strand of India, when its influence shall at home have accomplished the peace-making, love-making beauty of a Christian country, then shall we Methodists know that we have accomplished the work as God would have us do it. Let us do these things, my brethren. With God's help we can."

ON SUNDAY AFTERNOON.

The spacious auditorium of the Cumberland Street M. E. Church was filled with an appreciative audience to witness the exercises in the interest of the twentieth century educational fund, and hear the addresses of the distinguished speakers, Rev. W. G. Starr, D. D., and Bishop Galloway.

After the opening service Dr. Starr was introduced. He took as his subject, "The One Idea." He said in his opening remarks that there were 7,000,000 one-idea men in the world today—men of a single thought, who, in gratitude to God, were bent upon making an offering to Him for the great scheme of Christian education—the opening of the twentieth century.

The speaker then proceeded to discuss the subject in a most interesting manner, his remarks being interspersed with wit, humor, and pathos, that fairly electrified his hearers.

At the close of Dr. Starr's address Bishop Galloway spoke for a short time. He pleaded especially for the awakening of our people to the great blessings and responsibilities which belonged to them as a Church of Christ. When Bishop Galloway concluded, the following resolutions were offered and adopted by a rising vote:

WHEREAS, The various bodies of Methodists have undertaken to give expression of their gratitude to God for His signal blessing upon our Churches in the nineteenth century by a thank-offering, by which the resources of the Church may be increased for the great work of the twentieth century, and before us, and

WHEREAS, Our own General Conference has determined our Church shall participate in this movement of universal Methodism and our Annual Conference has endorsed this action and organized a canvass in all our Churches, and,

WHEREAS, We, the Methodists of Norfolk, Portsmouth and Berkley, have heard with great pleasure the general leader of this undertaking, our beloved Bishop Galloway, in his impressive presentation of this privilege and duty, as also the earnest endorsements of our own Conference leaders, therefore,

RESOLVED, That we will loyally co-operate with our pastors and the special agents appointed by our Conference in an endeavor to do our full part in this matter by the appointed time, Jan. 1st, 1901.

W. A. WRENN, WM. M. JONES, GEO. M. NEVILLE, JNO. H. HALL, J. W. GRANDY, C. W. PETTIT, J. H. BROWNLEY, AND OTHERS.

REV. W. A. ROBINSON.

This aged servant of God died at the home of his son, Dr. W. B. Robinson, in Essex county, on Friday, February 17, in the 85th year of his age.

He joined the Conference in 1851, and preached about ten years in the regular work. About 1851 his health broke down, and since that time he had been unable to take any regular work. He labored, when he was able, as a colporteur, and preached in the Churches about Ashland, at which place he lived for many years. He is known to most of our ministers who attended college from 1870 to 1890. He was quiet and unobtrusive, a man of piety and without reproach.

DR. JOSEPH E. BROADWATER.

Dr. Joseph E. Broadwater, of Temperanceville, died Friday night of pneumonia. He leaves a wife, two daughters and two sons. He was about sixty-three years of age. He represented his county in the House of Delegates at Richmond a few years ago, was an earnest friend of public education and was for many years a member of the school board of his district, being untiring in his efforts toward bringing them up to their present state of efficiency. He had been for many years a trustee of the Margaret Academy of Onancock. He was a devoted Methodist and was nearly always found at the meetings of the Church, whether at home or at the District and Annual Conferences. In his death the Church, County, and State loses one of their most valued supporters.

SOME NOTED MISSIONARY WOMEN.

(MRS. J. W. LAMBUTH.)

In the history of the missionary work of the women of our Church the names of Mrs. J. W. Lambuth, Mrs. Juliana Hayes, Mrs. M. L. Kelly, and Mrs. D. H. McGavock form a quartet, the light of whose eyes has made brighter the obscuring darkness of heathendom, and whose glory will shine forth with increasing splendor as the ages roll on.

The first one of this quartet of noble women to undertake the work was Mrs. Mary Isabel Lambuth, wife of the Rev. J. W. Lambuth.

She was the daughter of William Gordon McClellan, and was born Dec. 25th, 1832, in Cambridge, N. Y. When but sixteen years of age she came South to teach school near Jackson, Miss., and while yet in the days of her youth, she consecrated herself to the work of the Master. At a missionary meeting held in Canton, Miss., she wrote on a slip of paper: "I give myself and $5 to the missionary cause."

In 1853 she was married to Rev. J. W. Lambuth, of the Mississippi Conference, and one year later they, with three other missionaries, sailed for China. After a long, wearisome voyage, they arrived at Shanghai.

The care of the household and children and the daily study of the language occupied a great deal of her time, but she never let anything divert her from her work among the poor heathen women and children around her. In about two years after her arrival in China she, partly by the aid of some of her friends, and principally at her own expense, opened a boarding school for girls in Shanghai. By diligent study of the language she soon acquired such a mastery of it as to be able to translate hymns, tracts and books into it.

On account of her husband's failing health she had to close her school in 1860, and return home to America. Returning to China again in 1865, she reopened it, and for several months, until friends came to her assistance, maintained it by her own efforts. By the gift of the bridal diamonds of Mrs. McGavock she was enabled to erect a building that could accommodate 20 or 30 girls. The school was then called Clopton in honor of Mrs. McGavock's mother. Having at this time several day schools and a weekly training class for women under her charge, the translating of several books, and the editing of a missionary periodical, it would seem as if she had her hands full to overflowing, but she still found time to teach a school to the English-speaking children of the city, for which she received a remuneration that enabled her to help support her other work.

An open house was kept for the missionaries who came to Shanghai for medical attention or rest. She was always ready to care for and nurse them. To quote the words of one who knew her daily life: "The work I remember her to have accomplished during the time I was with her, seems now to me an impossibility. I do not recall a single appeal to her for help which was made in vain. She never seemed in a hurry, never confused, or impatient. Every duty seemed to fall in its natural place and moved quietly and swiftly to completion."

In 1886 Dr. Lambuth and she were transferred to Japan. Immediately on her arrival she began to work among the women and children. The work for women was developed into the Kobe Bible and Industrial School, of which school the Rev. W. H. Towson writes: "During the past few years in Japan there has been a decided reaction against missionary schools for girls on the grounds that they were taking their pupils away from their homes and social life instead of fitting them for their future position as wives and mothers. The Kobe Industrial School was organized about four years ago by Dr. and Mrs. Lambuth to meet this objection. Its work is along purely Japanese lines and embraces the ordinary branches of a Japanese education—Japanese serving, cooking, etiquette and other necessary items in the equipment of a Japanese lady. To these can be added a little English and music, if desired. The Bible is taught daily and boarding pupils are required to attend Sunday-school and church. The course is three years, and at its close, after due examination, they are regularly graduated and diplomas awarded. The work has been very satisfactory and the results have been very gratifying."

Mr. Lambuth says in a recent letter: "My time is short. The command to teach all and love as He is loved is ringing in our ears, reaching down to the depths of our hearts. The workers sometimes fail; one of our number has passed on before, but calling out as he went: 'There is great work to do. Send more men.' Out of 40,000,000 souls in Japan only one in 35,000 is a Christian. The need is now. That there is danger in waiting we all know. Certainly there never was a time in Japan so full of promise, and yet so full of peril. Let it not be said of us that we would not for Christ sake help the darkened and dying of Japan."

MRS. JULIANA HAYES.

Many years before the organization of the Woman's Missionary Society by the General Conference, Mrs. Juliana Hayes had been deeply interested in the salvation of the heathen; and in 1873 the Trinity Home Mission Society with which she was connected began the foreign work by sending contributions to Mrs. Lambuth's school in Shanghai. She was much rejoiced that by the organization of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society authority was given to the women of the Church by which she could have much better opportunities for putting into execution the desires of her heart.

She was elected first president of the W. F. M. Board, and entered immediately upon the discharge of her duties, travelling throughout the Church, arousing interest, organizing auxiliaries and by her enthusiasm inspiring women in distant lands, making them realize that to each individual Christian was given a grave responsibility concerning those "sitting in the region of the death."

She gave herself unreservedly to the work, never counting the cost when by sacrificing personal ease she could do aught for the advancement of God's kingdom.

At the sixteenth meeting of the board she declined re-election on account of the increasing infirmities of age, but she was made honorary president for life. She lived to see 35 Conference Societies with their auxiliaries organized.

On June 2, 1895, she bade "good night" to life here to awake in a fairer, brighter world to "good morning."—Miss Janie Gray, in S. C. Advocate.

Our Motto:

Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE!

This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teacher's Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Practice School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN.

The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent or Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

If there is any permanent work for a church, it is to be the voice of the loving God.—Rev. L. M. Powers, Universalist, Buffalo.

Words Spoken For God.

One word spoken for God today is worth 1,000 sermons preached three years hence.—Rev. James McFarland, Presbyterian, Hyde Park, Colo.

Christ's Love.

"The love of Christ constrains us." We do not first seek Jesus. He seeks us. We only give love for love.—Rev. Dr. Thomas A. Hoyt, Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

Noble Character.

The attainment of a noble character is a struggle, and we should cling to every influence that aids in its upbuilding.—Rev. Richard E. Sykes, Universalist, Denver.

Searching After Knowledge.

In the multitude of our searchings after knowledge may we desire that highest of all wisdom, a true knowledge of us as God sees us.—Rev. C. E. St. John, Congregationalist, Denver.

Freedom and Expansion.

We cannot be free without being expansive. We cannot be liberty loving for ourselves without being thoughtful of liberty for others.—Rev. Dr. H. Atwood Percival, Presbyterian, Chicago.

Spiritual Qualities.

Conscience, free will and reason, all of them strong and trusty, these are spiritual qualities. By virtue of them we are souls and are endowed with immortality.—Rev. C. E. St. John, Unitarian, Pittsburg.

The Gospel Ship.

That man seems to me wise who trusts himself not to the ship of infidelity, whose captain confesses he has neither chart, compass, course nor destination, but who chooses the gospel ship.—Rev. Charles C. Earle, Baptist, Boston.

Religion.

Religion should not be regarded as an emotion, but an experience. It should be a power in one's life and not the mere desire to feel at rest when one enters a church. The heart should govern the head.—Dr. Lorimer, Baptist, Boston.

Great Purposes.

A great purpose sometimes connects what appears to be the merest trifle with the transformation of a nation or the reformation of an age. No work is undignified, and no act is small if it be a part of a magnificent scheme.—Dr. J. B. Hawthorne, Nashville.

Christian Activity.

The first and only natural conception of a Christian life is that of activity. The moment the heart is renewed and the Christian life begins, that very moment a whisper steals along the soul and says, "Be active."—Rev. Dr. C. H. Stocking, Methodist, St. Louis.

Christian Perse.

Aim to be a positive Christian force.

Take every gift you have in common with man and all the characteristics which are to some extent distinct from man and consecrate them to him who was born of woman.—Rev. Dr. Stephen W. Dana, Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

Moral Progress.

Moral progress comes out of self respect, not out of despair and self distrust. And this splendid self respect that is inculcated by the doctrine of evolution is the only fit mood in which to approach our Maker in worship.—Rev. C. E. St. John, Unitarian, Pittsburg.

The Patriotism Needed.

We should have true patriotism, and not long distance patriotism that talks so enthusiastically of war at a long distance. Neither do we want any of the bass drum patriotism, loud in noise but empty. What we want is a patriotism right at home.—Rev. William Rader, Congregationalist, San Francisco.

Mission of the Christian Religion.

The Christian religion is just as serviceable in the bright days of life as in the dark. It enables men to live nobly as well as to die bravely. Its mission is to teach men how to make the most out of their life, to transform our human nature into a divine nature and sends man forth into the new age a veritable son of God.—Dr. J. S. Jackson, Baptist, Chicago.

Reason and Faith.

The very concordance of reason with faith is a note of divine truth. Reason aids faith, and faith helps reason. Reason helps to faith in several ways; enforces and illustrates it. Does not reason show the actual and absolute limits of its own powers in the discovery of religion truth and thereby prove the necessity of revelation?—Rev. Father Henry M. Calmer, Catholic, St. Louis.

Paradise a Locality.

Heaven is undoubtedly a locality. The first paradise, which was certainly an exceedingly commendable paradise, was a locality, and there has been in the meantime no such change in the constitution of our nature as to indicate that a paradise that is not local would be any improvement on the original. This fixed fact of locality is a great help to us. It instantly possesses all this matter of the heavenly with the steady feature of the real—the real as opposed to the visionary, the real as opposed to the indefinable.—Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, Presbyterian, New York.

The Gain of Life.

If we fade as a leaf, what is it that fades? That which belongs to our lower, transient life. It is always a richer stage of development that comes on. The fruit is not so beautiful as the flower, but it is better. The man is not so handsome as the babe, but he knows more. If man fades as the leaf, what abides? Character, the moral results of past years, abides. As the tree writes its history in its own fibers so do we. Very wisely, then, ought we to use the passing years, since their sum total is what we are.—A. J. Wells, Unitarian, New York.

RECESSIONAL.

(By request we publish Rudyard Kipling's justly famous Recessional Hymn. The poem first made its appearance in the London Times July 17th of the past year. If Mr. Kipling had written nothing else this alone would entitle him to a place in the first rank of English-writing poets.)

God of our fathers, known of old—
Lord of our far-flung battle-line—
Beneath whose awful Hand we hold Dominion over palm and pine—
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

The tumult and the shouting dies—
The captains and the kings depart—
Still stands Thine ancient Sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart.
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

Far-called our navies melt away—
On dune and headland sinks the fire—
Lo, all our pomp of yesterday
Is one with Nineveh and Tyre!
Judge of the Nations, spare us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

If drunk with sight of power, we loose
Wheels that have not Thee in awe—
Such sin will make a mockery of law—
Or lesser breeds without the law—
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

For heathen art that puts her trust
In reek and iron and shard—
All valia, that builds on dust,
All guard not Thee to guard—
For frantic and foolish word,
Thy mercy on Thy people, Lord! Amen.

Editorial.

THE WORLD-WIDE FIELD.

Again we give our readers a number largely devoted to the great cause of Missions. The articles following are full of facts and encouragement, and are taken from that prince of Missionary journals, the Missionary Review of the World, to which every pastor and missionary worker should subscribe.

THE EMPRESS DOWAGER AND MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.

The following is a decree of the Empress of China of the date of Oct. 6th, 1898, which will interest our readers:

"From the opening of ports to foreign trade to the present time, foreigners and Chinese have been as one family, with undivided interests, and since missionaries from foreign countries are living in the interior, we have decreed, not three or four times, but many times, that the local officials must protect them; that the gentry and people of all the provinces must sympathize with our desire for mutual benevolence; that they must treat them graciously and hospitably, without dislike or suspicion, with the hope of lasting peaceful relations.

"Recently there have been disturbances in the provinces which it has been impossible to avoid. There have been several cases of riot in Szechuan, which have not been settled. The stupid and ignorant people who circulate rumors and stir up strife, proceeding from light to grave differences, are most truly to be detested. On the other hand the officials, who have not been able at convenient seasons to properly instruct the people and prevent disturbances, can not be excused from censure.

"We now especially decree again, that all provincial officials, wherever there are Churches, shall distinctly instruct the local officials to most respectfully obey our several decrees, to recognize and protect the foreign missionaries as they go to and fro, and to treat them with all courtesy.

"If lawsuits arise between Chinese and native Christians, they must be conducted with justice and speedily concluded. Moreover, they must command and instruct the gentry and people to fulfil their duties, that there may be no quarrels or disagreements.

"Wherever there are foreigners traveling from place to place, they must surely be protected and the extreme limit of our hospitality extended.

"After the issue of this decree, if any disturbances should arise, the officials of that locality will be severely dealt with. Whether they be viceroys or governors or others, they shall be punished, and it will not avail to say that we have not informed you."

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

This message from Dr. Schell, secretary of the Epworth League, of the Northern Methodist Church, explains itself:

TO THE MISSIONARY SECRETARIES:—I propose that the Epworth League shall celebrate its tenth anniversary by raising $100,000 to open missions in Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines, and such other fields as the General Committee may determine. The young people are just ripe for it, but the Epworth League constitution seems to be in the way. Now, here is a plan by which it may be done and the constitutional limitations upon the League still be observed. Why would not the Missionary Committee be willing to authorize a special gift on the part of the Church in such amount and for such a purpose as they may deem wise, and fix upon Sunday, May 14, 1899, the tenth anniversary of the Epworth League organization, as the day for receiving the special offering. The Epworth League anniversary program could easily be made to conform to the plan, and the money I verily believe would be in hand the Monday morning following.

BASAL PRINCIPLES OF CHRISTIAN GIVING.

The special committee of the Presbyterian Church on systematic beneficence gives the following, the basal principles, upon which the superstructure of the Church's beneficence rests:

"1. The consecration of property as well as self to God.

"2. Our property—all of it—should be used for His glory.

"3. A part of our property—a generous percentage of income—should be specifically devoted to Christian work.

"4. The acceptable work of God includes alms as well as prayers.

"5. The Boards of the Church are the providential means whereby all, but the favored few who can go in person, must carry out Christ's command to disciple all nations.

"6. This command rests as bindingly upon him who remains at home as upon him who devotes his life to missionary work.

"7. Every Church and every individual Christian should therefore deem it a privilege, as well as a duty, to contribute according to ability to each of the Boards which represent the great benevolent and missionary work of the Church."

FACTS ABOUT FOREIGN MISSIONS

(BY REV. E. P. MACKAY.)

Many men and women and millions of money are sent to the foreign mission field. What is there to show for this expenditure? The following is but a partial answer, with approximate figures, yet it is sufficient to cause thankfulness and inspire confidence and hope.

PRESENT CONDITIONS AND DIRECT RESULTS.

1. SOUTH AMERICA, the "neglected continent," has a population of over 34,000,000, and of these 30,000,000 have probably never seen a Bible. It illustrates the failure of the Roman Catholic Church where she has undisputed sway. There are now eighteen Protestant missionary societies operating there, about 350 missionaries, male and female, and over 30,000 communicants.

2. MEXICO is another priest-ridden country, having a population of about 12,000,000. Twenty-six years ago Protestant missions entered, and there are now fourteen societies at work, with about 200 missionaries, and 18,000 communicants. There are 600 native workers, and many thousands of children under instruction.

3. AFRICA is one of the great mission fields of the future. A population variously estimated at from 100,000,000 to 300,000,000, with nearly 600 different languages and dialects. European powers are struggling over "spheres of influence," but the light is penetrating the darkness. Already 45 societies are at work, the Bible has been translated, in whole or in part, into 70 different languages, and there are over 1,200 missionaries. In Uganda alone, with 10,000,000 of a population, where twenty years ago there was no missionary, there are now 500 Churches, 600 teachers, and over 60,000 under instruction. There are 100 native laborers supported by native contributions. In five months 10,000 copies of the Gospel were sold, such is their enthusiasm. What hath God wrought!

4. THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS are in 38 groups. About 2,000 of these islands are inhabited, having a population of 10,000,000. Already 14 groups are practically evangelized, and other groups partially so. There are 1,400 Churches, with over 1,200 native ordained pastors, besides nearly 10,000 other native helpers engaged in the services. Captain Cook said of these islanders: "There is a scale of sensuality to which these people have descended wholly unknown to every other people, which no imagination can possibly conceive, and it is not likely they will ever be evangelized." Of these same islands Darwin said, many years after: "The lesson of the missionary is the enchanter's wand."

5. INDIA. The population of India is 286,000,000, of whom about 6 per cent. of the men and 1 per cent. of the women can read. Two cents a day is their average income. It is said there are 333,000,000 gods. The work is so difficult that Henry Martyn said: "If ever I see a Hindu converted to Jesus Christ I shall see something more nearly approaching the resurrection of a dead body than anything I have seen." Yet there are 200,000 native communicants in India today, and nearly 600,000 Protestant adherents. There are 4,000,000 students in educational institutions receiving a Western education, which is undermining heathenism and preparing the way for Christ.

6. CHINA contains over 400,000,000 souls, one-fourth of the whole population of the world. In 1840 there were only five seaport towns at which the missionary could labor. In 1860 the missionary had access to ten points along the coast. Today the whole of China is open. Every province has been invaded. There are 80,000 communicants, another 80,000 who are believers, but have not made public profession, and probably 120,000 more who are intellectually convinced that Christianity is true, and have lost all faith in idolatry.

7. JAPAN was first entered in 1859. The first Christian was baptized in 1864. The first Church was organized in 1872 with only 11 members. Today there are over 40,000 converts, and a Christian community of 150,000. The whole empire of 40,000,000 souls lies open for evangelization. These are but some of the direct results. Surely God's hand is here!

INDIRECT RESULTS.

These cannot be tabulated, but are none the less important. In India alone the following practises, so common at one time, are now prohibited by law:

1. Infanticide—once so prevalent that it is said five persons out of every six were guilty of it.

2. Parricide. The murder of parents no longer able to care for themselves.

3. Suicides, in the name of religion, by leaping over precipices or into wells, or by throwing themselves under the idol-car.

4. Voluntary torture, in the name of religion, such as piercing their thighs with spears, cutting out their own tongues, swinging on hooks fastened in the flesh.

5. Involuntary torture, in the name of justice, such as cutting off noses or ears or hands, or plucking the eyes out, as punishment for crime.

6. Slavery, both predatory and domestic.

These and many other such changes intellectual, sociological, and religious, are the results of Christian influence in India, ameliorating the condition of people and elevating them to higher conceptions of life.

THE RAPIDITY OF GOD'S MOVEMENTS.

Sometimes missionaries have had their faith tried by weary waiting, but often the results are so rapid as to make it easy to believe that, according to promise, a nation will be born in a day. John Williams began work in Rarotonga in 1823, and eleven years after, in 1834, all were profest Christians. There had been when he landed 10,000 idols; when he left idols had disappeared, 6,000 worshipped the true God, and read His Word in their own written language, and family worship was conducted morning and evening in every house in the island. Surely "a nation in a day" is not impossible to Him who has already wrought such miracles of grace!

THE QUALITY OF WORK DONE.

This has sometimes been questioned. Men have said that the conversions were not genuine; that they only profess conversion because of the help they expect to receive. It is no longer possible honestly to make such statements. Apply such tests as the following: 1. Public profession. 2. Efforts to propagate their religion. 3. Readiness to sacrifice, suffer, and even die for Christ. 4. The conviction of all who know them that they are Christians. How many of our own Christian people would stand such tests? Yet in mission fields all these have been applied to native Christians and they were not found wanting. They labor assiduously, they give generously out of their extreme poverty, they die heroically confessing Christ.

PROGRESS IN THE HOME CHURCH.

This is not less remarkable than the rapid progress abroad. Note the changes:

1. When William Carey proposed sending a missionary to the heathen he was rebuked in the Baptist association. The general assembly of the Church of Scotland so far forgot the Master's commission as to pass a resolution condemning Carey's movement as a pernicious delusion. All thoughtful Christian men now feel that the Church exists for the evangelization of the world.

2. It used to be felt that every dollar sent abroad was a dollar lost at home. Some feel that way still. It is, however, becoming better understood that there is a withholding that tendeth to poverty, and a giving that tendeth to riches. In order to get blessing on our Churches at home, we must obey the Lord's command, and aim at the "utmost parts of the earth."

3. The increase of mission literature. It is said that about one-seventh of all religious literature published is missionary. That fact is full of promise.

4. The growth of interest among the young people in our colleges and young people's societies. There are 1,000 colleges on this continent, having about 75,000 students. In about 360 of these colleges there are circles studying and disseminating interest in foreign missions.

Surely all this is the Lord's doing. Jehovah is the God of missions. Jesus Christ is the Captain of the Host that is publishing salvation. All who labor with Him shall share in the glory of ultimate victory. Are you a collaborer with Jesus Christ?

OUTLOOK FOR THE WORLD'S EVANGELIZATION.

(REV. J. A. GRAHAM, M. A.)

1. THE RESULTS ALREADY ATTAINED, more particularly during the last hundred years, give cause for gratitude. At the beginning of the modern missionary movement the Churches were dead to the claims of the heathen world. Now every branch has its foreign mission board or society, whose work focuses the living interest of the best of its members. Before the famous meeting at Kittering, in 1792, only one or two agencies were at work among the heathen; now there are about 150 separate organizations, with an annual income of over $12,500,000. Then there were but a few missionaries representing Christendom among non-Christians; now there is a great army with 10,000 missionary officers (one-third of them women), aided by 50,000 native workers, of whom 3,300 are ordained. Then the great mission fields were either unknown or closed to the free entrance of the Gospel; now the whole wide world, with inconsiderable exceptions, is open to its heralds. Then the converts of Protestant Churches in heathendom were reckoned by the thousand, now there are said to be 3,600,000. Then the power of politics and the influence of the press were almost wholly, and often bitterly, opposed to foreign missionary enterprise; now the missionary is looked upon as the pioneer of civilization, and the valued ally of good government.

2. But notwithstanding past success, ONLY A BEGINNING HAS BEEN MADE in the work of missions. The area actually occupied by Christian peoples is small compared to that of non-Christian nations, and large tracts of the earth's surface remain unevangelized. We rejoice over three million converts as the result of modern missions, but what are they to the thousand and million still unconverted? And the startling fact presents itself that during the period in which the three millions have been won, the natural increase of heathendom is reckoned at two hundred millions!

3. CHRISTIANS MUST BE MORE EARNEST AND SELF-SACRIFICING if the whole world is to be speedily evangelized. The number of those who feel called to go to preach the Gospel to the heathen increases yearly, but the number is utterly inadequate to meet the urgent calls, which open doors of opportunity are presenting to the churches. A great host of consecrated men and women—the very best in Christendom—are at present needed in the world's harvest field. And TO HELP THEM GO there is required a larger proportion of the wealth of those who are unable to give personal service. What is being done by the poor Moravian Church shows what might be done by others. If even their standard were reached by the other reformed Churches, these would be represented, says Mrs. Bird Bishop, by two hundred thousand missionaries, and would contribute $700,000,000 a year. "We spend," she adds, (referring to the United Kingdom), Memory Verses, 14-16—Golden Text, John x, 11—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

1. The misconduct of the scribes and Pharisees, who ought to have been the faithful shepherds of the people, brings to mind the words by the prophets, notably in Jer. xxiii and Ezek. xxxiv. Unfaithfulness and unbelief seem to prevail in all ages in the professing people of God. By the gate of Eden, with its sword and sacrifice; by the gate and door and veil of the tabernacle He taught the people the only way of access to Himself. He now reminds them of it and says that all other ways are invented by those who would rob God of His honor.

2. The true shepherd accepts God's way and knows no other. Like Noah building the ark or Moses the tabernacle, he has no suggestions to make, but simply obeys God implicitly. He does not appoint himself to office, but God calls him and appoints him, as He did Moses and Joshua and Samuel, Isaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel, the apostles and all who are willing to be wholly subject to Him.

3. His voice is recognized as the voice of one in authority, and He is followed and trusted. He said to Moses, Thou hast found grace in my sight, and I know thee by name (Ex. xxxiii, 17). Through Isaiah He said, "Fear not, for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by thy name, thou art mine (Isa. xliii, 1).

4. A great many people who bear His name and seem to be doing His work do not understand this, for they complain of not being able to accomplish what they wish nor get where they desire to go. There must be a misunderstanding somewhere, for when we follow where He leads all should be easy, and when He goes before He will not leave obstacles in the way of those whom He leads.

5. Sheep must be wiser than people, for, while sheep will not follow a stranger, many who call themselves Christians follow those who do not follow Christ and yet think they are in the right way. They do not seem to know the difference between His voice and that of strangers. His word is His voice. It is true from the beginning and forever settled in heaven (Ps. cxix, 89).

6. "They understood not." It seems a comparatively simple parable in the light of the prophecies we have referred to, but it was all dark to them, for they were more full of tradition than of His Word, the Scriptures. It is even so now, and a Bible study to those unaccustomed to it is something very strange. How sadly He says even to his disciples, Do ye not yet understand? How is it that ye do not understand? (Math. xvi, 9, 11).

7. Now He says plainly, "I am the door of the sheep." The gate of the garden of Eden, the gate and doo and veil of the tabernacle, the door of Noah's ark, the entrance to the city of refuge, were all typical of Him who is the way and the only way. There is none other name given under heaven among men whereby we may be saved (Acts iv, 18). Christ told men to look unto Him and they would be saved. Christ is God, and when we receive Christ we receive God. The Son has left on record that blessed truth, "Him that cometh unto Me I will in nowise cast out" (John, vi, 37).

8. All before Him or beside Him were thieves and robbers. I take it that the expression "All that ever came before me" has the same thought as in Ex. xx, 3, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." The first thief and robber was Satan, who tried to take Adam and Eve away from God.

9. Again He says that He is the door, and He speaks of safety and plenty. Not only is He the door, but He is also our salvation and our food. He said, "He that eateth Me, even he shall live by Me" (John vi, 57). Any one may enter in and find in Him salvation and rest and peace and plenty.

10. He desires to give life and life abundantly, while the thief seeks only to destroy. The father of all the thieves is called the adversary, who goeth about seeking whom he may devour (1 Pet. v, 8). Christ is our life. When we receive Him, we have life, and when we let Him fill us with Himself we have abundance of life.

11. He says, "I am the Good Shepherd." Elsewhere He says, or rather is spoken of as the Great Shepherd and the Chief Shepherd (Heb. xiii, 20, 21; 1 Pet. v, 4). As the Good Shepherd He gives His life for us that He may save us. As the Great Shepherd He works in us the things which are pleasing to God. As the Chief Shepherd He will reward us at His coming for the service we have permitted Him to accomplish in us.

12. The hireling thinks more of his own life than the welfare of the sheep. He is not one with the Good Shepherd, though professedly serving Him. This and the next verse are fully set forth in those chapters in Jeremiah and Ezekiel, already referred to. Let each answer for himself as pastor, teacher or Christian worker, Am I one with the Good Shepherd in self renouncing and self denying labor, seeking nothing for myself, but only the welfare of those with whom He brings me in contact?

13. "Because he is an hireling." There may be Christian workers in all positions, even as missionaries on the foreign field, whose principal thought is their position and their salary rather than the salvation of souls and the glory of God.

14. He knows His sheep, and they know Him. The Lord knoweth them that are His, and in the judgment He will make no mistake. He weigheth our actions and regards our thoughts and is ever ready to show Himself strong on behalf of those who trust Him (II Chron. xvi, 9). He even keeps a book for those who think upon Him (Mal. iii, 16).

15. The Father is wholly occupied with His Son and with the welfare of all through Him. The Son is wholly occupied with the Father and with seeking the welfare of all whom the Father has given to Him. They understand each other perfectly. They would have us as one with them, as they are with each other.

16. "Other sheep I have." Until after His resurrection there was no command to preach except to the Jews, but now the command is to go into all the world, to every creature, that all who will may come. The worker must not be discouraged because all who hear do not believe. All that the Father giveth Him shall come to Him. He shall see of the travail of His soul and shall be satisfied, and He shall not fail nor be discouraged (John vi, 37; Isa. liii, 11; xlii, 4). May the frequent repetition of these and other texts in these lessons be as helpful to the reader as to the writer. I do believe God.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning March 19. "Self Mastery"—Text, 1 Cor. ix, 24-27.

"Every man that striveth for mastery is temperate in all things."

Even prizefighters when in training are kept under rigid rules as to food, drink, exercise and sleep. All athletes know that temperateness and regularity are essential to strength.

No less is true in the Christian life. The body has the greatest influence on the spirit life. No man can be gluttonous, slovenly, lascivious, drunken and still be pure in heart and mind. One may be diseased in body, weak and physically wrecked, and yet triumphant in soul. The man is a spirit in a material body. The important question is, Which is master? If the bodily appetites and passions rule, then the man is slave to worse than beastly powers. He grows earthly, sensual, devilish. If the spirit rules, then the body in obeying the higher reason comes to its highest freedom and ease and efficiency. Every appetite of body is recognized as right in its place and as indicating a need to be satisfied at the proper time and in the proper way. But all are to be kept in bounds and all powers of body are to be used to serve the highest interests of the soul. Pleasure will come in the gratification of each appetite, but no power of body is to be used just for the purpose of feeling the pleasure in its exercise and with no higher end in view. Sleep is for rest and must have its time and limits. It is not to be indulged at all times nor as a gratification of the feeling of indolence.

The spirit is to be master and to make all powers work for its perfect development. Patience, endurance, self repression, self urging, watchfulness, prudence, courage, will all be needed.

Right Rev. Frederick Temple, archbishop of Canterbury, says: "I am a total abstainer because I believe that this is the most effective mode of bringing about sobriety in the community in general. I believe I can do more as a total abstainer in that direction than I could if I were to be ever so carefully moderate in consuming alcoholic drinks."

In the United States there are 283,000 saloons, which cost their supporters $1,000,000 annually. Is the benefit derived from them worth what it costs?

Every one must and does settle the question of what shall be his practice in regard to alcoholic drinks. Shall he use them or abstain? To let them alone is safe. Health does not require their use. Their continued use may injure health, and in case of many diseases the chances are much lessened for recovery when the patient has used alcoholic drinks.

The saloon is a popular institution

"CAN'T GOD COUNT?"

Two children were carrying a basket of cakes to their grandmother. As often happens with children—and with grown people, too—they were curious to know what was in the basket, and so they carefully raised the corner and looked in. When their greedy eyes saw the tempting cakes, their mouths fairly watered to take them. After counting them over several times, they almost made up their minds to eat just one of them. Nobody would know it, and it would taste so good!

While they were gazing at the cakes and just ready to take one, the little girl looked up into her brother's face and thoughtfully asked the matter-of-fact question, "Can't God count?"

This settled the matter immediately, and all the cakes were carried to their grandmother.

GOD UNDERSTANDS.

A touching little incident is told of one of the Chinese babies, aged about six years, who was an inmate of a mission home. One evening, after her evening prayer, she got off her little knees and turned with a very disturbed air, saying, "Mrs. Field, do you think God understands Chinese?"

"Oh, yes," said Mrs. Field. "But why do you ask?"

"Because sometimes when I feel very unhappy, I like to pray to God in Chinese; of course, I always say my prayers at night in English, but sometimes I like to pray in my own language."

She was assured that her Heavenly Father understood all languages, and she could relieve her overburdened little heart in her own language in perfect safety.

GOD IS KEEPING WATCH.

A little story, which beautifully illustrates the childlike faith that may be every Christian's, is told of a 4-year-old who inquired of her widowed mother one moonlight night:

"Mamma, is the moon God's light?" The lamp had just been put out, and the timid little girl, as well as her mother, was afraid of the dark; but presently she saw the bright moon out of her window, and it suggested the question: "Is the moon God's light?"

"Yes, Ethel," the mother replied: "the moon and stars are all God's lights."

Then came the next question from the little girl: "Will God blow out His light and go to sleep, too?"

"No, my child," replied the mother, "His lights are always burning."

Then the timid little girl gave utterance to a sentiment that thrilled the mother's heart and led her to a more complete trust in her God: "Well, mamma, while God's awake, I am not afraid."

LIKE HIM.

A promising young merchant presented his better half with a handsome piano lamp on her birthday. He was much flattered when she told Him she intended to give it his name, until he asked her reasons for such a peculiar proceeding.

"Well," she said, "you know, dear, it has a lot of brass about it; it is handsome to look at; requires a good deal of attention; is remarkably brilliant; is sometimes unsteady on its legs; flares up occasionally; is always out at bed time, and is bound to smoke."

The man who lives for Christ is ready to also die for Christ.

BITS OF KNOWLEDGE.

In Africa wives are sometimes sold for two packets of hairpins.

The deer really weeps, its eyes being provided with lachrymal glands.

Ants have brains larger in proportion to the size of their bodies, than any other living creature.

There is enough opium in red poppies to do mischief, and the autumn crocus, if the blossoms are chewed, causes illness.

There are three varieties of the dog that never bark—the Australian dog, the Egyptian shepherd dog and the "lion-headed" dog of Thibet.

The leaves and flowers of the oleander are deadly, and the bark of the catalpa tree is very mischievous; the water dropwort, when not in flower, resembles celery, and is virulent.

The oldest university in the world is El Ayhar at Cairo. It is the greatest Mohammedan university, having clear records dating back nearly a thousand years.

The berries of the yew have killed many persons, and it is pretty well known nowadays that it is not safe to eat many peach pits or cherry kernels at once.

The insect known as the water boatman, has a regular pair of oars, his legs being used as such. He swims on his back, as in this position there is less resistance to his progress.

SOME RESPECTABLE SINNERS.

RALPH LAMBERT'S TEMPTATION

By Mary Graham.

O have $1,000 a year, and spend $800 or less, means a probable competence for the future; to have $1,000, and spend $1,000, means no present dishonesty, but probable future distress; to have $1,000, and spend $1,200 or more, means—just such temptations as the one which came to Ralph Lambert on a certain day in July, 18—.

He and Mariana had not begun right when, at the time of their marriage they had bought a $10,000 house with the $2,000 which belonged to her, leaving an $8,000 mortgage, the interest of which must be paid twice a year.

They had hoped, in the beginning, to reduce the mortgage gradually, but how could that be done, when the needs of the household required more than every dollar of the bread-winner's salary?

A smaller house in a less stylish neighborhood would have made them much happier in the end, for the struggle to make both ends meet would then have been entirely unnecessary.

Mariana was at first kept in ignorance of the fact that their bills were not all paid promptly. She then made a brave effort to economize, but Ralph could not bear to see her without all the comforts to which she was accustomed, and did not heartily second her efforts. Being of a sanguine disposition, he thought that in time there would be "some way" out of their difficulties, and that everything would be paid.

But on the day we speak of, a crisis seemed to have come in their affairs: something must be done or their pretty home must go. Notice had been received some weeks before, from the Trust Company holding their mortgage, and Ralph knew that the $200 half-yearly interest must be raised within a certain time. At present, he only had $100 at his command, and part of that would have to go towards household expenses. He had tried to borrow from some of his friends, but they all seemed to be as poor as himself.

Once or twice his uncle, the president of the bank in which he was employed, had helped him out, but it was always with a well-merited reproof for spending more money than was warranted by his income. Then a thought occurred to Ralph. Why could he not borrow from the bank? It was a rich and soulless corporation, and no one would suffer for the act. It would only need the careful alteration of one or two figures in his books, and there would be no chance to discover any discrepancy until long after the money had been replaced.

The thought came again and again, as he walked towards home that afternoon. The most plausible arguments on the difference between borrowing and stealing tried to insinuate themselves into his mind.

His wife was not usually very demonstrative, but to his surprise, she met him at the door and threw her arms around him.

"Oh!" she exclaimed, as they went in together, "I am so glad you have come, and so inexpressibly glad that I married you instead of Miles Rushton."

"So am I, but what makes you go back to those old days?"

"Haven't you seen this morning's paper? He has been arrested in Vernon for defalcation. You know, he's been cashier of the bank there for years. This has been going on for some time; first, very small sums, and, afterwards, increasing. He only intended to borrow at first, but, you know, that is what nearly all defaulters say."

Ralph was quiet and very pale. His wife saw that he was more affected by the news than she had anticipated. She ran for some water, and soon returned, saying:

"Ralph, I'd rather live in two rooms knowing that you were honest, than in a palace with anyone capable of a dishonest act like that."

did not know the worst, and there could be no better moment than the present one of high resolve, to communicate it to her.

"You know at a forced sale a house rarely, if ever, brings anything like its value. Your two thousand would have to go."

"Better that than your honor or mine," she answered firmly. "Perhaps it might be better in the end after all, for if we were in a smaller, less stylish house, we might live within our income, and you have no idea how the thought of debt weighs upon me."

Ralph remembered that his wife had more than once proposed to sell the house and move into a smaller one, but he would not listen to her. Would that he had done so before the necessity for selling had become imperative.

"I cannot help feeling that God has saved us from something far, far worse than poverty, and I am sure that if we try to do right and ask His help, that He will help us."

And they did ask Him, and new courage seemed to be given to both for all that might lie before them.

Ralph promised that if in any honest manner the house could be saved from a forced sale, he would take immediate steps to dispose of it in a way that would involve less loss. They would then begin life over again in a smaller house, better suited to their income, and with the firm resolve to let "pay as we go," be their financial motto.

His uncle was taken once more into the young man's confidence, and to Ralph's own surprise, the whole story was told to him. It was like a leaden weight removed when his uncle grasped his hand with more cordiality than was wont, saying:

"THANK GOD, RALPH, THAT HE SAVED YOU."

"Oh! Mariana, do you really mean that?" exclaimed Ralph, and in a moment he found himself unburdening his heart to her. She was shocked at first to find that even he, whom she considered the soul of honor, should have been assailed by such a temptation; but the feeling was succeeded by one of supreme thankfulness that the thought had not been carried out.

"And if the choice lies between that and having the home sold over our heads, do you mean to say that you would choose the last?" asked Ralph.

"Without a question!" answered Mariana, fervently clasping her husband's hand.

There was a courage about her which could not but communicate itself to him. Then a thought struck him; perhaps she

"Thank God, Ralph, that he saved you from that first downward step; and that you and Mariana have been brought to see the folly of living a little beyond your income, instead of a little within it."

Being convinced of his nephew's intention to alter his style of living as soon as possible, he prevented the forced sale of the house, and assisted in disposing of it.

A new home with a very small incumbrance upon it, was exchanged for the old one. The freedom from anxiety about endless debts, fully compensated for the change of home and neighborhood.

Many of their old acquaintances ceased to remember their existence, but the joy of a contented mind was theirs, and the assurance that God's blessing rested upon their home.

LEPWORTH LEAGUE.

for various reasons. Some people want the liquors sold there. Others want the companionship and the pleasant surroundings. Multitudes of young men in the cities have cheerless lodgings, and find the warmth, luxurious furnishings, music and company which they crave after the work of the day better supplied by the saloons than any other place. They are too poor in many cases to join a club. Libraries and reading rooms are few, and have no facilities for social life. The saloon meets a felt need of many who have no desire for vice, but seek congenial society. With no special prejudice against alcoholic liquors and with no special taste for them, they are drawn to the saloon by its social attractions and drink because it is the custom and is the way in which the accommodations are paid for.

The man who runs the saloon does not wish to make men worse. He wants to get a living and do it in the easiest way. Often he has no trade, and does not find it easy to get a situation in any business. He is in the saloon for the money he can get. If prudent, he is often a total abstainer. Many liquor dealers never drink beer or spirits. They know better than to do it. It is the money they are after.

All that the saloon supplies can be better furnished in other ways. Arbitrary use of force will not in a free country settle the problem presented. It is not the question of the reform of men who drink and abuse their families and become an expense to the public. It is not altogether the question of the saloon as a school of vice. All these points are involved, but the strength of the hold of the saloon on society lies in the fact that it meets a social want grounded in a real need which is not supplied in any other manner. The saloon is the poor man's club. It is the best form yet found, but not the best that can be found. All it gives should be found without its evil features.

The reform movements of past years have relied upon total abstinence pledges, reform clubs with formal meetings, debates, and occasionally poorly furnished reading rooms, to counteract the saloon influence. Prohibitory laws are the favorite device of others. Good as far as they go, none of these means or all of them combined have checked the evil. Something more than wearing a piece of ribbon is needed, something more than talk. What can be done?

Pleasant meeting places for those having no home surroundings are the prime necessity. Music and beauty in furnishings and freedom for social conversation and recreation must be had. Refreshments at low prices and of proper kinds must be furnished. No attempt at charity or compulsion must be in the plan. The ordinary man who frequents the saloon has no need of charity. He treats others. He is independent and pays his way. If you wish to abolish the saloon, you must enlist him in the scheme of replacing it with something better. Charity schemes will not do.

MEXICO'S NATIONAL DRINK.

It is Made of the Sap of the Century Plant and is Called Pulque.

The juices of the maguey or century plant form a universal drink among the Mexicans. These plants blossom only once and that at about ten years of age, after which they die. When the blossom stock appears in the center of the plant, at the base of the long, thick leaves, the maguey farmer watches it carefully until it reaches a certain stage in its development, and he then cuts it out in such a manner as to leave a bowl-like depression. Into this receptacle is poured the sap which would have gone to nourish the long blossom stock had it been left in the plant, and from these juices the famous Mexican beverages are made.

A harvester makes his way from plant to plant in the maguey field, gathering the liquid by means of a crude siphon and a pigskin bag. The siphon most commonly used consists of a long necked gourd with a hole at either end. The sap gatherer places the smaller end of this gourd in the liquid filled hollow in the center of the plant, and then by putting his mouth over the larger end and sucking the air from the gourd he draws up the liquid into his siphon. The gourd being filled, a stopper is placed in the hole at the large end and the measure is emptied into the pigskin.

The juice thus obtained is passed through a simple process of fermentation which requires about 24 hours when it becomes fit for use as a beverage. The chief drink thus obtained from the maguey is pulque, which is the Mexican national beverage. This liquor has the appearance of icod buttermilk and it is said to resemble it very much in taste. The fluid becomes unpalatable and useless, however, after 48 hours and consequently it must be consumed as soon after making as possible. According to Modern Mexico, pulque making is an enormous industry in Mexico.

Mexico City alone consumes 100,000 pints a day, besides quantities of mescal and tequila. Pulque is made from the large maguey by fermentation, while mescal is a much more intoxicating liquor, obtained by distillation from the heart and the root of a smaller variety of the same plant. Tequila is also a brand of maguey sap.

A well developed maguey plant will yield from 100 to 150 gallons of sap. The sap must be gathered daily for several weeks, sometimes for three months, before it ceases to flow. The natives regard these beverages as an essential part of their diet, and their consumption is universal among all classes of people. Manufacturer.

Lottery Superstitions.

One strange result of Bismarck's death, says London Vanity Fair, has been the stimulus that it has given to lottery speculation in Vienna. Never since the terrible catastrophe at the Ring theater have the offices been crowded by so many thousands of superstitious speculators. The age of the departed statesman—84—was, of course, the favorite number, but it soon became impossible to get even the fraction of a ticket. All the factors and multiples of the number were next bought up with eager alacrity, and there was a run on every other figure even remotely connected with the hero's life. Many serious gamblers despise these arithmetical coincidences and follow the haphazard which assigns numbers to incidents and characteristics.

One old woman entered an office and besought the clerk to tell her what figure represented "Reichskanzler." The compilers of the mystic lists had omitted this important word. "How ever," said the official, "Stag's bill was Bismarck's favorite spot"—it is, in fact, his burial place—"and 'stag' is 29—a first class chance." The good lady planked her hard earned florin on the stag, but had no luck. Indeed the drawings so far have gone dead against the believers in signs and omens.

A Many Sided Man is William.

The people of Constantinople presented Emperor William with a silver vase. He will have a fountain erected in Stamboul as a return gift. As soon as the idea seized him the emperor designed a fountain and sent the plans to the sultan.

There is no denying the versatility of this astonishing young man. When his soul yearns for a song or a symphony, he sits down and composes one. If the nation needs an anthem, his facile talent turns one out. When he wants to read an interesting book of romance, travel or history, he promptly writes just such a book.

Emperor William prides himself on his capacity to command an army or a fleet of battleships. He is a finished horseman, a hunter of big game, a lover of wild sport and an adept at the gentler graces of twanging a light guitar or troling a love song.

He does many things well, and if he could still the buzzing of that divinely commissioned bee in his bonnet he might settle down to be a very useful citizen.—New York Journal.

Boston's Big Station.

The largest railway station in the world is building in Boston, and on unique plans, having two stories for trains, local trains running in and out of the basement on a new loop system, and all tracks are being fitted with the third rail for electricity. The capacity of the entire depot will not be far from 2,000 trains per day. The building has a ten acre roof, and the waiting room is 225 feet long and two stories high. The basement is six feet below the main level of the neighboring sea, and in order to build it there first had to be put in the largest cofferdam ever known, 2,000 by 700 feet. In this a great cup of cement was laid, resting upon 4,400 piles, and in this cup the building stands. In order to make room for this great building 210 others were demolished, which sheltered during business hours 4,000 people.—Philadelphia Record.

4. Yet, withal, THE PRESENT CUTLOOK IS FULL OF HOPE. Of all the faiths in the world, Christianity alone presents the appearance of a world-wide religion. Mr. Gladstone has said that "the art, literature, the systemized industry, invention and commerce—in a word, the power of the world—are almost wholly Christian." The Christian nations exercise political power over thirty-two out of fifty-two million square miles of the earth's surface—Protestant Great Britain alone over one-fourth of the whole world—and the Christian peoples increase in a higher ratio than do the non-Christian. The hold of the non-Christian faith is weakened as knowledge increases, while, as Dr. Barrows asserts, "It is vastly significant, and in accordance with the genius of Christianity, that the religion of Christ has in this century of intellectual progress, when superstitions have been dispelled by the light of truth, made more memorable and rapid conquests than in any period since the downfall of Roman paganism."

WANTED—100,000 MISSIONARIES FOR AFRICA!

(BY REV. DONALD FRASER.)

This is the appeal which comes from Livingstonia, British Central Africa. The missionaries write: "Doors are open on every side, at which we helplessly look, unable to enter. Where, from the arrival of the white man with God's message, there has been stolid indifference, or even fierce opposition; to-day there come deputations of old men and young, saying, 'We, too, would learn; send us teachers.' We sit before them and say, 'Fathers, brothers, would that we were able! But you must wait and God will send his messengers some day.' And they say, 'We have waited and waited. Why do you despise us? Our heads are bowed when we reply, 'Brothers, SOMETIME you, too, will hear.' Day by day we cry, 'Lord of the harvest, Thou seest the fields; send, Lord, ere it be too late.' The appeal continues:

But surely this call is too extravagant! No; it is the only method of evangelization. For this must not be the work and enthusiasm of the few, but of the many—of all. Every member of the Church must feel that he is an integral part of the missionary force. Every member can have his share in the redemption of Africa. We know that all can not, must not, go to foreign lands. Would that the slightest indication of such danger were possible! But this is a spiritual work. It recognizes no boundry of sea or land, and some who never left home have been among Africa's best evangelists. What, then, may you do to help forward this triumphant march of God?

1. LIFE. There should be no isolation in the work of the Kingdom. Running throughout the world God has unbroken lines of communication through which He flashes power. Rome is lit with electricity which is generated by a cascade in the Alban hills. So God takes the life and fire of the Church at home and sends it forth to the most isolated parts of the world. So may you contribute in no slight measure to the salvation of Africa. If you are careless, forgetful, prayerless, we shall soon feel the weary chill of your life. But, if in devotion to Christ you pour yourself out for Africa's redemption, we, too, shall know the thrill of your consecration. Tho Zinzendorf found his home in Europe, yet his labors live this day in every continent of the world.

2. PRAY. The true mystical connection, by way of God, between the home and foreign fields, has been traced by every missionary who abides in Christ. Mary Moffat wrote thus: "Oh for a more general spirit of prayer and supplication! I hear from my friend, Miss Lees, that the very time of the awakening here was a season of extraordinary prayer among the Churches at home." Even Paul felt the increase of power when the Church followed him with prayer. His appeal is in the most intense language—"I beseech you, brethren, for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake, and for the love of the Spirit, that ye strive together with me in your prayers to God for me." Our appeal, then, is for 100,000 men and women, who live in obedience to God, and will fulfil their ministry of intercession on our behalf. With such a backing of prayer one man shall become a thousand, and the noonday of Christ shall soon appear.

3. GIVE. It is not to the liberal rich we appeal, but to the 100,000 who give nothing or little, and so lose one of their blessed privileges. There is no over-drain on the liberality of the common Christian. It is a shame if Christ's work among the heathen is to be handicapped while 100,000 ordinary Christians mispend their savings, giving never a thought to the call of Christ. If word came to you that Christ was in chains in Africa, and required a ransom, is there one disciple of all the Lord who would not gladly give all to see Him free? Is He not in chains? In these little ones who lie in darkness, can you not see the brothers of Christ—ay, Christ Himself? "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, you did it unto me." Two cents a week from 100,000 new missionaries will mean an increase of contributions to missions of $100,000 a year. Can not you help, and you will never miss it? Never miss it? Am I only to give to God that which I will never miss? Nay! Let me give until I feel that I am giving, and then God will bless me for entering into the sacrifice of Christ. Do you not believe in foreign missions? What if Christ does? Has he not given tokens of His approval? Perhaps you never thought about it. Yes, that is it. You do not see the scarred and bestial faces. You do not hear the wail to the threatening spirits. You do not see the valleys dotted over with villages where God is not known, and where men and women have no higher thoughts or hopes than their goats; where they live for food and lust, and then creep into the dark to die. We see, we hear, and we cry, "Brothers, pity those who live and perish in the dark."

EDITORIAL.

REV. D. W. REED.

We had received no intimation of the sickness of Bro. Reed till the notice was seen announcing his death. This stated that he died last Thursday, March 2, at his home at Allwood, and was buried on Saturday.

His death is a great surprise. Bro. Smithey had not been in good health for years, and Bros. Booker and Robinson were old men, but when I went to Conference on the train with Bro. Reed last November he seemed to me to be one of the most vigorous young men in our body. I talked with him for some time. He impressed me greatly, and I felt that he would be one of the Master's very best workmen. His talk was not simply Conference gossip, but was on the Church, her great mission and the need of great spiritual endowment if she was to do her best work. He had just finished his four years and was ordained to be an elder at the last Conference. He was married about two years ago. He was serving his second year on the Mr. Pleasant circuit.

MRS. D. J. TRAYNHAM.

As the brethren met at the Twentieth Century Conference in Lynchburg, they heard the sad news of the bereavement which had befallen Bro. Traynham the day before. His wife had passed to the other side of the veil and had entered into the spirit world, and left him sorrowing and lonely.

Her health had not been very good for several years, and when I saw her in January I thought that she was not likely to live long, but I did not expect so speedy a decline. She was an earnest Christian woman, a great help to her husband in his abundant labors. It was a pleasure to enjoy the open and sincere hospitality of her home. She leaves several children, all of them over ten years old. They are blessed in having learned before-hand from her lips where to find strength and comfort. May the peace of God dwell richly with our afflicted brother and his family.

BISHOP GALLOWAY'S WORK.

After leaving Norfolk, Bishop Galloway came to Blackstone, where he addressed a large congregation at the Methodist Church. There were present many of the choice spirits from the adjoining circuits, as well as from Blackstone charge. The address was mainly historical, showing especially that the desire for religious freedom had brought the very best settlers to the United States. The real power of the nation was traced to its foundation, in the Church of Jesus Christ, and then the responsibility of the Church for the present and future life of the nation was dwelt upon in strong terms. At the conclusion of the address, the following resolutions were adopted by a rising vote:

"WHEREAS, We have heard with great interest and satisfaction the addresses of Bishop Chas. B. Galloway, and Dr. W. W. Smith on the subject of the Twentieth Century Thank Offering, be it RESOLVED, That we rejoice to hear that world wide Methodism has banded together and pledged its mighty forces to bring to the Master a great offering of thanksgiving for His great blessings upon us as a Church. We rejoice to hear that the General Conference of our Church has determined to take part in the great movement and that plans have already been formed by our Annual Conference Board for raising the $100,000 which is the portion falling to our Conference.

"We hereby pledge ourselves to do our utmost to raise our portion of this sum."

On the following morning the Bishop took the girls of the Blackstone Female Institute on a tour through Japan, without their leaving the Chapel. He won the hearts of all the girls, and departed for Farmville, followed by their enthusiastic good wishes.

At Farmville he spoke at the Church on Wednesday night, and Bro. Simpson reported the next day that there was a full house, and a great address. The brethren of Farmville adopted the following resolutions:

WHEREAS, It has seemed wise to all bodies of Methodists the world over to bring a thank offering to God in grateful acknowledgement of his goodness and of his signal blessings during the nineteenth century, and in preparation for larger usefulness during the twentieth century, and

WHEREAS, Bishop Galloway has promptly and heartily responded to the call of the Church to lead in this movement, and has earnestly and eloquently presented the reasons for this offering, and the duty and privilege of contributing to it, therefore,

RESOLVED: That we, the Methodists of Farmville, Va., hereby pledge our sympathy and co-operation with the undertaking, and assure our leaders that we will attempt our proportionate part of the $98,000 assumed by the Virginia Annual Conference."

On Thursday afternoon Bishop Galloway met about forty of the pastors of the Lynchburg, Danville, and Charlottesville Districts in the parlor of Centenary Church. The meeting was helpful and inspiring. Dr. Paul Whitehead presided and introduced the speaker. Bishop Galloway then addressed the preachers in forceful and impassioned language, giving the reason for the movement and why it should succeed. After the address much interest was manifested; there was a general discussion and various suggestions were made by those in attendance.

At night Bishop Galloway addressed a large audience in Centenary Church and carried to the hearts of his hearers the responsibility that rested upon us as a nation and especially as a Church of Christ. At the close of the address the following resolutions were adopted:

"Inasmuch as world-wide Methodism is now engaged in gathering a thank offering to God for His signal goodness to our Church, and in view of the fact that our Southern Methodism has, by act of the General Conference, resolved to raise $1,500,000, of which sum $98,000 is apportioned to the Virginia Conference; and

"WHEREAS, we, as members of the Lynchburg Methodist Churches in mass meeting assembled have heard with much pleasure the strong presentation of this great cause by Bishop Galloway; therefore be it

"RESOLVED: That we will cheerfully give of our sympathy, prayers and means to aid in raising our proportionate part of the amount assigned to the Virginia Conference, and will hail with rejoicing every evidence of progress looking to the accomplishment of the great cause in view."

On Friday morning Bishop Galloway addressed the young ladies of the Woman's College, talking especially on Brazil.

On Friday night, notwithstanding the heavy rain, there were about 125 persons who went out to the meeting in Charlottesville, and who were amply repaid for their trouble by the address.

On Sunday Bishop Galloway preached in Lynchburg, an account of which from the news follows:

A large congregation was present Sunday morning at Court-Street Church to hear Bishop Charles B. Galloway. He took for his text the latter clause of the 9th verse of the 47th chapter of Ezekiel: "And everything shall live whither the river cometh." The sermon was an eloquent discourse, in which the minister spoke of the great benefits brought to the world by Christianity. In the vision in which the prophet Ezekiel saw the water issuing forth, the water was a type of the spirit. The introduction of Christianity gave a new conception of God. It gave the conception of the fatherhood of God. As the water made all things to live wherever it flowed, so Christianity gives life.

The introduction of Christianity also gives a new conception of the relations of man to man. It brings, benefits, too, even where it is rejected. Those who do not accept it yet receive good from it; it is a benefit to them, to their lives and property. It gives a new conception of woman and of childhood. In heathen countries the children may be cast out or killed. In countries enjoying the benefits of Christian civilization a new conception is given of childhood.

Christianity gives new ideas of the relations between nations. The belief in arbitration is spreading. "I believe that it will not be long before the prayer of the young emperor of Russia will be answered, and that the swords of men will be beaten into ploughshares and the spears into pruning hooks."

It is not true that the great minds are veering away from God. The greatest scientists, the greatest poets, and men of great mind have been, with a few exceptions, believers in God.

At night Memorial Church was thronged with a large congregation who listened most intently to the words of this eloquent divine. Bishop Galloway took his text from St. John xii., part of 26th verse: "If any man serve me, him will my Father honor," and preached a strong argument in favor of personal, practical, and everyday service of God, especially as applied to helping our brother man. The discourse was powerful in logic, beautiful in oratory and comforting in speech.

The Bishop said, after his introduction, that ambition gets into our very best service. We sometimes give in the Church. Our motives are not always the best. Heaven is an achievement, and not a gift. It is reached after humble walking and faithful service. The only way to serve God is to help some one else. When a soul is born into the new kingdom, the normal expression is to go out and bring somebody else in. When a man invents a new machine he immediately rushes to Washington to get a patent to keep some one else from enjoying the benefits of his genius. The best evidence of a soul's entrance into the new life, is the effort to bring in others to enjoy the same with him.

The way to touch the heart of our Father in heaven is to minister to his child on earth, get into his life and with our loving arms help him bear the burdens of life. True greatness and distinction is the reward of faithful, self-sacrificing service.

SPIRITUALITY VS. FORMALISM.

The following incident is worthy of special thought as an illustration of the way to raise a missionary collection and carry on God's work:

A certain young vicar found himself in charge of a parish where a predecessor had given loose reign to ritualistic tendencies of the most ultra sort, and with them secular tendencies of equally pronounced character. The previous vicar had even encouraged a dance among his young people on the Saturday evening before the Eucharist as a means of attracting them to the Church. Fairs, festivals, bazaars and all the like group of worldly schemes were the common resort for raising money, but the spirit of prayer and the Spirit of God had little exhibition or administrative control.

The congregation was large, and the outward signs of prosperity were abundant. But the new vicar felt that it was all a deceptive external shell, and that there would be no true life, health, and growth where such sort of Church conduct existed. Accordingly, he at once, with much prayer, began to preach against compromises with the world, and the use of worldly methods, and insisted vigorously on a Scriptural, spiritual, prayerful, Holy Ghost life and walk and service.

The Church began to empty, and so rapid was the decline in the congregation that a deputation of twelve men, representing the officers, churchwardens, etc., went to the Bishop to protest against the new vicar's methods. The Bishop sent his wife, a gifted woman, to visit the parish and especially the vicar. She was kindly received and enquired into the reasons for the course he was pursuing in demolishing the Lord's work as he found it in the parish. With affectionate frankness he proceeded to show how far the former ways of conducting the Church were from Scriptural methods. Then kneeling with the Bishop's wife he sought life from above. He prayed in the Holy Ghost, and in the midst of his prayer his companion said: "Pray no longer; you are right and I am wrong."

The vicar went on with his reforms—until there were none left to reform. He went into Church one morning to find but two persons present. They were in sympathy, however, and in place of the usual service, THOSE THREE SPENT AN HOUR AND A HALF IN PRAYER. They pleaded with God to take off them the burden of responsibility, and Himself take charge of the Church.

A powerful work of the Spirit then began. The first fruits were the conversion of the twelve men that had waited upon the Bishop to have the new vicar removed. The Church filled up with a new congregation in part, and in part with a transformed body of people, formerly pursuing secular methods and moved by a worldly spirit.

Prayer came to be a prevailing habit, the Holy Spirit was recognized as the presiding officer in all Church life; voluntary offerings through simple boxes placed at the Church door, and labeled, "For offerings from the saints." A simple, primitive Gospel was preached without the inventions of formalism and secularism, and God's blessing conspicuously rested on all the work.

Subsequently the Bishop himself visited the parish, and sitting with his own chaplain in the vestry, inquired of the Churchwardens as to the number of communicants. The party inquired of was an humble blacksmith, and represented a congregation of poor working people like himself, and he answered the Bishop: "We never count our communicants, but when the Lord's Supper is celebrated, few, if any, go out and the Church is always full." "But," said the Bishop, "how do you keep your communicants together, seeing you have no guilds and societies and festivals?" "Well I'll tell you, my lord," said the simple working man, "our vicar first gets his people soundly CONVERTED, then he gets 'em CLEANSED, and then he gets 'em FILLED with the Holy Ghost, and then the Holy Ghost keeps 'em and WE DON'T HAVE TO KEEP 'EM AT ALL!" The Bishop, turning to the chaplain, remarked, "we have nothing like this in the diocese."

Further inquiry developed the fact that in raising money, for example for missions, no appeals are made. The people are reminded of their privilege of contributing on the following Lord's day to the Lord's cause; and thus poor people, whose average wages do not exceed sixteen shillings sterling per week, in that one missionary offering gave one hundred and fifty pounds. They support six missionaries abroad, and one of them is kept in the field by a class of three hundred poor women. The vicar says he has more money than is needed for all Church expenses, and only new Testament methods are encouraged. A prominent man, whose work for God calls him into all parts of the land on mission work, and who has watched the history of this Church, says that he knows nowhere anything that so closely resembles and reproduces the apostolic times.

FRANCE AND THE DREYFUS CASE.

(CONDENSED FROM THE ENGLISH REVIEW OF REVIEWS.)

The Dreyfus case has been one of wide and deep interest throughout the civilized world. It can scarcely be called a "missionary" topic, but in view of its revelation of the condition of France and its bearing on the Jewish race, it has been thought well to reproduce in our pages the masterly resume of it by W. T. Stead, of London. France, especially Papal France, has been on trial. The final verdict is not yet given, but no affair has shown more clearly than this the need for national righteousness. It has excited the passions of the French people to such an extent that it even seems to many to have threatened the stability of the French Republic. Mr. Stead says:

I have just spent a week in Paris, and left the gay city with a feeling that the "affaire" Dreyfus had helped me to realize more vividly than before the state of things that probably prevailed at Jerusalem at the time of the crucifixion. I do not venture to assert the innocence of Albert Dreyfus. Much less would I venture to draw any parallel between the condemned Alsatian and the sublime figure of Him who for nearly two thousand years has been the centre of the devotion of Christendom. But any intelligent Greek who visited Jerusalem in the days of Pilate must have felt very much about the trial of the Nazarene as the intelligent observer of today feels about the "affaire" Dreyfus. In both cases the central figure is a Jew. In both cases the evidence, whether true or false, was prest with incredible violence, and with scanty regard for legality or justice, and the sentence was afterward defended by a campaign of calumny, the conductors of which hesitated at no crime in order to justify their conduct. We have in Paris all the familiar factors. There are the scribes of the press, and the Pharisees of the Chauvinists, and the high priests of the dominant Church, all combining their forces in order to crush the one victim who, they consider, it is necessary should perish in order that their nation may live. The element of the rabble is the same in Paris as in Jerusalem; but unfortunately in France there is one element of mischief which did not exist in pro-consular Judea. The Roman legionaries stood superbly indifferent to the clamor of the rabble and the fanaticism of the priesthood. It is very different in France today, for here the chief element of danger is the general staff, the officers of which have so far identified themselves with the condemnation of Dreyfus as to render it extremely difficult to reconsider the question of his guilt or innocence without apparently striking at the prestige of the army. From the point of view of a supposititious Greek also, the grief of the mother mourning her crucified Son would not seem more poignant than that of the young wife lamenting the loss of her husband. Another striking parallel between Paris and Jerusalem is the frequent handing backward of the Dreyfus case from the administration to the courts, and from the courts to the administration. It is Pilate and Herod, Herod and Pilate over again. Nor are there lacking those who play the role of Pilate's wife, whose warning and reproving voices urge the head of the French government to beware lest he stain his hand in the blood of an innocent man. Only one element is lacking in the babel and confusion of angry voices which hurtle through the air in Paris, and find an echo in the press of the world. The meekness, the patience as of a lamb before the slaughter, which characterized the early disciples, is not conspicuous in France today. The champions of military prestige and the defenders of suffering justice, are locked together in the arena in a struggle which knows no mercy, while the air resounds with the savage cries of those who on either side urge on the fray.

THE HISTORY OF THE AFFAIRE.

The following brief statement of the rise of the Dreyfus case may not be unwelcome to some of our readers:

Alfred Dreyfus, an Alsatian Jewish officer of high reputation and of spotless character, had the exceptional good or bad fortune of being the only Jewish officer on the French general staff.

This staff, consisting of two hundred officers, exercises a control over the French army. Some years ago a leakage was reported of the secrets which were in the possession of the members of the general staff. The task of discovering the guilty person was entrusted to a ferocious anti-Semite by the name of Sandherr. This official was compelled to suspect some one, and having two hundred persons to choose from—all apparently innocent—it is not surprising that he allowed his prejudice to lead him, as by an unerring instinct, to the one Jew in the whole crowd. Once supplied with this clue, the military detective found no difficulty in accumulating proofs which seemed to him confirmation strong as proofs of Holy Writ. At last, having accumulated his proofs, the blow fell. Dreyfus was arrested (Oct. 15, 1894), and after being in vain plied with every menace and inducement to confess his guilt, was sent before a court-martial, found guilty, condemned to degradation and to hard labor for life in the convict colony of the Island of the Devil, off French Guiana. There, immured in an iron cage in solitary confinement, he remains to this day.

The anti-Semites, led by the ferocious M. Drumont, seized the condemnation of Dreyfus as a welcome text on which to inveigh against the Jews as enemies of France. On the other hand, the Jews, seeing in the condemnation of Dreyfus an outburst of race prejudice and of religious fanaticism, formed a syndicate for the purpose of securing a revision of the sentence which they were profoundly convinced was unjust. From the English point of view, nothing could be more natural, but apparently to a large number of the French people the creation of this syndicate was one of the worst offences against civilization and morality since the crucifixion. The Jewish committee set itself to work carefully to accumulate evidence as to the injustice of the sentence against Dreyfus. At first their efforts seemed destined to failure, but after a time they succeeded in producing evidence which raised a grave doubt in impartial minds as to whether there had not been a gross miscarriage of justice.—(A brother of Captain Dreyfus brought the charge that Major Esterhazy was the real culprit, and complicating letters were produced. Major Esterhazy was, however, acquitted.)

Colonel Picquart, an officer with a stainless reputation and a high sense of justice, was tormented by a doubt that after all Dreyfus had been innocent. But his military superiors did everything to silence him, and to remove him as far as possible from the centre of authority. It became evident that having condemned Dreyfus the military authorities were determined at any cost that they would maintain his condemnation before the world. "We may be knaves," said one distinguished officer to an acquaintance, "but at any rate we are not fools. Dreyfus may be guilty or may be innocent, but whatever he is, he is condemned, and condemned he shall remain." The struggle was long and anguished. On the side of the general staff was the whole body of the officers of the army, the immense majority of the Chamber of Deputies, the influence of the Roman Catholic Church, and the popular prejudice against the Jews. On the other hand, there were but the Jews themselves, a handful of French Protestants, and that which proved a decisive element in the case—an array of facts which seem to point irresistibly to the innocence of Dreyfus.

When at last the action of M. Zola forced the case into court, the action of the authorities in stifling the inquiry, and in meeting the demand for a revision of the sentence by non possumus, and the chosen jagee, outraged the conscience of the civilized world. The conspiracy of silence had triumphed in form, but in fact the imperial prestige which had hitherto surrounded the headquarters' staff was irremediably destroyed. Still, however, the demand for revision was obstinately resisted, and, by way of making matters worse, Colonel Picquant was marked down as a victim. He was arrested and thrown into prison. Then when the case came up for hearing, and he hoped to have an opportunity of defending himself against the calumnies with which he was assailed, the proceedings were suspended, and he was transferred to the military authorities to be tried by court-martial on the charge of forging a document the authenticity of which had been admitted by its author.—(Colonel Picquart is now held on the charge of having divulged secrets of the Dreyfus case to his counsel. He has appealed for civil trial, but the military authorities still expect to bring him before a court-martial.)

When formal interpellation was made in the Chamber of Deputies concerning Dreyfus, M. Cavaignac, then minister of war, made a great speech from the tribune, affirming his absolute conviction as to the guilt of Dreyfus, supporting and confirming his opinion by producing and reading as conclusive proof a letter not produced at the trial, which certainly seemed to imply that Dreyfus was in guilty relations with a foreign power. So triumphant a vindication was M. Cavaignac's speech regarded by the opponents of Dreyfus that it was ordered to be printed and circulated by the billsticker throughout every department of France. The anti-revisionists exulted. The friends of Dreyfus were in despair. Then suddenly, as a bolt from the blue, came one of the immense surprises with which French politics abound. Colonel Henry, the head of the military detective department, being appealed to on his honor as a soldier by the minister of war, admitted, without reserve, that he had himself forged the incriminating document upon which M. Cavaignac relied as the conclusive demonstration of the guilt of Dreyfus. He was placed under arrest. That night in his cell a horrible scene was enacted, the true details of which will some day be revealed. The story current in Paris is that after Colonel Henry had been left for some hours to reflect in solitude, the cell door opened and admitted an emissary from the general staff, who, producing a razor, told the bewildered Colonel that the same sense of patriotism which led him to forge the proof of Dreyfus's guilt rendered it necessary for him to cut his throat.—(It is certain, at least, that this officer was the last to see Colonel Henry alive. When he left the cell the door was locked and he said to the jailor: "Do not disturb him for two hours; he wishes to be alone." When the door was finally opened Colonel Henry lay dead.)

If this be true it is only too symbolic of the ruthlessness with which the conspirators resort to any and every means to prevent the exposure of their crime. They had, however, on this occasion overreached themselves. Henry's razor did what argument and demonstration failed to effect. The long-slumbering conscience of France began to wake up. Public meetings, often crowded, enthusiastic, and unanimous, began to be held in Paris, and the provinces demanded revision. The resignation of General Zurlinden, M. Cavaignac's successor as the minister of war, while illustrating the dogged opposition of the generals to admit daylight into their proceedings, did not succeed in stemming the rising tide of public opinion in favor of revision. At last, after many incipient and threatened crises, the Court of Cassation is now making a judicial inquiry into the question of revision, which must surely come. The scandal of postponing it any longer would be too much even for the French Republic to face.

There is no doubt that the Dreyfus case has shed a ray of sudden illumination upon a veritable hell's kitchen of duplicity, roguery, lying, conspiracy, and all manner of infernal intrigue. It is the atmosphere that is engendered by militarism. It is the stench of the cancer that is eating its way into the vitals of Europe. Let us hope that this will end, if not in the revindication of Dreyfus, at any rate in the rehabilitation of the good name of France, now so sorely tarnished.

These Pills are very mild and harmless in their action upon the Liver and Bowels, and where persons are suffering with any Bilious Affections, Headache, especially Sick Headache, Costiveness, Dyspepsia, or any disease of the Liver or Stomach, they should always have a box of them near at hand, and take them by directions found on the box.

The verdict of everybody that has taken Dr. David's Liver Pills is, "They are the best and most pleasant Pills I ever took." All sufferers should give them a trial. Price 25 cents a box; five boxes for $1.00. For sale everywhere. Ask for Dr. David's Liver Pills, and have no other. Sent by mail on receipt of price.

Our Motto:

Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teacher's Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Practice School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent or Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

Religion is an immediate matter between a person and his God.—Rev. C. W. Williams, Baptist, Denver.

Voices.

The world has many voices and teachers, but we are to listen to Jesus and believe in him.—Rev. E. A. Woods, Baptist, San Francisco.

Culture.

Care more for truths than for trivial personalities, and the latter will dwindle. Culture is the sovereign remedy.—Rev. Leon Harrison, Rabbi, St. Louis.

Led by a Child.

Let us not forget that in the struggle for the redemption of the individual and collective life we are led by a child.—Rev. Samuel H. Greene, Baptist, Washington.

Purpose of Resurrection.

The purpose of the resurrection of Christ is not to give new life to earth, but rather to give to the soul the movement toward Christ.—Dr. Cyrus Hamlin, Congregationalist, Tougaloo, Miss.

God's Workers.

It is for us children of the nineteenth century to emulate the faith of the early Christians and demonstrate to the world that we, too, "are workers together with God."—Rev. Samuel H. Greene, Baptist, Washington.

Dramatic Instinct.

The dramatic instinct is natural. It rests upon imitation, which Aristotle says is inborn. The drama is also religious in its origin. It has been intimately connected with religion from the beginning.—Rev. Dr. Eaton, Universalist, New York.

Supreme Goodness.

In history Christ stood for three great ideals. What first struck men was his kindness to the poor, and for two centuries the idea was maintained in the church that supreme goodness consisted in being kind to the poor.—Rev. W. S. Crowe, Episcopalian, New York.

The Church and Christian Life.

The church is not essential to a Christian life. It is but a means to an end. Many men live a Christian life outside the church, but it is better for them to be in the church. To be a churchman means that you swear to God you will try to bring sunshine into the hearts of others.—Dr. Vymoy Morgan, Baptist, Omaha.

God's Constant Care of Man.

What is worth one thing to man is worth infinitely more to God. We call many things debris and worthless, but God takes them up and puts new life in them. So with this body of ours. It is cast off and buried out of sight, but God raises it up again in the glorious resurrection.—Rev. Dr. John Lloyd Lee, Presbyterian, East Liverpool, O.

Constituents of Hope.

Hope is composed of two constituents—desire and expectancy—and the quality and measure of hope depend upon the strength of these two elements. They are the fundamental elements of life, and the measure and quality of life depend upon these two things—what do you wish for and the chance you have of obtaining what you wish for.—Dr. Lyman Abbott, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.

Time's Lesson to Mankind.

It is through hope and aspirations man may prove himself superior to time. Every man is part and parcel of humanity, and when he falls short humanity falls short. We are inclined to blame time for wasting the flower without thought that it is also time which opens the bud. Time may not be the destroyer, but the saver; not the instrumentality for damning man, but for blessing him—the agency which opens the gates of immortality.—Rev. Leo W. Franklin, Hebrew, Omaha.

Man's Need of an Inner Light.

Man must have an inner light—a light that comes from the immortal soul within him. It is the fire of genius, the burning conceptions of lofty ambitions and the moving spirit of self-conscious worth that raise the soul out of the gloom of falsehood and wrong into the clear regions of bright hopes. It is the light of self-respect that develops individual excellence. It is the spirit of devotion that brings the soul to acknowledge its God.—Rev. Dr. William White Wilson, Episcopal, Chicago.

Christ Conquering the World.

Whatever our opinions may be concerning territorial expansion there can be but one opinion on the point of manifest destiny. Jesus Christ is taking the world, and taking it through the nations which have the faiths freest from superstition and error. The great nations of the world are those which honor the Christ. And Christ is honoring them. Manifest destiny is cementing kindred tongues and molding them into the forces which are to put liberty and culture and true faith wherever the human race abides.—Rev. G. E. Hawes, Presbyterian, Pittsburg.

Aspiration Is Achievement.

Happy the man who aspires, who is never content with present good. Blessed the man who hitches his wagon to a star and feels that whatever he may be or have is but the earnest of the greater beyond still to be attained. Yes, truly it is not what a man is, but what he would be, that exalts him, and if he cherishes no "would be" he never will be exalted. The "would be" in us is the divine element. The satisfaction with the "is" is the imprint of our relationship to the animal. The truly successful man is he who ever aspires, though in the eyes of the world he has failed. Failure and success are, after all, relative terms. What the world calls success may be wanting in all the high qualities which make life rich and make life full. What the world calls failure, on the other hand, may be eminent success in the inner glow of conviction, which the heart alone knows.—Rev. David Philipson, Hebrew, Cincinnati.

Milton's Last Poem.

I am old and blind.
Men point at me as smitten with God's frown,
Afflicted and deserted by my kind,
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak; yet, dying,
I murmur not that I no longer see.
Poor, old and helpless, I the more belong,
Father Supreme, to thee!

O Merciful One,
When men are farthest then thou art most near!
When men pass coldly by, my weakness shun,
Thy chariot I hear!

Thy glorious face
Is leaning toward me, and its holy light
Shines upon my lowly dwelling place,
And there is no more night.

On bended knee
I recognize thy purpose clearly shown—
My vision thou hast dimmed that I might see Thyself—thyself alone.

I have naught to fear.
This darkness is the shadow of thy wing.
Beneath it I am almost sacred: here
Can come no evil thing.

Editorial.

THE RISING TIDE.

The last Congress was a notable one and many important actions were taken by it, but in its effect upon life and character, the action taken abolishing the canteen in the Army and Navy stands among the most notable. This statement will probably be only another evidence of intolerant Phariseism to all such as believe with Bishop Potter that the "Prohibitionists are the Pharisees" of modern times, but to the mothers and fathers who have sons in the Army, and who are foolish enough to believe that the Army canteen, or grog shop, is a constant peril to the present and eternal welfare of their children, this action of Congress ranks as among the most important of the session. The law as passed is as follows:

"Section 17. That no officer or private soldier shall be detailed to sell intoxicating drinks as a bar-tender or otherwise in any post exchange or canteen, nor shall any person be required or allowed to sell such liquors in any encampment or fort, or on any premises used for military purposes by the United States; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to issue such general order as may be necessary to carry the provisions of this section into full force and effect."

It seems almost impossible that a great government like ours should have ever allowed a bar-room to be set up at every army post, and should have compelled one of the soldiers to sell intoxicating drinks as any common bar-tender and yet so it was, and throughout the war with Spain the troubles in the discipline of the camps, and the waste of the pay of the soldiers, all could be traced back to the government bar-room, put in the camps by law. The facts in the case were brought out by the Prohibitionists and the charges were most boldly denied by the friends of the government bar-rooms. Ridicule and denunciation (the usual weapons of the drunkard-makers) were hurled at the men who were so unselfishly bringing out the facts, and every possible means used to discredit their statements, but the saloon cannot hide its products. The records were too strong. Facts are stubborn things, and first Secretary Long issued an "order" forbidding the sale of liquor in the Navy and on March 1st the law given above passed, and the legalized "drunkard-making saloon" in the Army and Navy of the United States is no more.

On the same day the Legislature of the State of Illinois passed an act that Miss Francis E. Willard should be one of the two representatives of that great State in statutory hall of the United States Capitol building. When one thinks of the full meaning of this action, it shows the hold which the Prohibition idea has gotten in our great nation. Each State in the Union is allowed to put two statues, and only two, in the great statutory hall of the Capitol at Washington. The hall has become the "Hall of Honor" of our country. Into this hall the third most popular State in the Union has decided to put a woman, the only woman there so far, and this woman is Frances E. Willard, the embodiment of the opposition of the Home to the Saloon and the Drunkard-Makers. But she was a prohibitionist and, therefore, according to Bishop Potter, a "Pharisee." It is almost providential irony that about the time Bishop Potter's letter denouncing Prohibitionists as "Pharisees" was being put in type Congress was PROHIBITING the sale of liquor in the Army and Navy, and Illinois was voting Miss Willard to be one of her two representatives in statutory hall. There she will be as the representative of the unselfish and devoted principles of Prohibition when her critics have been forgotten.

TEXAN (IM)MORALITY.

The Methodist pastors, in weekly meeting in Atlanta, Ga., last Monday, wrought themselves up to a regular paroxysm of rage over the Publishing House matter. And they succeeded in getting the proceedings of their wrath sent out over the country in the associated dispatches. CORRESPONDENCE.

TINY TITANS.

(REV. R. H. BENNETT.)

Success, like the earth, is made up of molecules. Trifles often make or mar a Church service or Sunday-school session. I jotted down the following thoughts one morning in a Sunday-school I attended.

Be in time, even if you have to get up ten minutes earlier or eat a cold breakfast. Do not love your bed or your stomach more than God's work. Lateness is dishonest. Tardiness is a matter of habit. It has no excuse except in rare cases. It is most pernicious. It disorganizes the school. It drives away your scholars if you are an officer or teacher. It tells them that you do not consider the Sunday-school of much importance, and so they drift away to the world and join the almost unnumbered ranks of scholars who have quit and backslidden from God. But worst of all, tardiness in teacher or officer stamps a life-long lateness of habit with all its curses and woes on little lives in their plastic period.

Be in time. For officers and teachers this means be at school BEFORE TIME FOR OPENING.

Have the room clean, even if you have to buy a new broom.

Have the room warm, even if it takes a good fire to do it.

Have the room bright, even if you have to open the window blinds, or light the gas.

Have the black-board rubbed off clean before school begins. Last Sunday's picture on it looks stale from smears.

Have the singing books and Bibles distributed before time to open school.

Have all the hymns selected before time for announcing them.

As officers, don't stand before the school and consult or hunt a hymn while the school waits to hear your decision.

Never let the school be without something before it.

Never come to school looking listless, discouraged or gloomy.

Wrestle mightily with God before you come to school for his Spirit's presence with you and with all the members.

Remember he is present always and listening and looking at everything.

Remember He is your best friend and is always more than ready to supplant all your weakness.

Remember he will require you to do your very best, but he is not unreasonable and will never require you to do anything beyond your power.

Lift your heart to God in prayer all through the session.

PRESIDING ELDERS.

(BY O. G. BURFORD.)

Beloved, let us love one another, for love is of God and every one that loveth is born of God and knoweth God.

He that loveth not knoweth not God, for God is love.—First John 4:7-8.

I have read with interest several letters in the RECORDER concerning the presiding eldership, and note one by "Twenty-Year Pastor." I am not a preacher, but I am a member of his blessed body. He says in his word that if one member suffers all the members suffer alike. If our brother believes this, how can he, as a branch of the vine, say such things about a fellow-laborer? Surely he was not guided by the workings of the Holy Spirit when writing that letter. How unlike the letters of Paul to Timothy! How unlike the last comforting words of our Saviour to His disciples!

In regard to his charge of burden they impose upon the people, I can only speak from experience. It was my father's pleasure to entertain presiding elders and preachers until his death, and it has been ours ever since. They have a place in our hearts and a welcome in our home as long as the good Lord gives us one. We love to have them come, and look forward to their coming with pleasure.

What would the example of Mary and Martha be worth if we are going to complain and say they are burdens to us? Should the office of presiding elder be discontinued, how our pastors would miss their timely coming! How we stewards would miss them! We could not have the Quarterly Conference to look forward to as a time of refreshing. Our pastors, especially the young ones, would not have them to advise and counsel with. Surely, our twenty year pastor must be in the gall of bitterness or the bonds of iniquity.

We are commanded by the Scripture quoted at the beginning of this letter to love one another. Could a man be in love with his brethren and publish to the world what Twenty-Year Pastor has? I answer upon the authority of His Word, No.

"WRUNG OUT A DOLLAR."

I do not believe there is a presiding elder in the Virginia Conference who is not yearning to do more for the furtherance of His kingdom. How often they are appealed to for help; often giving when they are not able, depriving themselves and their families of necessary comforts no doubt to do so. How often they are expected to head the list with the largest subscription because he bears the title of P. E. I do not believe our presiding elders aspire after the positions they hold. Should the Bishop so direct, no doubt they would accept the humblest charge and work with diligence, looking to Him who has said "Lo, I am with you even unto the end of the world."

Methodism is weak in this section, but we are pressing forward. Rev. R. L. Busby is our pastor, and is doing good work. We welcome Dr. Paul Whitehead back on the Lynchburg district again. We have succeeded in completing a comfortable and attractive house of worship, which adds greatly to our Church. We have a small but live Sunday-school and Epworth League. Hope both will improve in interest and numbers when the weather improves.

"HOBSONIZE."

(BY MALINDA CLEAVER FAYILLE.)

During those days of last summer when the sunken hull of the Merrimac lay between the American and Spanish fleets, and Lieutenant Hobson and his men were held by Admiral Cervera, somebody coined the word "Hobsonize," defining it as the sinking of a ship where it would cause an enemy the greatest annoyance. Note that "Hobsonize" is a verb, active. It means to do vigorously. Being derived from Hobson, it can have no other meaning. "Like Richmond Pearson Hobson" is the best definition of the new word, and young men will do well to pin it in their hats.

Lieutenant Hobson was entirely at the service of his country. He did not fear to undertake anything for her good. He counted his life little beside her welfare. When the Merrimac plan was approved he went about his preparations as calmly and intelligently as he ever went about his daily duties at Annapolis. Everything of value was stripped from the collier. The ground was carefully studied, the brave men chosen with judgment from the many who were anxious to go. Every precaution was taken that he could hope would facilitate the escape of the crew. Lieutenant Hobson knew his business and did everything decently and in order. His life belonged to his country. If he could save it and the lives of his crew for her further service it was his business to do so; if he could not, it was their business to die at their post.

After Santiago fell, Lieutenant Hobson believed he could raise the "Teresa," and gave reasons for his faith which satisfied the Navy Department. He succeeded with the "Teresa," but the elements defeated him. He has wasted no time bemoaning his defeat. He is still about his business of serving his country. He bears with honor the test of success. He is great enough to refuse to make money while the country which educated him is in need of him.

Lieutenant Hobson did not become a hero in the short time he lay with the fleet before Santiago. His earlier life endures with credit the test of the searchlight. Greatness does not grow up like a mushroom—in one night. It is ready for the critical moment because it has been growing through all the quiet years before. It is every man's duty to be a man at all times, whether other men acknowledge his nobility or not. Only thus can he prepare himself to meet his opportunity. He owes the world his best, though she may not make what he thinks due acknowledgment of his payment.

Lieutenant Hobson's prompt refusal of the lecture proposition, and his evident dislike for mere notoriety, are as noble in their way as the work he did in Santiago channel. A man is still young at twenty-eight, and the heads of most young men are easily turned by popular praise. This young man evidently has use for his head in its original position. Heads which have been turned compel the eyes to look backward to some past act. Lieutenant Hobson would continue to look forward to more efficient service of his country.

"Hobsonize," then, means daily living up to the highest mark the individual can reach. It means caring much to be worthy, little to be notorious. It means bearing popularity with modesty. It means an effort to be of greater service instead of stopping to realize upon what has been done. There is need to "Hobsonize" hulk: Santiago ours. There is reason to Hobsonize millions of American boys

GODLINESS BRINGS CONTENTMENT.

Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you do ye even so to them.—Matt. 7:12.

There are a great many wonderful things in this world of ours that will promote happiness. Godliness is one and contentment is another. With these one can be truly happy, while without them one will be most miserable. Godliness is a gift presented to those who will accept it by our Heavenly Father. Contentment is something that Godliness produces, and without these combined there is no real happiness. Yet there are many of God's children void of happiness because they are not contented. As Godliness produces contentment, even so sin produces discouragement and discontentment, and Satan, our soul's great enemy, has learned years ago that discontentment was a downward step in the Christian life, hence he has been, and is now, putting forth every effort to discourage God's children by using his own agents and even working through and influencing Godly men and women to say unkind and discouraging things to and about God's weak ones, thereby causing them to be discouraged and making them discontented and unhappy. Look into the homes of our land and see the deadly work that he has been carrying on for centuries. There is scarcely a family but some one of its inmates are down-hearted, discontented and unhappy, made so for the lack of sympathy and encouragement coming from a heart filled and bubbling over with brotherly and sisterly love. There are thousands of precious souls in hell to day that would not be there if there Christian friends and relatives had spoken kindly and encouragingly to them in times of discouragement. The human nature is very sensitive and if we would promote Godliness and contentment we must exercise more love for each other. And, dear reader, there are people that you and I meet with every day of our lives who need our love, our sympathy, and our encouragement. With these freely exercised their lives would be made happy. So, dear Christian friends, let us unite our forces this year and down Satan and his sinful work by manifesting more love and sympathy for each other and thereby promoting Godliness, contentment, and happiness.

METHODIST ORPHANAGE.

(BY S. S. LAMBETH, JR.)

The committee appointed at the last session of the Virginia Conference to consider the advisability of establishing a Methodist orphanage, held its first meeting at Epworth Church, Norfolk, on the 7th day of February. The members of the committee in attendance were: Drs. W. J. Young and W. W. Smith, and Messrs. S. Q. Collins, W. H. Vincent, S. S. Lambeth, Jr. Messages of regret at their inability to be present were read from Dr. A. Coke Smith, Rev. E. H. Rawlings, and Mr. P. T. Farrow.

The committee effected permanent organization by the election of Dr. W. J. Young as chairman, and S. S. Lambeth, Jr., as secretary. The question of establishing an orphanage was thoroughly discussed, and it was unanimously the sense of the committee that such an institution should be secured as speedily as possible, and that steps should be taken to this end.

The first and great concern of the committee is the raising of sufficient funds for the purchase of a suitable home for this institution, and a plan has been adopted whereby a thorough canvass of the State will be made, and an opportunity given our people to contribute to this worthy object. The committee has also under consideration such matters of detail as the location of the institution and the general plan for its organization, and will be in a position to make these public as soon as sufficient money has been subscribed to insure the success of the movement. Several offers of sites, some with buildings and some without, have been submitted already, one or two of which are peculiarly adapted to the needs of such an institution, and may be had upon very liberal terms. It only remains for the Church to measure up to its opportunity, and to provide the means for this enterprise. Virginia Methodism, aggressive in other matters, has been signally derelict in providing a home for its homeless and helpless ones. The committee brings this matter to the attention of the Church, confident that the object will elicit a hearty and sympathetic response from every quarter. We would urge those of our laymen who have the means to take this cause upon their hearts, and to respond as liberally and as promptly as possible.

Subscriptions may be sent to Dr. W. J. Young, chairman; and any inquiries addressed to the chairman or to the secretary will receive prompt replies. The address of each is Norfolk, Va.

BROTHER J. E. McCULLOCH.

DEAR BROTHER CANNON:

I have read the card of Bro. J. E. McCulloch, recently published in the SOUTHERN METHODIST RECORDER and also in the Richmond Christian Advocate, tendering his services during the summer vacation to any of our brethren who may be willing to accept them. I take great pleasure in recommending him to any of the preachers on the Farmville District who may desire to have his help in their revival services. Bro. McCulloch took charge of the Burkeville circuit last year after the death of its faithful and beloved pastor, Dr. J. L. Spencer. He took up the work where he had left it and prosecuted it with wonderful energy and success. His preaching was most signally blessed of God. He brought revival fire with him, carried it wherever he went, into the pulpit and homes of the people, kindled it afresh in every Church and home altar, till the whole circuit was ablaze with Pentecostal light and glory. Our young brother was indeed both "a shining and a burning light," and "the slain of the Lord were many." Every Church of every denomination shared more or less in the spiritual harvest, and his own had nearly one hundred accessions to its membership. I can most heartily endorse him, and shall be glad if the preachers on the district can so arrange as to have him spend his entire summer vacation in evangelistic labors among them.

TALMAGE RESIGNS.

Rev. DeWitt Talmage, who for nearly four years has been the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, of Washington, D. C., sent a letter to the session of that Church last Thursday tendering his resignation. The explanation made in the letter is as follows:

"The increasing demands made upon my religious journalism and the continuous calls for more general work in the cities, have of late years caused frequent interruption of my pastoral work. It is not right that this condition of affairs should continue. Besides this it is desirable that I have more opportunity to meet face to face in religious assemblage those in this country and other countries to whom I have through the kindness of the printing press been permitted to preach week by week and without the exception of a week for about thirty years.

"Therefore, though very reluctantly, I have concluded, after serving you nearly four years in the pastoral relation, to send this letter of resignation."

It is the intention of Dr. Talmage to continue his residence in Washington. He will devote most of his time to literary pursuits.

QUEEN VICTORIA AT CLASS.

Speaking at the anniversary of the Lambeth Mission on Monday evening, Mr. J. A. Brown, of Blackheath, related a remarkable incident, which, he said, had never been told in public before. "Many years ago," said he, "my father conducted a large society class at Sloane Terrace Chapel, Chelsea, and at one time one of the members of that class was a female servant at Buckingham Palace. This servant, however, came in for much persecution and ridicule on account of her Methodism and her regular attendance at class. It became so acute at length that some of the other servants threatened to leave if the Methodist servant remained, and the matter in some manner reached the ears of her majesty, who immediately inquired into it, and on being informed of the cause of the dissatisfaction, said, 'I will go to the meeting myself and see if it is a fit place for a servant to go to.' And," continued Mr. Brown, "her majesty came to my father's class, and on her return to the palace said to her persecuted Methodist servant: 'Never forget your class meeting. I only wish that other servants would go also.'" world at large that they are the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is out of all question. They are in need of fresh air.—Texas Advocate.

This is the comment of the Texas Advocates upon the resolutions of the Atlanta Preachers' Meeting, published in our columns two weeks ago. This Texas editor is not able to see how men can be disturbed about so small a matter as deception, especially when by that deception $288,000 were turned turned into the Church treasury. The Agents who accomplished this despicable feat seem to be the admiration of this so-called Methodist in Texas. They got the money, and then they get their salaries increased $500 per year. This Texas editor considers any men a set of "donkeys" who will not bow down and worship the cunning of the men who could frame such artful telegrams. He thinks "they are in need of fresh air." The course of the Texas Advocate has been such in this disgraceful matter that it is evident that it is in need of more New Testament morality. Honesty and truthfulness are qualities of which it seems to have no proper conception. It has done its best to try to show that everybody who has cried out against these Achaans in our Israel is as bad as they are, and has impugned the motive of all have denounced them. Many persons have begun to inquire whether it is not the organ of Barbee & Smith, and to ask by what means the Agents have secured such a controlling interest in its columns. Is there a secret reason for their singularly active defence of the branded officials? It is being said that Texas is solid for the Agents, and that the Church in that State will not agree to their retirement. Well, let Texas go, and take the be-smirched officials with it. If Texas Methodists have no better code of morals than the Agents, then the Church had better lose the whole State, and retain its high standards, and be able to hold up its head without shame among the other Churches of Christ. Many persons are fully persuaded that these Agents, if tried before the Civil courts could be punished for obtaining money under false pretences. They have stubbornly and unrepentantly held on to their officers and thought more of their positions and salaries than they have of the welfare of Christ's Church, and when men who love His Church have passed resolutions and called upon the authorities to retire them, this Texas editor calls them "donkeys" and says they "need fresh air."

How much longer will the Bishops let the Church suffer from such wickedness in high places?

AN APOSTLE OF TEMPERANCE(?).

Bishop Henry C. Potter, of New York, has recently written a letter to Dr. Lyman Abbott, the editor of the Outlook, which appeared in the Outlook of March 11th. This letter has been read over with great care several times, and the last reading has produced the most painful impression of all. Bishop Potter can hold what views he thinks best on the question of how to meet the evils of the saloon. If he does not believe in Prohibition as the best method, Prohibitionists will regret the loss of his aid, but they will not denounce him as a hypocrite or a Pharisee. But to be opposed to prohibition is one thing, and to write such a letter as he has written is an entirely different thing. He says: "It is the old situation, as old as the religion of Jesus Christ, with the Scribes and the Pharisees on the one hand, the Sadducees on the other, and over against them the Truth."

"No more perfect reproduction of the first named has appeared in our day than the Prohibitionists, et id omne genus, arrogant, denunciatory, ignorant, unscrupulous, and untruthful; holding one meager fragment of truth to their eyes, and denying the great and fundamental facts in human nature, in their foolish and futile endeavor to remedy the perversion of human instincts; true children of the mediæval systems of monastic asceticism, which they would fain substitute for the freedom of regenerated manhood. The grotesque hypocrisy of the Prohibition system from Maine to Kansas, is a sufficient commentary upon their theories. Meantime, the endeavors of wiser men and women to better the condition of the homes, the domestic life, the recreations of their less-favored brethren go untouched of these, fit successors of those to whom Jesus said: "Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, for ye bind heavy burdens upon men's shoulders, and grievous to be borne, and ye yourselves will not touch them with the tips of your fingers."

This letter shocks every fair-minded reader. Dr. Abbott, in his comments upon it, says that Bishop Potter has been misrepresented, and it is not surprising that he writes not only with force, but with indignation. One could readily pardon force and indignation, but they are not the only things apparent in this letter. This letter is intemperate, uncharitable and, one is almost forced to believe, Pharisaical. What a string of choice adjectives he hurls at the heads of these erring Prohibitionists—"Arrogant, denunciatory, ignorant, unscrupulous and untruthful." The prohibition system is not only "hypocrisy," but it is "grotesque hypocrisy." Did anybody ever hear the like? And who is using this intemperate language? Why, the apostle of temperance, the one who, "wiser" than the Prohibitionists, is to bring forward some better plans and methods. Surely Bishop Potter has convicted himself by this very utterance of the very sin he lays at the door of the "arrogant * * * * untruthful" Prohibitionists. He has allowed his feelings to carry him beyond all proper bounds, and has done more to damage his fair fame than he can ever undo as long as he lives.

That some advocates of Prohibition may be intolerant and somewhat uncharitable may be readily allowed, but when this is said, it must also be said that the very motive underlying the Prohibition idea is unselfishness—a desire to remove a curse and a devil's trap from out the path-way of their fellow men. They are not working for their own profit. They have no monetary interest involved. An analysis of the prohibition forces is the strongest reply to Bishop Potter. The great majority of the Christian wives and mothers of our country are Prohibitionists. What is their motive? The salvation of their boys and husbands from the drunkard's grave and hell. Do all Bishop Potter's choice adjectives apply to them? Are they a lot of unscrupulous and untruthful Pharisees? The thousands of Methodist preachers, travelling and local, from Bishops down to the humblest circuit-riders, are Prohibitionists, and are perhaps the most vigorous and earnest body of workers in that glorious cause. Does anybody but Bishop Potter believe that the Methodist ministry is composed of a set of Pharisees? Bishop Chas. B. Galloway, who has just swept through our Virginia Conference in the interest of higher education, has been one of the foremost leaders of the Prohibition fight in Mississippi, which fight has swept the drunkard-makers out of three-fourths of the State. Does anybody who saw and heard him believe that he is an "arrogant, denunciatory, ignorant, unscrupulous, untruthful Pharisee?" Miss Francis E. Willard, who gave her whole life to this great cause, was a Prohibitionist. Was she an "ignorant, untruthful Pharisee," And so the roll might be called and many of the great ones of our country would be found among Bishop Potter's Pharisees—the Prohibitionists. The question is not as to whether Prohibition is right. This writer thinks it is, and has in the past tried to prove it to be so. But the question really is, to whom ought the term "Pharisee" and all that string of adjectives to be applied? To the Prohibitionists? Bishop Potter will have a solid vote from one class. The Drunkard-Makers will buy his picture and quote him with emphasis outwardly and call the Prohibitionists all the names he has used, but they will have more genuine respect for the humblest worker in the Prohibition forces than for him. No man who has ever attained to a position of influence in the Church has ever made a greater blunder than this.

Bishop Potter will be known from now on as the Intemperate Apostle of Temperance versus Prohibition.

Rev. W. H. Edwards, pastor of Centenary M. E. Church, Norfolk, adopted a plan by which he raised the entire amount needed to pay off the balance of the debt on the Church building at the Sunday morning service, the total sum being $6,000. He had erected within the chancel a pyramid of blocks, each block having the amount to be subscribed on its face, and by this plan the money was obtained in the shortest space of time. The Church is now entirely free of debt and has a bright future before it. On Sunday night Bro. Edwards started a series of meetings, assisted by Bro. L. T. Williams. It is a good time to have a meeting.

LESSON XIII, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, MARCH 26.

Text of the Lesson, a Comprehensive Quarterly Review—Golden Text, John x, 27—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

LESSON I.—Christ the True Light (John i, 1-14). Golden Text, John i, 4, "In Him was life, and the life was the light of men." Three of the leading words in this gospel and also in John's epistles are light, life and love. Each is fully seen in Christ. We are all naturally darkness, but He so loved us that He gave Himself for us and gives Himself to us, and when we receive Him He becomes to us both life and light. Inasmuch as He is the Creator of all things how great is the life and light!

LESSON II.—Christ's First Disciples (John i, 35-46). Golden Text, John i, 36, "Behold the Lamb of God." He remained on earth till He had finished the work the Father gave Him to do, the great work of atonement, and by His life had shown us the life men ought to live. Now He wants all the time till He shall come again those who will not only let Him save them, but who will follow fully in His steps and let Him reproduce in them by His Spirit His own life to the glory of God.

LESSON III.—Christ's First Miracle (John ii, 1-11). Golden Text, John ii, 11, "And His disciples believed on Him." At this feast and by this miracle He manifested forth His glory. He always encourages His disciples to patience and faithfulness by thoughts and glimpses of His glory. Consider and see how He did this in the case of Abraham and Jacob, Moses and Joshua, Isaiah, Ezekiel and Daniel, Peter, James and John and Saul of Tarsus.

LESSON IV.—Christ and Nicodemus (John iii, 1-16). Golden Text, John iii, 16, "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." No natural man, however moral or religious, can understand the things of God. He must first receive a nature capable of understanding these things. He must be born from above.

LESSON V.—Christ at Jacob's Well (John iv, 5-15). Golden Text, John iv, 14, "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst." While religious, moral people must be born again sinners such as this woman may be born again. Even Samaritans may come. All may receive the living water which will be a well in them ever satisfying and flowing forth to bless others.

LESSON VI.—The Nobleman's Son Healed (John iv, 43-54). Golden Text, John iv, 53, "Jesus said unto him, Thy son liveth. And himself believed and his whole house." In each chapter the way of life and of discipleship is set forth as believing, and in this lesson it is believing without seeing or feeling, just believing His word because it is His word.

LESSON VII.—Christ's Divine Authority (John v, 17-27). Golden Text, John iv, 42, "This is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world." In the last lesson a dying boy was healed, now it is a helpless man who had been suffering for 38 years, but it is the same all powerful word that does it, the word by which all things were created. All things were created by Him and for Him. He only knoweth the Father, and He alone can reveal the Father. All judgment has been committed to Him and likewise all power.

LESSON VIII.—Christ Feeding the Five Thousand (John vi, 1-14). Golden Text, John vi, 35, "I am the Bread of Life." He is El Shaddai (Gen. xvii, 1), the mighty God, who is all sufficient. He needs no advice from us, nor any help. He will let us be His fellow laborers, but the work and all provision for it and all the glory of it are wholly His. He can work entirely apart from us, or He may take what we have and bless and multiply it.

LESSON IX.—Christ at the Feast (John vii, 14, 28-37). Golden Text, John vii, 37, "If any man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink." Bread and water represent that which our bodies need for sustenance, and one of the great promises is, "Bread shall be given him, his waters shall be sure" (Isa. xxxiii, 16). While we would not think much of such a diet it is suggestive of all our needs, and all that need is met in Him who is the living bread and the fountain of living waters. The Jews kept the feast, but knew Him not. We may be very religious, but it is Himself alone and not ordinances that can satisfy. Paul took pleasure and glorified in infirmities that the wonderful power of Christ might rest upon him (II Cor. xii, 9-10). All that God does is that His dear Son may be glorified, and when we receive and worship Him and honor Him God is well pleased for the testimony. The Christian must be ready to spend and be spent.

LESSON X.—Christ Freeing From Sin (John viii, 12, 31-36). Golden Text, John viii, 36, "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." Those who think they are all right may, like these self righteous Pharisees, be all wrong. If a man think himself to be something when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself. These blind Pharisees were sinners and did not know it. The poor woman was a sinner and knew it. A sense of sin is necessary before one can enjoy the forgiveness of sins.

LESSON XI.—Christ Healing the Blind Man (John ix, 1-11). Golden Text, John ix, 25, "One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see." Not only do all things work together for good to them that love God, but all things, all events, all circumstances, give God an occasion to work. The blind and lame, the deaf and dumb, the sick and dying, the weak and the infirm, all give the Lord an opportunity either to be glorified in healing them or in manifesting special grace by showing forth in their infirmities His meekness and patience under trial, for the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit is in the sight of God of great price (I Pet. iii, 4).

LESSON XII.—Christ, the Good Shepherd (John x, 1-16). Golden Text, John x, 11, "I am the Good Shepherd, the Good Shepherd giveth His life for the sheep." In no sense a hireling, never seeking His own will, nor His own glory, but always the glory of his Father and the good of men, for men and women are the sheep of His pasture, and children are His lambs whom He gathers with His arm and carries in His bosom (Ps. c, 3; Isa. xl, 11). When we are willing to forget and deny self and live only for Him and for others, we will prove in our daily life that we have His Spirit. All self seeking and self pleasing are contrary to His Spirit. We are saved by beholding Him, we grow by continuing to behold Him, and we shall be like Him when we see Him as He is (John i, 29, 36; II Cor. iii, 18; I John iii, 2).

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning March 26, "True Penitence"—Text, II Cor. vii, 1-11.

"Godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of, but the sorrow of the world worketh death."

There are a great many ways of being sorry and a great variety of sorrows. Some are extremely dangerous to health and even life, while others are very helpful. Many if not most sorrows are the result of some wrong done or suffered. One awakens to the fact that the evil has been committed. If done by himself, all the circumstances, the carelessness or provocation which led up to it may come clearly to mind. The shame, the pain caused to others, the responsibility which rests upon himself, the unworthiness and meanness of the spirit which led to or allowed the wrong to be done, the sense of disapproval by others, all flash in upon the soul and make a tumult of thought and conflict of feeling. Resentment at the injustice done him and condemnation of himself for the injury inflicted on another struggle for the mastery, defiance of the opinions of others and hatred of the wronged one may gain the ascendancy, or a softening of feeling, a hearty sorrow that others must suffer because of his fault, a whole souled heartache and wish to repair the wrong, may possess one.

When one sees his wrongdoing and heartily wishes it had not been done, determines to repair the evil as far as possible and not to be guilty of like conduct again, that is real repentance. It is followed by conduct that strives to make amends for all injury and suffering caused. Such repentance is more than a feeling of sorrow. It is all that and much more. It assumes the duty of repairing the injury done. It goes beyond this and lays upon itself the obligation to feel good and do good to the one who has suffered. Beyond all this, it sees that the wrong done has been in violation of God's law and against His nature. Right relations to God must be restored by a complete change of attitude. Every wrong done a fellow man is a sin against God. Repentance, if genuine, effects a change in the man's thought, feeling and determination toward his fellows and His God and results in a complete change of action.

True repentance brings the sense of satisfaction and peace. It makes a man happy and hopeful and contented.

The reverse of this is irritation of soul, enmity against others, especially the ones wronged, dislike of the laws of right, shame and contempt of self, hatred of the good and determination to do the evil. This leads to strife, despair and may end in suicide or murder or any other crime.

Rev. William I. Haven has been elected secretary of the American Bible society to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Dr. A. S. Hunt. Brother Haven is one of the most widely known

"CAN'T GOD COUNT?"

Two children were carrying a basket of cakes to their grandmother. As often happens with children—and with grown people, too—they were curious to know what was in the basket, and so they carefully raised the corner and looked in. When their greedy eyes saw the tempting cakes, their mouths fairly watered to take them. After counting them over several times, they almost made up their minds to eat just one of them. Nobody would know it, and it would taste so good!

While they were gazing at the cakes and just ready to take one, the little girl looked up into her brother's face and thoughtfully asked the mater-of-fact question, "Can't God count?"

This settled the matter immediately, and all the cakes were carried to their grandmother.

GOD UNDERSTANDS.

A touching little incident is told of one of the Chinese babies, aged about six years, who was an inmate of a mission home. One evening, after her evening prayer, she got off her little knees and turned with a very disturbed air, saying, "Mrs. Field, do you think God understands Chinese?"

"Oh, yes," said Mrs. Field. "But why do you ask?"

"Because sometimes when I feel very unhappy, I like to pray to God in Chinese; of course, I always say my prayers at night in English, but sometimes I like to pray in my own language."

She was assured that her Heavenly Father understood all languages, and she could relieve her overburdened little heart in her own language in perfect safety.

GOD IS KEEPING WATCH.

A little story, which beautifully illustrates the childlike faith that may be every Christian's, is told of a 4-year-old who inquired of her widowed mother one moonlight night:

"Mamma, is the moon God's light?" The lamp had just been put out, and the timid little girl, as well as her mother, was afraid of the dark; but presently she saw the bright moon out of her window, and it suggested the question: "Is the moon God's light?"

"Yes, Ethel," the mother replied: "the moon and stars are all God's lights."

Then came the next question from the little girl: "Will God blow out His light and go to sleep, too?"

"No, my child," replied the mother, "His lights are always burning."

Then the timid little girl gave utterance to a sentiment that thrilled the mother's heart and led her to a more complete trust in her God: "Well, mamma, while God's awake, I am not afraid."

LIKE HIM.

A promising young merchant presented his better half with a handsome piano lamp on her birthday. He was much flattered when she told Him she intended to give it his name, until he asked her reasons for such a peculiar proceeding.

"Well," she said, "you know, dear, it has a lot of brass about it; it is handsome to look at; requires a good deal of attention; is remarkably brilliant; is sometimes unsteady on its legs; flares up occasionally; is always out at bed time, and is bound to smoke."

The man who lives for Christ is ready to also die for Christ.

SOME RESPECTABLE SINNERS.

RALPH LAMBERT'S TEMPTATION

By Mary Graham.

O have $1,000 a year, and spend $800 or less, means a probable competence for the future; to have $1,000, and spend $1,000, means no present dishonesty, but probable future distress; to have $1,000, and spend $1,200 or more, means—just such temptations as the one which came to Ralph Lambert on a certain day in July, 18—.

He and Mariana had not begun right when, at the time of their marriage they had bought a $10,000 house with the $2,000 which belonged to her, leaving an $8,000 mortgage, the interest of which must be paid twice a year.

They had hoped, in the beginning, to reduce the mortgage gradually, but how could that be done, when the needs of the household required more than every dollar of the bread-winner's salary?

A smaller house in a less stylish neighborhood would have made them much happier in the end, for the struggle to make both ends meet would then have been entirely unnecessary.

Mariana was at first kept in ignorance of the fact that their bills were not all paid promptly. She then made a brave effort to economize, but Ralph could not bear to see her without all the comforts to which she was accustomed, and did not heartily second her efforts. Being of a sanguine disposition, he thought that in time there would be "some way" out of their difficulties, and that everything would be paid.

But on the day we speak of, a crisis seemed to have come in their affairs; something must be done or their pretty home must go. Notice had been received some weeks before, from the Trust Company holding their mortgage, and Ralph knew that the $200 half-yearly interest must be raised within a certain time. At present, he only had $100 at his command, and part of that would have to go towards household expenses. He had tried to borrow from some of his friends, but they all seemed to be as poor as himself.

Once or twice his uncle, the president of the bank in which he was employed, had helped him out, but it was always with a well-merited reproof for spending more money than was warranted by his income.

Then a thought occurred to Ralph. Why could he not borrow from the bank? It was a rich and soulless corporation, and no one would suffer for the act. It would only need the careful alteration of one or two figures in his books, and there would be no chance to discover any discrepancy until long after the money had been replaced.

The thought came again and again, as he walked towards home that afternoon. The most plausible arguments on the difference between borrowing and stealing tried to insinuate themselves into his mind.

His wife was not usually very demonstrative, but to his surprise, she met him at the door and threw her arms around him.

"Oh!" she exclaimed, as they went in together, "I am so glad you have come, and so inexpressibly glad that I married you instead of Miles Rushton."

"So am I, but what makes you go back to those old days?"

"Haven't you seen this morning's paper? He has been arrested in Vernon for default. You know, he's been cashier of the bank there for years. This has been going on for some time; first, very small sums, and, afterwards, increasing. He only intended to borrow at first, but, you know, that is what nearly all defaulters say."

Ralph was quiet and very pale. His wife saw that he was more affected by the news than she had anticipated. She ran for some water, and soon returned, saying:

"Ralph, I'd rather live in two rooms knowing that you were honest, than in a palace with anyone capable of a dishonest act like that."

"THANK GOD, RALPH, THAT HE SAVED YOU."

"Oh! Mariana, do you really mean that?" exclaimed Ralph, and in a moment he found himself unburdening his heart to her. She was shocked at first to find that even he, whom she considered the soul of honor, should have been assailed by such a temptation; but the feeling was succeeded by one of supreme thankfulness that the thought had not been carried out.

"And if the choice lies between that and having the home sold over our heads, do you mean to say that you would choose the last?" asked Ralph.

"Without a question!" answered Mariana, fervently clasping her husband's hand.

There was a courage about her which could not but communicate itself to him. Then a thought struck him; perhaps she did not know the worst, and there could be no better moment than the present one of high resolve, to communicate it to her.

"You know at a forced sale a house rarely, if ever, brings anything like its value. Your two thousand would have to go."

"Better that than your honor or mine," she answered firmly. "Perhaps it might be better in the end after all, for if we were in a smaller, less stylish house, we might live within our income, and you have no idea how the thought of debt weighs upon me."

Ralph remembered that his wife had more than once proposed to sell the house and move into a smaller one, but he would not listen to her. Would that he had done so before the necessity for selling had become imperative.

"I cannot help feeling that God has saved us from something far, far worse than poverty, and I am sure that if we try to do right and ask His help, that He will help us."

And they did ask Him, and new courage seemed to be given to both for all that might lie before them.

Ralph promised that if in any honest manner the house could be saved from a forced sale, he would take immediate steps to dispose of it in a way that would involve less loss. They would then begin life over again in a smaller house, better suited to their income, and with the firm resolve to let "pay as we go," be their financial motto.

His uncle was taken once more into the young man's confidence, and to Ralph's own surprise, the whole story was told to him. It was like a leaden weight removed when his uncle grasped his hand with more cordiality than was wont, saying:

"Thank God, Ralph, that he saved you from that first downward step; and that you and Mariana have been brought to see the folly of living a little beyond your income, instead of a little within it."

Being convinced of his nephew's intention to alter his style of living as soon as possible, he prevented the forced sale of the house, and assisted in disposing of it.

A new home with a very small incumbrance upon it, was exchanged for the old one. The freedom from anxiety about endless debts, fully compensated for the change of home and neighborhood.

Many of their old acquaintances ceased to remember their existence, but the joy of a contented mind was theirs, and the assurance that God's blessing rested upon their home.

He carries to his new position rare executive ability, wide acquaintance with men and things, a warm heart and level head. The blessing of God attend him in his new work as it has in the past!

Max Muller's Testimony.

He says: "I had not read it for many years, and was prejudiced against it before I took it in hand. The light which struck Paul with blindness on his way to Damascus was not more strange, more surprising to him than it was to me when I suddenly discovered the fulfillment of all hopes, the highest perfection of philosophy, the explanation of all revelations, the key to all the seeming contradictions of the physical world. I saw religion appear at the moment most favorable to its appearance and in a manner most adapted to its acceptance. The whole world seems to be ordered for the sole purpose of furthering the religion of the Redeemer, and if this religion is not divine I understand nothing at all."

So will every sincere searcher who reads the New Testament desiring to know the truth find the light break forth convincingly and amply satisfying all needs.

TRUTH ABOUT ALCOHOL.

Highest Scientific Authorities Pronounce It Poison.

The civilized nations of the earth are putting cause and effect together on the alcohol question as never before. In France, Switzerland and Belgium the increasing use of alcohol is recognized as the cause of a physical decline in stature that is filling those nations with alarm for their future. Close investigation is proving to the kaiser that the beer drinking soldier has only about 80 per cent of the endurance of the total abstainer and economists are calling attention to the bad effects that increasing drink habits are having upon German industries. The young czar of Russia, alarmed at the inroads which he sees alcohol making upon his army and people, is striving to stem the tide.

Thoughtful Englishmen are saying that Britain's greatest enemy is alcohol. In our own country its effects upon our soldiers in home camps and on the field have been made sadly evident to the American people. The truth against alcohol is out. Everything that its advocates can say in its favor is controverted by the strongest scientific authorities of the world, who pronounce it a poison—the genius of degeneracy. Nothing can hide this truth from the people and their children whose heritage it is.

The per capita consumption of alcohol has begun to decline in this country, although its consumption is increasing in other nations. The New York Medical Record puts this decline during the last ten years at 30 per cent. Prior to that time there was a continual increase. During those years some of our prohibitory laws have been repealed, others have been weakened. Less rather than more temperance platform work has been done and more than 4,000,000 people have come to us from foreign lands, bringing with them the alcoholic habits of the old world.

In the face of all these unfavorable conditions why has the per capita consumption of alcohol in this country decreased during this time while previously it increased? Our English friends are doing as much church, society and Band of Hope work as we, and perhaps more, yet England's drink bill for 1897 ran up to $16,500,000 more than that of the preceding year.

The only new feature introduced into temperance work in this country during the past ten years so generally as to touch all sections, and the only method of importance in which our temperance work differs from that of England, is that of temperance education in the public schools. It is this which is getting the truth to the people so generally as already to bear fruit. It is this which is laying the foundation for the intelligent sobriety of the future American. We would not for a moment question the value of other temperance efforts which have helped to secure these results, but the figures show that such efforts without temperance education were inadequate to produce this decline. —Mrs. Mary H. Hunt.

BRUTALITY OF RUM.

Highest Medical Authority on Its Debasing Influence.

The brutality of many of the acts which occupy the time of our coroners and our law courts is becoming serious. It is quite a special feature of the time.

We are spending ten or eleven millions a year over popular education, yet every day's newspaper reports some deed which is simply brutal in its coarseness and its causelessness. It does not represent anything deeply malicious in the criminal, but in its vulgarity and brutality it is exceptional and discreditable.

Opinion is divided as to the exact explanation of such a state of things at the end of a century unprecedented for its strides in knowledge, in science and in civilization. It defies law and the ordinary penalties of law. Politicians, moralists and sociologists are apparently helpless to control it. * * * The invariable element in all such brutal acts is alcohol. —London Lancet.

Rum Not a Tonic.

A tonic is defined as a remedy which improves "appetite, digestion, assimilation and secretion, strengthens the circulatory apparatus, improves the composition of the blood, invigorates the muscular system and promotes the nutrition of nerve centers and fibers." We have found that the presence of alcohol retards digestion, and of the causes of retarded digestion mentioned by Yeo two, "congestion and anaemia of the gastric mucous membrane (both of which interfere with the free secretion of the gastric juice) and certain morbid states of the nervous system," are given prominence. Alcohol always causes first a congestion, then an anaemia of the mucous membrane and hence will impair digestion. It poisons or vitiates the blood, weakens assimilation and circulation, as well as the muscular system and the nutrition of the nerve centers. Therefore, the position that alcohol can ever be a tonic is untenable. —Exchange.

Whisky Depresses.

The apparent exhilaration and stimulation produced by alcohol are undoubtedly due to its first action—that of an irritant—and last for a short time only, and are quickly followed by depression due to its paralyzing influence. A stimulant "invigorates the functions of the lungs and heart" and "promotes secretion and nutrition." But we have seen that alcohol impairs lung and heart action, and by vitiating the blood interferes with nutrition, and hence is not a stimulant in the true sense.

Alcohol as a Narcotic.

We can safely say, however, that alcohol will be included under the head of narcotics and anaesthetics, for, on account of its paralyzing influence, all authorities admit its narcotic effect, and indeed Dr. Bartholow, in his work on "Therapeutics," treats of alcohol under that head, and no one will for a moment deny that alcohol is a decided anaesthetic and produces narcotism in this way. —Dr. C. L. Hamilton.

interesting and practical address on "Growth," comparing man's physical, mental and spiritual growth with that of inanimate objects, such as the oak and rose, showing the points of similarity as well as the difference between them. Man attains full growth, physically, but should never feel that he is grown mentally or spiritually. Making the application to Sunday-school work he claimed that when an officer or teacher felt that no more growth could be attained by them, it was time their places were filled by others, for when we cease to grow we decline and ceased to be useful.

In the spiritual as well as in the natural life certain conditions must be present in order that healthy growth may result. There must be, first of all, the germs of life—the new birth—without which there can be no growth; after that a proper environment—soil—and cultivation. This he illustrated by the history of the Methodist Church in Richmond, which had its beginning one hundred years ago, and, being born of the Spirit and properly nurtured, had attained to its present great proportions.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Friday will be devoted to the Epworth League District Conference, at Clay-Street Church, State President W. B. Beauchamp presiding.

There will be addresses by Rev. Drs. Hoss, Starr, Latham, Rawlings, Atwill, Beckham and others.

At 8 o'clock at night Rev. A. Coke Smith, D. D., will speak on "Virginia League and Korean Missions."

* *

The papers report that Rev. T. J. Taylor is ill, and that his son, Dr. Taylor, of Richmond, has been called to see him.

* *

Large congregations are reported at Central Church, Portsmouth. About $600 has been expended on refitting the Church.

* *

The Ministerial Union, of Richmond and Manchester, adopted the following resolution at a meeting on Monday.

RESOLVED: That in order to express our oneness in Christ, a meeting of all evangelical Christians be held on a Sunday afternoon during the present Spring season in some suitable auditorium, and that in addition to devotional exercises, there be addresses delivered on the vital oneness of Christians by men appointed by the Ministerial Union of the several denominations.

The proposition met with genuine and hearty approval, and was adopted by a unanimous vote. The President of the Union appointed the following committee to make all arrangements for the union meeting, the first of its kind ever held in that city: Revs. R. A. Goodwin (chairman), L. R. Thornhill, Jere Witherspoon, Paul L. Menzel, W. G. Starr and C. A. Marks.

Blackstone Female Institute.

Owned and Controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Officers and Teachers 18; Total Enrollment, 184; Boarders, 135. A larger Learning Patronage than any other Methodist institution in the South.

WHY ESTABLISHED?

It was built by the free contributions of the people of South-Side Virginia that they might have a Christian school for their girls.

UNDERLYING PRINCIPLE

The body and Mind are to be cultivated so as to be the willing and efficient instruments of the soul.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A practice school gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—it was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

GROWN WITH "HARD CASH" GUANO

On the Farm of Joseph M. Hurt, by J. P. Pettus.---Average Length of Leaf, FORTY INCHES.

MARCH 1st, 1899.

TESTIMONIALS:

MARCH 1st, 1899.

TEST MADE BY WALKER CLUB

TINKLING, Lunenburg Co., Va.

To the Blackstone Guano Co.,
Blackstone, Va.

Gentlemen:—A committee of the Walker Club, composed of John O. Bragg and F. S. Manson, Jorgenson, and Theo. Ogain, Tinkling, Va., have examined the results of the fertilizer test made for the club on my farm with ten of the best brands of guanos. On plot No. 1, old lot land, ten brands of fertilizers were applied, each at the rate of 800 pounds per acre, the ten sections carefully marked and treated alike. The committee picked out the section on which your Bellefonte Guano was used as the one showing the best results. On plot No. 2, four acres of new ground from old field fine land, four brands were used. Here the committee also found the best results, very decidedly, in the acre on which the Bellefonte Guano was applied.

Yours truly,

L. A. HARDY.

I have sold the tobacco made on the four acres mentioned above. The tobacco made on the acre on which the Bellefonte was used brought thirty-four dollars and fourteen cents ($34.14) more than the tobacco made on either of the other acres. This acre, as far as I know, had no advantage over the other three acres, either in cultivation or natural fertility, or any other way. I know the tobacco did not get mixed in cutting, curing or shipping.

L. A. HARDY,

Committee for W. A. C.

I have used the several brands of guano made by the Blackstone Guano Company, for ten years and have tested them by brands of other makes on the same field and truthfully say that I think the Bellefonte and Hard Cash are unsurpassed for tobacco. It gives me pleasure to recommend the Blackstone Guano Co.'s Guano to the farmers of Southside Virginia

JOS. M. HURT.

Nottoway County.

Gentlemen:—I used your Bellefonte Guano last year along with another brand and sold the tobacco from the Bellefonte at an average of $19 per hundred, and the tobacco grown with the other brand at an average of less than $12, showing a difference of $7 per hundred in favor of Bellefontaine Guano. This ought to be enough to show what I think of Bellefonte Guano.

V. C. LOVE.

Danville, Va.

Gentlemen:—I have used your Guanos for the past ten years, and they have given me perfect satisfaction. I consider the Bellefonte the best I ever used, and shall use it the present year.

FRANK WHITE.

Nottoway Co.

Gentlemen:—I used your Bellefonte Guano last season along with other brands and am thoroughly convinced that it is the best I ever used. I have sold one barn of tobacco raised with the Bellefonte at an average of $15 around, lugs and all, which is a high average for shipping tobacco.

V. O. ANDREWS.

Dinwiddie, Co.

Blackstone Guano Co.—Gentlemen:—I bought of your agent, Mr. J. J. Mason, and used your Bellefonte Guano last season and am well pleased with the results. I have used a great many brands and think I can truly say it is the best I ever used, especially in the last ten years. Will say to my farmer friends that I think it a great mistake to use a low grade guano to save a few dollars in the ton at the expense of a larger difference in each hundred pounds of tobacco grown.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

A creed is a written statement of what is held for truth.—Dr. Francis A. Horton, Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

Discipline.

There is something that is better than pleasure; it is discipline.—Rev. Dr. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago.

Importance of Religion.

To turn from God is to lose the soul to lose the soul, its powers and its place in the great scheme is to sink to hell. The negative life finds its level.—Rev. B. O. Aylesworth, Christian Church, Denver.

Strive For Perfect Manhood.

When you catch sight of perfect manhood in its moral beauty and spiritual power, you are to follow the likeness until you reproduce it in your own life.—Rev. Dr. W. R. Winchester, Episcopalian, St. Louis.

Woman and the Church.

Woman was chosen to type the church because the closeness of marital relationship more than anything else exemplifies the closeness of the union between Christ and his bride, the church.—Dr. W. B. Stradley, Episcopalian, Atlanta.

The Most Important Thing.

Let me say there is no thing in this world you need to know so much as that God can and will forgive sin. It is the most important, the most gracious, the most glorious word he has ever spoken to this world.—Dr. G. W. Davis, Presbyterian, St. Paul.

True Religion.

If this is really God's world, it is safe to conclude that it is well governed and quite worth living in. The fretful man banishes God, or ignores him, and lives in a very poor world of his own creation. There is no more fretfulness in true religion than there is water in fire.—Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

A Word For Preachers.

If preachers could forget there is such a thing as homiletics occasionally, it would be better for their crowd. Let a preacher stick to his crowd. Let him discuss their needs and not the needs of the old Jews or Romans of the days of old. We live in the present. Let us preach in the present.—Dr. L. G. Broughton, Baptist, Atlanta.

Women and the State.

Because the life of women is in a measure secluded that is no reason why they may not take the deepest possible interest in the public life of the nation. Unless they may be sure the tone of public sentiment will be lowered. Unless the fires of patriotism are kindled and kept fresh in the home, it will surely languish in the state.—Rev. Dr.

Stephen Dana, Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

Has Many Names.

The little child, resting at eventide within its mother's arms, listens to the counsels of maternal piety with instinctive faith, finding in its youthful heart a quick response to the story of the one who loves righteousness and hates iniquity. What is this outside power which thus rules over the spiritual man? Call it Manitou, call it Zeus, call it Jehovah, we cannot escape the conviction that it is the same power which guides the stars, controls the wind, directs the waves.—Rev. Hermon D. Jenkins, Presbyterian, Kansas City.

Broken Altars.

The happiness of mankind begins at God's altar. The misery of mankind begins at the broken altar of God. But altars are seldom broken down by intention; rather by letting them alone, letting fires of personal piety become extinguished on the altars and by other acts of negligence. Forgetfulness of mother's prayer breaks down the first altar. The rush of business interferes with personal and family prayer, and those altars crumble. The altar of consecration is broken either by forgetfulness of covenant vows or lack of some definite act of service undertaken for Jesus' sake.—Dr. Lee, Presbyterian, Cincinnati.

Greatest Pulpit For the Church of Man.

The press is the greatest pulpit for the church of man. The editor preaches to all the people every day and every where. The journalist is alike politician, educator and priest. He is both critic and creator of opinion. His work tells, his voice is a trumpet, his message is a universal proclamation. And because in the good fight the printing press is a Gatling gun, pouring out these paper bullets of the brain, the preacher and journalist should be sworn confederates; for in a drop of that printers' ink are embryonic sermons, creeds and lifelong influences.—Rev. Leon Harrison, Hebrew, St. Louis.

The True Man.

Four elements go to make up a true man, a man in the full sense of the word in every walk of life—namely truth, bravery, strength and love. Truth in thought, word and deed, bravery, absolutely fearless in things that are right, strength of purpose, invincible to maintain things that are right, and love of all that is true, upright and noble. These are qualities essential to every man whether a Christian or not. But a Christian must not only excel in these qualities, he must combine with them becoming meekness, humility, gentleness and patience—very difficult virtues for railroad men to live up to, and which the pastor himself probably had to cultivate. The combination, however, went to make up the Christian man, and every one could be that, whether he banked rocks under ties or was president of the board.—Address on "Christian Manliness," by D. A. Waterman, Treasurer Michigan Central Railroad.

Editorial.

WORK THAT COUNTS.

The American Issue states that the Anti-Saloon League has done great work in Ohio. The first year the League went to work in the State it stopped the annual increase in saloons, which had been steadily going forward with the increase of population, and in the following years it has cut down the number of saloons in the State by 2000. This has been done by the united efforts of good citizens of all Churches banded together in the one cry and work—"Death to the Saloon." Similar work could be done in Virginia if all our Church papers and preachers of all denominations would lead our laymen. No work would count more in the unbuilding of our State in all good things.

PREACHING FOR MONEY.

It is sometimes said that men enter the ministry to make a living and preach for money. It may be that some men do. There are hypocrites everywhere, but there are always examples proving the falsity of this statement, if made in a general way. Dr. Hillis, who has just accepted the call to Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, leaving a congregation in Chicago said to be worth $300,000,000, which begged him to remain, told him to name his own salary, promised to build a magnificent Church, etc., is said to have answered: "Life is too short to work for money." He is not preaching for that, but for the glory of his Master.

Equally as convincing from another view point is the following from one of the Arkansas Conferences:

"Our Conference has eight appointments averaging $1,000 for pastors; twenty-six paying $400, twenty-nine paying less than $200, and nine paying less than $100. So you can see there are thirty-eight men not getting a comfortable living; their families not having the necessary comforts of life."

The Church still numbers her heroes in ministry and laity by the thousands. "Go, labor on; tis not for naught, Thine earthly loss is Heaven's gain; Men heed thee, love thee, praise thee not, The Master praises - what are men?"

THE BISHOPS' CONDITION MET.

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate gives the recent and final action of the Senate in the War Claim, and Dr. Glenn, the editor, (who by the way was the North Georgia member of the Committee on Publishing Interests at the St. General Conference) expressed it as his opinion that the condition of the Bishops has been met, and that it is time for them to set the machinery in motion to give back the money. Strange that the Church organs have not been able to see any significance in this action of the Senate. We appeal Dr. Glenn's editorial.

"Our Bishops in their letter on the Publishing House Claim say: 'If the Senate, by affirmative action, declares that the passage of the bill was due to such misleading statements, we will take the proper steps to have the entire amount returned to the Government.'"

The Senate committee, in their report on the matter, say:

"Your committee * * * do not hesitate to say that had it been known that more than one-third of the amount appropriated was to go as attorney fees the passage of the bill without some restriction as to the amount of the fees was hardly possible. That the Book Agents, Messrs. Larbee & Smith, purposely withheld from the Senate and Senators favorable to the passage of the bill the fact that thirty-five per cent. of it was pledged to Mr. Stahlman is clearly shown by their own testimony," etc.

Again:

"If there was any mistake or omission on the part of the Senate, it was in failing to protect the beneficiaries against the Book Agents, Messrs. Larbee & Smith, whose duty it was to guard their interests, and this would have been done if information that properly belonged to them had not been withheld."

They also use the terms "misleading," "deceiving," "mis-statements," "concealments," and "misconduct" in speaking of the acts of our Agents in this matter.

This all clearly shows that they would not have passed the bill as it was but for the "misleading statements."

On February 23, 1899, the Senate, without opposition, adopted the report of the committee in the following resolution:

"RESOLVED: That the report of the committee made July 8, 1898, be approved, and that no censure should rest upon the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the mis-statements and concealments of the Book Agents in connection with the passage of the bill for the payment of the claim referred to in the letter of the Bishops now under consideration; that the injury resulting therefrom affected only the beneficiaries of the fund and not the United States, and the Senate should take no further action in the matter."

So, in the adoption of this report by the Senate, the Bishops have the "affirmative action" upon which they based their conditional promise to the Church and Senate. The condition is met, and the time is at hand for the Bishops to begin action.

DR. RAY AND THE BROTHERHOOD.

MR EDITOR:

I feel that I ought to say a few things to you and through you to the members of the Virginia Conference as I withdraw from the Brotherhood. I do this because I am one of the founders and, through my influence, put into the treasury $1,000.00 for endowment. With the turn of my hand, I could have placed elsewhere that sum, which is now bringing to the relief of the families of the dead $30.00 per annum; which is more than the amount that five beneficiaries pay, or have paid as yet in the seventeen years of the existence of the Brotherhood. I thought the beneficiary members were able and ought to put a $1,000.00 more to it, and proposed that one hundred of us should give $10.00 each to do so. H. E. Johnson thought my proposition a small and narrow one, and proposed to make it $100.00 instead of $10.00, to which I agreed, if ten faithful men could be found. I knew I would have to borrow the money if the $100.00 proposition or the $10.00 proposition was accepted. Whether Mr. Johnson meant it or not, this certainly killed my suggestion. One of my brethren approached and asked me to give $25,000.00 to the endowment, and this was from a Brother who did not feel able to give $10.00 in one year to that endowment; and I was then borrowing money for the education of my children. I had then—I have now—a few hundred dollars income besides my income as pastor; and what of that I have not spent in the service of the Church at whose altars I have served for forty-five years. I have given away to benevolent and charitable purposes, and I have sometimes borrowed money to do these things. I have some non-producing real estate, on which a pall has rested for ten years past, and if I could have sold, my family conditions are such that I cannot sell without a process at law. I am informed that an inventory of my estate was made before the Bishop at the late session of the Portsmouth Conference, and the conclusion was reached that I am worth from $500,000.00 to $1,000,000.00. If this were true it would not hurt me. I do not think I should wish it true. If true, I would gladly help my impecunious brethren; but the dear elders knew it could not be true; and if they did not know, as they ought to represent the men as well as the work, it would have taken only a little bit of kindness and as little walking to have found out the truth.

I very greatly regret the necessity that is upon me to withdraw from the Brotherhood, not because I lose to my family six or eight hundred dollars, but because I will not be able to help the families of some of my dear brethren whom I love very dearly, and to contribute this charity to the needy among us. If I were providing for my children, or governed by selfish motives, I could have ensured on the tontine plan, and the payments for twenty years would bring as much as the Brotherhood will bring at my death. I do not withdraw because I feel it is due to the unkind criticisms of some little men among us, who judge me without the "charity that suffereth long and is kind." One of the smallest of these has said I have lost my spirituality by my great wealth. If one hundred of my brethren had done half as much as I, there would be no lack of funds for the families of the dead. I withdraw because at present I can not continue in good conscience, and at the same time do justice to my creditors, and the expenses of my family. When the way opens I am coming back; look out for me. In parting with my brethren of the Brotherhood, I leave with the kindest feelings, even towards those whose littleness is only equaled by their officious uncharity. I want to bless them that spitefully use me, and will be back again in some good day to bless. But I would rather now have the rugged, though brusque honesty of a dead brother, who declined to turn down his creditors that he might protect his family.

Fraternally,
GEORGE H. RAY.

ALGERISM.

(BY MALINDA CLEAVER FAVILLE.)

If we can give this new word a meaning which will save us such humiliating experiences as those which have lately befallen the honorable gentleman from whose name it is derived, we may make our gain offset the fearful loss the country has suffered through this "ism." If the War Department blundered, it does not seem to have been through malicious intent. It was rather a case of trying to make a gill of water do duty as a quart of milk. It was not milk, and there was not enough of it. If only a gill of "wetting" had been required, the demand might have been satisfied, and if the need had been simply for moisture, the fact that it was water might have been in its favor; the more valuable fluid would have been saved for a higher use. In this particular case good milk was needed, and a generous measure of it, hence all the trouble. Is the gill of water to blame that it is not a quart of milk, or is the cook at fault in providing an insufficient measure of the inferior fluid? A gill of water certainly errs in trying to produce upon the unsuspecting the impression of a quart of milk. While its efforts are successful, the best of cooks will accept it at its apparent value; when its true value and quality are made known, the only right thing to do is to put it out of the way and fill the measure with the genuine article. Up to the moment of discovery, which, in this case, was some months ago, the fault was with the little measure of water. Since then we have—"military lockjaw."

Algerism, in one respect, is like Buddhism, Brahmanism, Agnosticism, pessimism, and Anarchism: It is one of the things a wise man does not want. The patriot has no use for it in himself or any fellow-citizen, and has learned to abhor it in direct ratio to the rank of the man in whom he perceives it. If we would govern wisely at home, if we would righteously administer the affairs of the feeble peoples we have so chivalrously adopted, the spread of this too prevalent "ism" must be checked. Stamp it out by the liberal use of the official axe, and quarantine suspected cases by a system of investigation that overlooks none of the faults destructive of the highest efficiency. Spare no pains to get rid of it. When a contagious bovine disease threatened the cattle business of the United States the government spared neither money or ability to stamp it out. It was not a question of cost but of success, and we succeeded. Keep the new issue out of the public service as France and Germany keep the San Jose scale out of their vineyards—by refusing to admit fruit from suspected countries. We can do the things we will do. An Englishman said of us last Spring: "The Americans may not win the first battle with Spain, but their ingenuity will at last find a way to victory." So we can get rid of this dangerous "ism." Yankee ingenuity, turned into ways of righteousness, will find a successful method. When it does, "Yankee Doodle" will mark around the world the marching-step of a body of men each of whom brings to the service of his country an honest measure, full of the best of the genuine stuff.

EIGHT-YEAR LIMIT OF ELDERSHIP.

It seems to me that the discussion of the limitation of the terms of office of the presiding elders should have eliminated from it everything of a personal nature, and the interest of the cause of Methodism and Christianity should be the sole consideration. What is best? That and that alone is the question. If Brother Apollos or Brother Cephas be involved incidentally because of their long and continued services, let Brother Apollos or Brother Cephas be assured that no rocks are being thrown at them, but that, what are believed to be errors and abuses, are receiving attention. This much by way of introduction.

I want to say that I believe in the eldership in Homeopathic doses. The occasional elder is a thing of beauty and a joy forever. A necessary wheel in our itinerant omnibus is he. The Bishops could not well get along without advisers. And the office can be made the most useful office in the Church.

What is to be gained by a frequent change in the incumbents of this office? I shall urge only one argument at this time. It will give the preachers as a whole a more equitable and just representation before the Bishop. I shall presume and believe that the Cabinet is bent on doing the fair and right thing. I shall presume that they are HUMAN and restricted within the bounds of the FINITE in knowledge. If there be those who doubt this statement, of course for him my argument will have no validity. If, therefore, it is agreed that they belong to the human race, with its limitations, even though long continuance in office would suggest that they are without limitations, we can proceed with our argument.

First: Who are these men who are thus kept indefinitely in office? They are good men and worthy, for the most part, of the high and terribly responsible duties of presiding over Quarterly Conferences. They are men of ability. They are men of resources, capable of doing more work than the Church has for them to do in the bounds of their several districts. They are men experienced as Church legislators. They can mystify the Bishops with points of order or with syllogistic reasoning. They are men who in the social circle are suave and polite. They have the confidence and respect of the Bishop and their good judgment for a moment could not be doubted by him since they showed so excellent taste in the selection of his co-workers in the Episcopal College. The only thing that I have ever heard urged against these brethren was that they could not sustain themselves in the pastoral relation. This may be a reflection on the intelligence of the "generality of mankind in general." Many a charge has not known a good thing when it has seen it. As a class nothing can be urged against the men.

Secondly, as the preachers say, what works are these men sent to? Being men of such large equipment and so influential in the Cabinet, (I do not mean to infer that they would use their influence unduly,) they are sent to the High-Steeple districts. It is the best for the Church and for themselves that this should be the case. At strategic points the strongest talent is needed, and it would be malicious for one to say it was because these brethren did no look well on horse-back. High-Steeple is advantaged by their ministrations. The Churches do not complain that the elder is unfaithful in the number of his visits or in the length of his pulpit ministrations, and they are glad to have such a sharp, acute, influential man to secure their preachers for them.

Thirdly, and chiefly, the brethren of Squedunkville or Water-Lound district, do not have the same show before the Bishop as the men in High-Steeple district. Elder Short-temper rises in the Cabinet, smiling a Heavenly smile, for is not this his first experience, and has he not a right to enjoy it, and he is a hound who would deprive him of his first taste of conscious power: "Bishop, over in Squedunkville we have a young man who is a wonder, Bishop! He makes saint and sinner sweat at the eyes. Bishop Carry-hen-high was over this last summer, and he preached, and this brother preached and he carried them higher. Wonderful! I nominate him for Twenty-Four-and-Six-Inch-Steeple Church." Brother Long-temper arises: "Bishop, I HAVE A MAN. No one has ever heard of this young Brother. My man is a man of great experience in the work. You know that Brother Short-temper praises all his preachers. It is a lovable trait. This is an appointment that it will do to take no risks on, and besides, it is in my district, and I take a little pride in selecting, hem, men for my work." Who gets the place? Why, the Brother in Long-temper's district. Short-temper's man is the better preacher, but he goes back again and again to listen to the lonely howl owls mournful doot, whilst he deserves, because of his devotion and industry and ability, a better place. Who is to blame? The bishops? No, they acted with the best lights before them. Brother Long-temper? No, it was his duty to represent his own man and how could he know of the superb excellence of the silver-tongued, gold-mouth, ruby-lipped Apollos of the oak-woods of Squedunkville.

I started out with the supposition that presiding elders were humans, excepting, of course, the mutation that is thought to inhere in all things human. Now, if this fundamental proposition is denied, what I am about to say will have no weight. It is valid, I say, only for those who will agree to the broad, all-inclusive proposition that P. E.'s are human. Well, if that is so, just like us common folks, they have their likes and dislikes and prejudices. I do not mean to renege upon them: in the least. Perhaps they are better than most of us in that respect. "Liking a man" will make a lot of trainees sound like good preaching, flesh and jelly, rich and rare and racy. A congeniality of temper will make good preaching sound just a wee mite better than it otherwise would. Different men have quite different ideas of the same brethren. Do you not see, faithful readers, that frequent changes are for a better far all round representation. I know that all who have followed me through the profound depths of this philosophical argument have been convinced by my Aristotelian, Hamiltonian, Devo-

Boole, Tigertian logic that a frequent change in eldership is desirable.

Finally, and in conclusion, as the preachers say, I want to say that I like elders. We have hunted together, fished together—and commend me to an elder to land his nibble—slept together and fought fleas together. They are like Aunt Jane's Marumade, all right, but it won't do to keep it too long.

Yours, etc..

MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

DEAR BROTHER CANNON:—The Student Missionary Campaign Training Conference at Vanderbilt closed on Sunday evening, March 6th, after a session of three days.

The opening meeting was held on Friday afternoon, at which Brother J. C. Granbery, Jr., gave an excellent Bible reading on the Acts of the Apostles as a missionary book. The next speaker was Brother P. L. Cobb, who has charge of the Epworth League Campaign movement. He set forth the purpose of the Conference, which in brief is chiefly this: To train in the Conference select students who will go out during their vacation and visit the Leagues of our Church for the purpose of creating and stimulating among the young people an intelligent interest in missions, by organizing missionary study classes, and by circulating missionary literature.

The Conference was well attended at every session, and from the first was deeply interesting. You could easily infer this when you read the names of the speakers, some of whom were Doctors E. E. Hoss, James Atkins, J. C. C. Newton, J. H. Fritchett, W. R. Lambuth, and O. E. Brown.

Dr. Lambuth delivered three very interesting and instructive addresses on the following subjects: "A Call to the Foreign Field," "Needs of the Foreign Field," and "The Holy Spirit in Missions."

Dr. Brown, of the University, also gave three addresses on—"The Need of Systematic Missionary Study," "Methodism and Missions," and "Jesus as a Missionary."

His treatment of the last mentioned subject was accompanied with tremendous power. Just before he spoke we were in an experience meeting, in which the students expressed the deepest purpose and feelings of his heart.

On Friday evening we were favored with a few farewell words from Brothers Sewell and Leland, who were on their way as missionaries from our Church to Cuba. The fruits of this Conference will be gathered by the Church for years to come; two special results, however, may be noted here: First, the deepening of the spiritual life of many students, and, second, the decision of some to give themselves for the good of the Church in the summer campaign.

OUR NORFOLK PULPIT.

(EXTRACTS FROM RECENT SERMONS TAKEN FROM VIRGINIAN.)

Dr. H. E. Johnson, of Cumberland-Street Church, took as his text:

"Ye are the salt of the earth; but if the salt have lost its savor it is good for nothing."

He said:

The word of God affirms—and human history corroborates the affirmation—that the natural tendency of human society is not upward, but downward; and that it requires a supernatural religion to elevate it, or even to keep it from sinking into corruption. We are all conscious that it is much easier to go wrong than to keep right. We know that each individual life is strongly inclined to err from the narrow path of rectitude, and naturally prone to evil. And since society is only an aggregation of individuals, it can be no better than its elements.

There may be instances of progress without piety; of refinement without religion; of culture without character. But they have been spasmodic and ephemeral; serving only as a thin cover for the reeking corruption which lay beneath the surface.

There has never been a steady and permanent advance in the morals and social condition of a people without a true religion as its impelling force. Just as salt is necessary to preserve meat from decay, so is religion necessary to keep society from sinking into the grossest immoralities. But the religion that would do this, since it must reverse the current of nature, must be superior to nature; it must spring from a divine source, and possess the life and energy of God.

The Christianity of the Gospel fulfils these conditions, for it is an incarnation of divine life and love and power.

The true Church is composed of such lives; and its boundaries are not to be defined by creeds or customs.

The Church is the body of Christ, and each person who has been made a partaker of the divine nature—and only such—is a member of that body.

It is through this body that the Lord proposes to regenerate human society, a living, loving, holy Church, ever interpreting the world around it, yet never deteriorating or losing its distinctive savor of holiness.

The demand for such a Church was never more imperative than it is today. The wild rush with which business is done, causing so much unhealthy competition; the great extremes of wealth and poverty, generating such dangerous antagonisms; the fashionable skepticism—that cunning counterfeit of culture—so largely pervading our popular literature! The sad decay of conscience; the dry-rot of indifference to spiritual things; the vortex of worldliness, and the monster evils of intemperance and political corruption—these call upon the Church as with the voice of ten thousand trumpets to awake her and put on her strength.

What are our Churches doing to meet this call? Are we duly impressed with the magnitude of our mission? In the presence of so tremendous a problem how puerile the policy which would transform the sanctuary into a place of entertainment for the idle, and amusement for the curious, which, by a display of ecclesiastical millinery, in which men disport themselves in the toggery of babyhood; or an exhibition of pulpit pyrotechnics, in which the preacher apes the tricks of the elocutionists and the antics of the actor. How puerile by these to attempt to turn back the Niagara of human sin.

What are our Churches doing? The midway station on life's thoroughfare is crowded with professing Christians who seem to be solving the problem of serving both God and Mammon, for they enjoy the friendship of the world

METHODIST RECORDER.

A Weekly newspaper devoted to the spread of christian holiness.

EDITORIAL.

Some of our readers desire to know who Bishop Foster is. He is a Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, whose diocese includes New York City. He is a man of ability, force, and the editor has always admired him for his courage, but the question is whether he made no blunder of his life when he wrote the letter to the Outlook denouncing Prohibitionists as "Pharisees," and calling them other bad things.

Hon. Nelson Dingley, the late leader of the Republican party in Congress, was from Maine, and was a Prohibitionist. The committee sent along with the body by the Senate and House did not have enough respect for Mr. Dingley or themselves to keep from drinking, and although the friends of Mr. Dingley, out of respect for his views, ordered that no liquor be put on the train, yet a large quantity was used, and the bill charged to the government. There is nothing sacred or worthy of respect to the slaves of strong drink.

William Arthur, the celebrated and influential Wesleyan of England, has celebrated his eightieth birthday. He wrote the opening sermon at the Washington Ecumenical Conference, but his voice was too feeble to deliver it, so that it was read by Rev. T. Bowman Stephenson, then President of the Wesleyan Conference. Few who saw him then expected him to live so long, but it is probable that he will be strong enough to attend the next Ecumenical in London.

The Bristol Tribune says that "Dr. Hoss has decided to decline the presidency of the University of Georgia and will remain in his present position as editor of the Nashville Advocate. This decision was anticipated by the Recorder in its report of the matter. Since his defence of Barbee & Smith and the Book Committee, it would be better for the Church and the Advocate if he had resigned. This is said out of a hard feeling toward him, but is simply the opinion of the editor of the Recorder."

As we go to press we see in the Lynchburg News the resignation of Prof. Chas. W. Landon, director of Music at the Woman's College. The News publishes an appreciative notice of Prof. Landon, which we will give in our next issue.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

CHAUTAUQUA BY THE SEA.

The movement described in the following extract from the Pilot, will probably in the future be so important to our Virginia Christians, that the full account is given. If the plan indicated is carried out, it will be a help to the kingdom of righteousness. Christian people need places for recreation to which they can go and carry their children without leading them into the temptation of Germans, card-parties, wine-parties, etc. May the movement be a grand success. The name of W. W. Vicar as treasurer is a guarantee that persons investing their money in it will have it well taken care of.

"The Chautauqua by the Sea Assembly was organized at the office of Messrs. H. L. Page & Co., the real estate agents and auctioneers, on Bank street, and the charter admitted to record. The following officers and directors were elected:

President—Captain E. V. White.
 Vice President—James S. Groves.
 Secretary—H. L. Page.
 Treasurer—W. W. Vicar.
 Attorneys—Duncan & Frick.
 Directors—J. S. Darling, of Hampton; Thomas J. Budd, and John S. Lathawk, Jr., of Philadelphia; William S. Fallner, of Washington, D. C.; Rev. W. H. Groves, Virginia; Dr. H. L. Layne, and W. Burke, of Norfolk, and the officers.

The new organization has a paid-up capital stock and succeeds the Chautauqua by the Sea, which largely developed the property. It owns a very desirable tract of land a short distance below Virginia Beach, and has a frontage of two miles on the Atlantic ocean, and several beautiful lakes.

The charter confers the right to conduct camp meetings, hotels, bathing houses, educational meetings, chautauqua assemblies, and innocent amusements not interdicted by orthodox religion. It is intended to have a great Methodist camp meeting, similar to that which has made Ocean Grove both desirable and famous, there during the approaching summer. Cottages will be erected and the auditorium, with a seating capacity of 3,000, will be used for the public devotional meetings.

It will be remembered that the Virginia Conference of the M. E. Church, in session at Portsmouth last November, appointed a committee to report on the advisability of inaugurating annual camp meetings at Chautauqua by the Sea. The committee rendered a unanimous report, from which the following clause is taken:

"Resolved: That in our opinion it is the place to establish a camp meeting for the M. E. Church, South, provided proper arrangements can be made, and we do hereby recommend, and we highly recommend to our committee, if such can be done, the location of the same on the Chautauqua grounds, and that they take the necessary steps to establish a yearly camp meeting."

Proper and satisfactory arrangements were made, with the result that on the Chautauqua grounds there will be held annually hereafter a camp meeting modeled after that at Ocean Grove, and our people will have the pleasure of hearing some of the most distinguished ministers in Southern Methodism preach.

The Chautauqua by the Sea Assembly possesses ideal picnic grounds, and the constituted authorities will be invited to bring their Sunday-schools, labor organizations, military camps, and other gatherings to this ideal reservation for recreation and pleasure.

A special invitation will be extended to the Y. M. C. A. to hold its State Convention there.

The enterprise will be conducted on strictly non-denominational lines. All religious denominations will be extended a welcome to the grounds and buildings.

Arrangements are now in progress for Chautauqua next summer. An attractive program is being arranged under the supervision of Rev. W. H. Groves, whose knowledge and experience guarantees its success.

It is intended to make the 300 acres of grounds owned by the Chautauqua Assembly the most attractive on the Atlantic coast. Cars from the Virginia Beach railroad will make close connection with the grounds and everything essential to comfort and convenience will be provided by the new owners.

ENGLISH WESLEYANS LEADING USON.

The English correspondent of the Christian Guardian writes as follows of the work being done by the Wesleyans:

"Without disregarding the wisdom of the advice, 'Don't prophesy unless you know,' I am inclined to think that the success of the Twentieth Century Fund movement is fairly assured; unless there is a serious falling off of interest and effort on the part of our people. The subject occupies quite six times as much space as any other in our connexional newspapers. Every week we are favored with articles or editorial notes, or both; reports of districts and circuit gatherings, and letters from all sorts and conditions of men volunteering advice as to the best means of securing perfect success to the movement. If we meet with an active Methodist from a distance, or journey into our circuits, we find that the uppermost subject in the minds of our people is the million scheme. The questions are everywhere the same. 'What do you think of the million fund?' 'Have you had your meeting yet?' 'How much is your circuit going to raise?' It appears to me that our Church is as much stirred and moved as it ought to be by any proposal that is entirely financial.

"Up to the present, about 450,000 guineas are promised. Quite one-third of the circuits have not yet reported the result of their first effort. And nobody supposes that the circuits that have reported have already reached their maximum. The general understanding everywhere is, that the amounts promised are the minimum and that there is to be no maximum—no point beyond which circuits are not allowed to go."

* *

Bro. A. B. Sharpe seems determined to make every year on Charlotte Circuit better than the last. This year he is planning to build a parsonage at Drake's Branch. With this accomplished, he will have put the circuit on a firm foundation. The Gazette states that he has secured the donation of an acre of land at Saxe, and is pushing rapidly forward to build a house of worship there. Figures are not always the best things to judge by, but such figures as appear in this case are noteworthy. The year before Bro. Sharpe went to the circuit, the minister's report was, "salaries for the year, $180, and total for all purposes, $381." At the expiration of three years, the salary of the pastor is $551, and total amount raised, $1170!

The secular press gives a notice of the marriage of Prof. Andrew Sledd to Miss Annie Florence Candler, at the home of her father, in Oxford, Ga. The ceremony was performed by her father. The notice goes on to say:

"Miss Candler is the only daughter of Bishop Candler and is a lovely young woman. She is endowed with the sweetest of dispositions, and is very attractive and intelligent. She graduated with first honor from Wesleyan Female College, located at Macon, Ga., in the class of '98, and while attending college formed scores of friends throughout the State.

"Professor Andrew Sledd comes from one of the distinguished families of Virginia, Rev. R. N. Sledd, D. D., of Danville, Va., being his father, and is a gentleman of fine intellect and Christian character.

"He was elected to the chair of Latin at Emory College and accepted the position in January, 1898, which position he has since filled creditably to himself and the college, and by his universal courtesy and gentlemanly bearing has endeared himself to the members of the faculty and the whole student body. Professor Sledd was educated at Randolph-Macon College of Virginia, and after graduation attended lectures at Harvard University, and there received his A. M. degree. Before coming to Emory he was adjunct professor of Latin at Vanderbilt University.

"The marriage was a private home affair, witnessed by near relatives and a few special friends."

OUR NORFOLK PULPIT.

during six days and on the seventh take a homeopathic dose of diluted Gospel to satisfy the claims of the Almighty.

Has the salt indeed lost its savor? Certainly some of it seems to be in that worthless state! But not all. Jerusalem still has "seven thousand in Israel who have not bowed the knee to Baal," but who with uncompromising devotion seek to realize the divine ideal for the Church. You will find them in the rabbinical school diligently striving to deposit in the young heart's virgin soil the seeds of duty, purity, and truth. You will find them in the habitations of poverty and wretchedness, lightening the burden and imparting hope. You will find them in the haunts of vice, pleading, warning, persuading, rescuing the fettered slaves of sin. You will find them, like the Master, "who went about doing good," trying to teach a thoughtless world that judgment, eternity, God are solemn realities, which it behooves us to keep ever in view.

The text contains these lessons which Christians may profitably ponder.

First: That Christ has deposited with His Church the power necessary for the world's regeneration; which power is vested in His word and His Spirit.

Second: That a Church destitute of this power or failing to employ it, is, in the estimation of our Lord, "good for nothing."

Third: That the test of a Church is, not its printed creed, but its abiding fruit; not its respectability, but its power to penetrate the world around it, and to lift that world into the kingdom of God.

LIVING BY FAITH.

Rev. R. H. Bennett, of McKendree Church, took as his text: "The Just Shall Live by Faith."

"Faith is taking God at His word. This is all that can be made of it in its simplest and most complex aspects.

"Faith is not reason. But how often we persist in proceeding in our life and Church plans along the narrow lines of rationalism. This shuts out faith. How often has faith contracted reason? How God delights to confound worldly wisdom!

"Faith does not ask or require to see the means or the how. This would be sight. No possible reason could suggest the way out of the dilemma in which Abraham was placed by God's promise to make of his descendants a mighty

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON I, SECOND QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, APRIL 2.

Text of the Lesson, John xi, 32-45.
Memory Verses, 41-44—Golden Text, John xi, 25—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

32. "Lord, if Thou hadst been here my brother had not died." Thus said Mary when she came to Jesus as she fell at His feet in her sorrow. They had sent Him word, but He came not, yet He loved them. Oh, but this seems hard to anything but very great faith! To see our loved ones taken away knowing that He could give them health and let them stay with us, and yet believe that in it all He loves us! We can see the love when He gives health, as to the blind man or the impotent man or the nobleman's son, and we can see His love to those whom He takes to His beautiful home, but where is the evidence of love to the broken hearts that are left? Yet it is all love, and all for the best.

33. "He groaned in the spirit and was troubled." He hates death and will yet destroy it. Hear Him as He says: "I will ransom them from the power of the grave, I will redeem them from death. O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction!" (Hos. xiii, 14.) The work of the enemy cannot hurt any of His redeemed.

34. "Where have ye laid him?" This from Him as a man, for as a man He was sympathizing with them and entering into their sorrows. We have not a high priest who cannot be touched with a feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin (Heb. iv, 15). They said unto Him, Lord, come and see.

35. "Jesus wept." What tears they were which fell from the eyes of the Man of Sorrows; actual tears from human eyes, yet He was God manifest in the flesh! Here and on Olivet as He wept over Jerusalem (Luke xix, 41) He wept for others, not for Himself. To the daughters of Jerusalem He said, Weep not for Me, but weep for yourselves and for your children (Luke xxiii, 28). But what shall we say of His strong crying and tears in Gethsemane, when He prayed unto Him who was able to save Him from death and was heard, and was saved from dying in the garden, and was strengthened by an angel and went on and finished His work (Heb. v, 7).

36. "Then said the Jews, Behold, how He loved him." Yes, it was love that wept, but there was more than love in it. The words make us think of I John iii, 1, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God." But one Only Begotten, yet many sons through him.

37. "Could not this man have caused that even this man should not have died?" Yes, He could, as far as the ability was concerned, just as easily as He could open blind eyes, but there was to be more glory to God by the death and resurrection than would have been by recovering him from his sickness (verse 4). It seems as if everything He did was questioned by those who knew Him not.

38. "Jesus, therefore, again groaning in Himself, cometh to the grave." The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now, and we also who have the first fruits of the Spirit groan within ourselves, waiting for the redemption of the body (Rom. viii, 22, 23). There may be a connection between these two groanings of creation and believers and the two groanings of Jesus on this occasion.

39. "Jesus said, Take ye away the stone." But Martha objects, though she had said, "I know that even now whatsoever Thou wilt ask of God God will give it Thee" (verse 22). How weak is our faith and what a doubting faith it is! It often seems like no faith at all. We say I know, I believe (verses 22, 27), and then say, It is too late now, utterly impossible. It cannot be; if only He had come before.

40. "Jesus saith unto her, Said I not unto thee that if thou wouldst believe thou shouldst see the glory of God?" To the Father of the little girl who had just died Jesus said, Be not afraid, only believe (Mark v, 36). To Thomas He said, "Be not faithless, but believing (John xx, 27). If we have faith and doubt not, we shall see His power (Math. xxi, 21, 22). Faith considers not feelings, nor circumstances, nor difficulties, but only God and is fully persuaded (Rom. iv, 19-21).

41. "Jesus lifted up His eyes and said, Father, I thank Thee that Thou hast heard Me." This after they had taken away the stone and before He called Lazarus forth. In Math. xi, 25, we hear Him saying, "I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and hast revealed them unto babes." On another occasion, right in the midst of the people, He said, "Father, glorify Thy name" (John xii, 28).

42. "And I knew that Thou hearest Me always, but because of the people which stand by I said it, that they may believe that Thou hast sent Me." It was His constant testimony that He was here on earth for the Father, that the Father sent Him and told Him just what to say and wrought all His works in Him.

43. "And when He had thus spoken He cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth." One has said that if He had not mentioned Lazarus by name, but had just cried, "Come forth," all the bodies of the saints would have responded, but at this time He only wants Lazarus, and him He calls by name. When Christ Himself rose from the dead, many bodies of the saints which slept arose and came out of their graves after His resurrection and went into the Holy City and appeared unto many (Math. xxvii, 52, 53).

44. "Jesus saith unto them, Loose him and let him go." He was now alive at the mouth of the tomb, but still bound hand and foot with graveclothes; hence this command. How many saved people are bound by former habits of their life when they were dead in sins, and thus hindered from running for Him or working for Him or speaking for Him! He permits those who are already free from bonds to set others free. How necessary that the believer should be free from all bondage!

45. "Then many of the Jews which came to Mary and had seen the things which Jesus did believed on Him." How could they help it? And yet the next verses tell us that some went away and began to counsel together for to put Him to death. Think of planning to kill one who could give life to the dead! How blind and mad Satan does make his servants. In due time He would lay down His life, but they could not take it from him (chapter x, 17, 18). See now the glad sisters and their brother, once more with them, alive and well, a happy household, and see the new believers and say if He did not do His best for them after all!

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning April 2, "The Birthday of Hope," Text, I Pet. i, 1-9.

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who begat us again unto a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead."

Every person has some days in his calendar memorable above others. Birthdays are the first festivals we naturally learn to celebrate. With older years we meet experiences which change the whole direction of our lives and leave their impress indelibly on our character. Such events are kept in memory as joyous or sorrowful, and their anniversaries become red letter or black letter days forever.

National festivals mark the great battles or political changes which have been influential in shaping destiny.

Some days have been of importance to all nations and every individual. The birth of Jesus Christ has deeper meaning for every land than that of its most powerful sovereign. Of all days which deserve commemoration none shares in importance with that of the resurrection of Jesus Christ. In a deep sense all previous time was a preparation for it, and all subsequent ages have been shaped by it.

If human life and prospects are bounded by the grave and there be no day after death, then the world is meaningless and the struggle for existence is absurd. However forgetful we may be of the fact, it still remains the most important of truths. All our hope for the future personally and as a race is linked to the assurance that one man of the race has died and risen again to life never more to die. This one died of deliberate design in order to rise again and demonstrate His power over death. He furthermore offers to all who will follow His leadership and keep His commands that they shall likewise receive resurrection to a life incorruptible, eternal, blissful.

Whoever believes and accepts this becomes sober minded and hopeful. He looks forward to the visible, personal revelation of Jesus Christ and the closing of the events of this world epoch that a more glorious era, the age of divine humanity, may be established. Truly Easter day is the birthday of hope!

The Great Change.

No transformation in this world is more radical than that wrought in the nature of a man by the Holy Spirit when he becomes converted from evil to good. It is more than sorrow, more than repentance, more than doing penance, more than penitence. No word from the Latin carrying the idea of pain expresses the New Testament idea wrapped up in the word used by John Baptist, by Jesus and His apostles. The thought is rather one of "complete change." All the old way of thinking and doing is overturned. It is a new

FIVE-MINUTE SERMONS

XIII. DECEITFUL BROOKS.

WILLIAMS GOODRICH is a new man in our congregation. He came out from New England last summer and bought the Claywood farm when it was sold at auction. He has been farming with a great deal of energy and I have been much pleased with the man. I drove out to see him last August after his harvest was over and I supposed he would have a little leisure. I did not want to go when he would think himself so busy he would wish I had stayed at home. For I do try to have a little common sense and not call on people at the wrong time every time. I found him busy, however, for he had two sets of men at work sinking wells. He told me that when he bought the farm he was careful to look after the water supply. He found that there was three splendid streams of water running through the land which had their source in springs a couple of miles away. "My growing crops flourished on account of these flowing streams, and I was more than satisfied with my bargain. But when the long dry weather came on and the other farmers above my farm turned all their stock into these streams, they were all consumed or dried up before they reached my farm and I have no running water whatever. So, I am compelled to sink my wells to keep my stock from famishing." Unless this experiment succeeded very well he was not certain but he had made a bad bargain in purchasing his farm. I noticed several other farmers in the same plight that day. But when I got back home and into my study the incident vanished from my memory.

That evening I was sitting in my yard enjoying a little breeze which had sprung up after the intense heat of the day when my neighbor next to me stepped over and stretched himself out on the grass. He was in a mood for talking about himself and I let him talk on. He had made a profession of faith and united with the church a few years since with a story of his experience which was fascinating. He seemed to have stepped out of his doubts into the full daylight of Christian experience instead of into the dim twilight through which the most of Christians are compelled to pass. He began his new career with a zest and delight which interested all of us. He has dropped none of his work which he then assumed but he candidly confessed that night, that it was wholly a matter of duty to him now and he was only waiting to decide whether he would continue or drop everything as a great mistake which he had made. He had now come to this latter conclusion and only wanted to talk it over as an honest man before he took that step. But unless he could see things in a different light in a short time, he would retire completely from any association with the Christian church. We talked along into the night trying to find the reason of the change, which was totally unguessed by me, until he announced it. Little by little I got down to the bottom of the difficulty. The experience which had wrought so mightily in his case was largely emotional. His feelings were played on at the time and his whole nature was swept away with the impulse to throw himself into the cause which appealed to him. There was no deep conviction of a duty which bound him to his Lord and Redeemer. There was no calmly reached assurance that he was where God wanted him when he entered the Christian ranks. He was somewhat as the crusader who sewed the cross in his shoulder in the time of intense excitement, and only realized, long after, what his vow meant. When the feelings had been quenched by the toil and weariness of the crusade he wished himself at home. The emotions were as the wind. We may flourish on them excellently for a time, but they are sure to run dry. They are as the friends of Job, "My brethren have dealt deceitfully as a brook, as the channel of brooks that pass away; which are black by reason of the ice, and wherein the snow hideth itself, what time they wax warm, they vanish: when it is hot, they are consumed out of their place."

It was late in the night when my neighbor went home and left me in the quiet of the August night. The figure of the deceitful brooks was in my mind. How well it was illustrated in the parish which was familiar to me through some personal friends. They secured a brilliant pastor who gave them some sermons which fed their souls most wonderfully. But it was not six months before the stream began to dry up. Each sermon had less "meat" in it than the former. The minister was not a student but an idler in his study. A few sermons, which he had written under some studious spasm, were excellent and showed his capabilities, but his pulpit work became ever weaker and weaker. The supply of nourishment became thinner and thinner. They are not fed all all now. They confess that the stream has run entirely dry. The brook was a deceitful brook.

Along side of this parish was another which called its pastor the same time, a fine man of studious habits and pious deportment. They gathered about him, a congregation of wealth and intellectual ability. He was enthusiastic over his new work. Surely he was admirably supported in his work. But the novelty did not last long and men and women tired of their personal assistance and subscriptions were only paid in part, and some entirely forgotten. The stream was running low. The brook was not all it promised to be, I have heard that he has resigned without any other field of labor because his support in every way was inadequate. It was only another instance of the deceitful brook. You may find others in your observation if not in your experience.

A BROOK THAT NEVER FAILS.

OUT OF THE DEPTHS.

BY FANNIE B. DAMON.

All thy waves roll very near;
All my little strength is spent;
Over me in floods of fear
Sweeps the sinner's punishment.
Yet, oh, part the blinding wave!
In Thy might, Jehovah, save!

Thought and will are fettered fast,
Sin has dragged me very deep;
Vaunted purposes are past;
Self has tried in vain to keep—
Till I cry in need—in fear—
“Hearest? carest? cometh near?”

Look upon me, lost and cold,
Struggling in sin's awful sea!
Thou who walked the floods of old,
Walk again to rescue me.
Part, oh, part the blinding wave!
In Thy pity, Jesus, save.

ing from a divine birth. It seems renewed to such a one. The world has not changed; only the man himself has been transformed and sees, feels and acts from new centers of being.

The great change does not come as the result of the man's deciding to live better. A hundred times one resolves this and fails. Then, with no more effort, rather with less struggle, he yields his will and finds himself different. Power, light, joy, peace—all come, but not by his effort. A power not himself, he knows, has done it; not flesh and blood, but spirit; not evil, but good; not many, but one, all powerful—the Holy Spirit.

Holy Week.

The Protestant community is coming to recognize increasingly the value of commemorative services during Holy Week. Whatever uncertainty may wrap the dates of other Christian festivals we are certain that the events of the Lord's passion and death occurred at this particular season of the year. We can follow clearly in the Scripture records the scenes from the supper at Bethany in the house of Simon the leper through the succeeding days of triumphal entry of Jerusalem, the arguments with Pharisees and Sadducees in the temple, the Passover supper and private discourses with His disciples, to the night betrayal, mock trial, crucifixion and burial, to the wondrous rising from the dead on Easter morn.

Nothing can be more conducive to devotion than in private or in public services to review these most solemn and important events of human history.

Let every League get closer to the heart of Jesus by following in thought the events of the last week of the Master's earthly work.

Judice and Conviction.

There is a time in the life of many men when the claims of Christianity seem unreasonable or at least of doubtful force. It is a period of development when the rational powers are asserting their rights and the young reason has not acquired skill to sift truth from error. Happy is he who in such a time fills his mind with the Bible facts and allows his mental powers to mature before he settles his philosophy! Some become skeptics because of lack of knowledge of the facts. Even the famous scholar Max Muller was for some time credited with being skeptical of Scripture truth. He found that a reading of it carefully changed his whole attitude, removed his prejudices and produced conviction.

Great preparations are in progress in Indianapolis for the care of the international convention of the League. This will exceed in size, enthusiasm and interest all preceding meetings.

The organ of the Canadian League is named The Era, the same as that of the Church South. Secretary Crews is the editor.

The largest League chapter in Canada is at Galt and has a membership of 279.

CONFINING TURKEYS.

Parks Should Have All the Advantages of a Free Range.

Two acres devoted to a turkey park, with a substantial building situated thereon, will prove a profitable investment where turkey raising is contemplated. For such an equipment a house 30 by 10 feet, divided into three apartments, each 10 by 10, the center one being open on the front, will be found most convenient and will afford roosting room for 100 or more turkeys during the growing season and be sufficiently large for the breeders during the winter and spring. This house need not be expensive. It can be built of rough or planed lumber and need not be more than four feet high at the eaves, with six foot front. The two end, or roosting, rooms should be made tight and warm, and for this purpose they can be lined with some of the better grades of building paper. If the joists be 2 by 4, set sidewise, and the building paper put on over them, it will leave a dead air space of two inches, which will insure the building being comfortable. Such a house can be built for from $20 to $30 aside from the labor.

To inclose two acres with a turkey high and tight fence might seem to some like a pretty costly undertaking, but this is not the case. A good fence that will keep in turkeys can be made in this manner: Set posts so that they will stand 6 or 6½ feet above ground, 8 feet apart, and to these nail 6 inch fence boards for the bottom. Attach to this 2 inch mesh wire netting 2 feet wide and above this a 3 foot netting of 3 inch mesh. Join them together at intervals with common small wire, thus making a fence 5 feet 6 inches high. Over the tops of the posts stretch a length of barbed or cable wire, which will be 6 or 12 inches above the netting, according to the height of the posts, and wire the netting to this cable so as to take up all sag. This makes a fence practically 6 or 6½ feet high, so close at the bottom that young turkeys cannot get through it and one that will keep out every class of vermin except hawks. I prefer this cable wire to a topboard because the fowls do not see it so plainly and are less apt to attempt to fly over it. If No. 18 wire netting is used, the fence will be very substantial and will last many years. To fence two acres in this manner will cost about $50, and the entire plant—house and run—can be more than paid for in the saving on one year's hatch. It is much better than to allow the turkeys to roam.

The location of the turkey park should be such as to give them all the advantages usually secured on a free range. It should have plenty of shade and grass. The orchard or a small grove, if it be in grass, is eminently adapted to this use, and the land will not then be entirely given up to the fowls.—L. E. Keyser in Country Gentleman.

No Excuse For Stale Eggs.

There is no excuse to fall back on when a poultryman sells stale eggs or rotten eggs for fresh ones. Eggs from "new nests" should be tested before selling—if sold at all. Nest eggs cannot get mixed up with good ones if the poultryman knows his business. China eggs or egg gourds used for nest eggs will prevent this. The tester, such as we have several times described, shows conclusively whether an egg is fresh or not. A perfectly fresh egg is clear and no air space can be seen in the large end. As the egg gets older this air space enlarges until it finally occupies half the egg. A perfectly fresh egg will not shake—that is, the contents will not shake when the egg is shaken, no matter how violently, but eggs cannot stand the constant little jarring, such as transportation in the cars. Even if eggs are fresh when started, if carried 50 or more miles they will shake a little when received at the destination. The old fashioned test for eggs is the water test. Take a large pan filled three or four (or more) inches with water. Place a number of eggs therein. Those eggs that lay on their side on the bottom are fresh. The ones that stand up on the small end are stale and those that float are bad.—Agricultural Epitomist.

The First Sitters.

Eleven or thirteen eggs are enough for a hen to sit on in cold weather. The smaller the number the better the chance of a good hatch. Early chicks are hardy. They don't have to be coddled to keep them alive, but they should have dry quarters to roost in and plenty to eat. They are great eaters, the early birds are that come from the shell while the frost is still on the ground, but if fed often they will grow in proportion to their feed, and when the first mild days of spring come will be in good shape to turn out to forage.

Beware of Contamination.

A subject that should be thoroughly understood by amateur breeders is contamination. It is claimed by some poultrymen that a hen once mated with a male bird of a different breed cannot afterward be relied upon to reproduce her variety in its purity. Others claim that after the hen has been separated for a certain length of time and mated with a pure bred male of her variety she will breed true to her kind. A breeder cannot be too careful, and if he keeps a number of breeds the safe plan is to keep them separated the year round.

Selecting Roosters.

There is something to be known in properly selecting a rooster for the flock. If he has long sickle feathers and developed early, the pullets from him will in all probability be early layers, as the full hackle and long sickles denote early maturity. The comb is an indication of health and vigor and should be upright and in color a bright scarlet red. He should have strong, clean limbs, with plenty of bone, unless of the Asiatic breeds, which are feather legged. The whole appearance should indicate activity.

nation, and God's command to offer his only son, Isaac, in sacrifice. A passer-by, hearing Ezekiel exhorting the piles of mingled dry bones in the valley, would have said the hot sun of the desert had gone to his brain and crazed him. A queer congregation to preach to! An absurd task! God does not condition his promises on probability, but on Faith.

"Faith must never waver. 'Let not such a man think he shall obtain anything of the Lord.' When once we have gotten our faith to the standing position we must not allow it to waver from the fluctuating breezes of feeling. Nail your colors to the mast.

"All power is of God. Faith is Franklin's kite string that brings us all we care for. We have only to fly our kite. 'Pompey boasted that with one stamp of his foot he could raise all Italy in arms,' but God with one word of His mouth could raise not only all Italy, but all Heaven and earth and hell.

"All that power is ours for the asking. Do we believe it? Of the crime of crimes, the sin of unbelief, John, the Apostle of gentleness and love, in his heavenly old age, along with peaceful benedictions to his Churches, wrote, 'He that believeth not God hath made God a liar.' Awful thought.

"The Just shall live by faith, not by feeling. Feeling is only the foam on the river. It is the current beneath that turns the mill wheels of works. Too many of us in our religion are like sheet iron stoves with a fire of shavings in them—red hot one moment and cold the next. Feeling is an extra engine behind the train to pass it through the snow drift.

"There ought to be no need of special revival services. If we lived by faith men would be converted to God at our regular services. God is always ready, the gospel is ever powerful, sin and men's need is always woeful, and if men are not saved regularly, I care not where it is, the Church of God is failing in her work, and the crime of unbelief lies at the door of a back-slidden minister and Church. Not a Church in Norfolk but could have and ought to have hundreds, if not thousands, of souls converted to God this year, and such would be the case if preachers and people would repent of their unbelief in sackcloth and ashes."

THE HOLY GRAIL.

Rev. W. J. Young, D. D., preached the fourth of his series of sermons on "The Myths and Legends of Christian Lands," at Epworth M. E. Church Sunday night. His subject was "The Holy Grail; or the Knights of the Round Table." He said, in part:

The purpose of the sermon is not to discuss these legends from a historical or literary standpoint, but rather to present that standard of manhood which, though in legendary form, grew up about the person of King Arthur. Be it remembered, meanwhile, that this ideal owes its existence to the influence of Christianity in even the earliest thought and life. According to this ideal, purity is essential to greatness. What a contrast does this present to the ancient Hercules, or to those modern conceptions of the great man, as a millionaire, a scholar, a leader, irrespective of the presence or the absence of goodness. It is a sad fact that there is a widespread skepticism among men as to the possibility of purity. The man who is good himself is confident that any other man may be pure. Goodness is so often thought of as accompanied by weakness. Sainthood brings to our minds the monastery, the fast, the dim religious light! But these holy knights were men in life's activities, and this is the true conception. Jesus prayed: "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them for the evil."

In the growth of the legend Arthur became almost a demi-God; indeed, some have supposed that the attributes of some ancient deity of the Britons were transformed into this King of the sixth century. Such is the tendency of all the legends that gather about great men. It springs from the consciousness of our greatness, and reminds us of the words of St. John: "Beloved now are we, the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be." With what solicitude should we protect this divine manhood from the stain of impurity!

To such a manhood comes a vision of things divine. Only the pure knight could hope to find or ever to see the holy Grail. So Jesus said: "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God." Much of the doubt, much of the erroneous teaching of these modern days is due to the stain of men's hearts. "If, therefore, the light that is in the be darkness, how great is that darkness."

The purity of Arthur was a militant purity. There are evils in the world, and they are to be overcome and destroyed. It is not enough to be good. That goodness must assert itself. Indeed, it may be questioned whether goodness is what it should be, until it reaches the sage which makes it feel that it cannot bear the presence of sin near it. Only the pure man can engage in this warfare. Where sin of any sort is, there is a consciousness of weakness. Of Sir Galahad, Tennyson writes:

"His strength was as the strength of tea, Because his heart was pure."

They searched for the Holy Grail, as the crusaders sought to rid the spot where Christ was crucified, of the Moslem hordes. There seems to be here an unconscious recognition of the sentiment so beautifully expressed by Paul: "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross." God is greatest in the cross of Christ, manhood is at its best at the cross, on the cross.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the Lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction.

REGULAR COURSE! This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every department of the Institute, is in charge of a graduate of Randolph-Macon College or of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at face value by the Woman's College.

TEACHER'S COURSE! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, and yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a Christian School. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in pedagogy. A Practice school gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences.

POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN. The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building, and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is a great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated Christian women.

3. Cost.

As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim—it was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

Smith's Dictionary

... OF THE ...

BIBLE.

Comprising its Antiquities, Biography,
Geography and Natural History.

Edited by WM. SMITH, LL. D.,

Classical Examiner of University of London.

By a special arrangement with the publishers, we will send the Southern Methodist Recorder for one year and Smith's Bible Dictionary for $2.00. Every family should have a copy of this great work. For description, see below.

This is, undoubtedly, the best work of its kind in the English language, and has no rival in importance for the elucidation of the scenes and facts of Scripture.

The work contains 1024 large octavo pages, over 150 illustrations and maps engraved especially for this work, and is handsomely and strongly bound in cloth.

THE GREAT QUESTION OF EXPANSION.

The New York Herald says: "The Imperial Republic" is an able and comprehensive plea in favor of expansion. The judicial tone of the work and its cogent reasoning will undoubtedly attract and hold the attention of thoughtful and honest men throughout the country.

JUST PUBLISHED

THE IMPERIAL REPUBLIC.

"It is for America to do that new thing among nations.
to make an imperial domain a republic."

By JAMES C. FERNALD.

Author of "The Spaniard in History," Associate Editor of "The Standard Dictionary," etc.

A thoroughly original, stirring and powerful argument for expansion from the point of view of a scholar and a student of history. The author is a firm believer in the power of the American people to reach yet higher ideals of government and of civilization, and to extend their benefits over the widest reach of territory that may legitimately come under American control. A distinction is drawn between a true and a false imperialism, and it is convincingly proved that duty, expediency, and necessity urge the nation on to the new expansion.

COMMENDED IN UNQUALIFIED TERMS.

Hon. Amos J. Cummings, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.: "I have read it through from beginning to end, and find the information invaluable. Nobody interested in our national development should fail to read the book carefully."

Hon. William P. Frye, United States Senator, Washington, D. C.: "It is a valuable book and one of great interest to all Americans."

Hon. Stephen B. Elkins, United States Senator, "Interesting and well written."

The Chicago Tribune says: "It is a spirited and unanswerable brief for expansion. Mr. Fernald's style is polished, forceful, full of magnetism. His outlook is broad, and bold, and frank. His patriotism is infectious, but his knowledge accurate and voluminous. His logic sound and close-woven. His treatise has a unity and directness that cannot fail to win the admiration of the most hostile reader. The author's crisp, cheery, steady flow of patriotic eloquence will speak widely for itself."

Hon. Cushman K. Davis, Chairman Committee on Foreign Relations, United States Senate: "Interesting and instructive."

GROWN WITH "HARD CASH" GUANO

ph M. Hurt, by J. P. Pettus.---Average Length of Leaf, FORTY INCHES.

MARCH 1st, 1899.

TESTIMONIALS:

MARCH 1st, 1899.

TEST MADE BY WALKER CLUB the Bellefonte Guano was applied.

TINKLING, Lunenburg Co., Va.

To the Blackstone Guano Co.,
Blackstone, Va.

Gentlemen:—A committee of the Walker Club, composed of John O. Bragg and F. S. Manson, Jorgenson, and Theo. Ogain, Tinkling, Va., have examined the results of the fertilizer test made for the club on my farm with ten of the best brands of guano. On plot No. 1, old lot land, ten brands of fertilizers were applied, each at the rate of 500 pounds per acre, the ten sections carefully marked and treated alike. The committee picked out the section on which your Bellefonte Guano was used as the one showing the best results. On plot No. 2, four acres of new ground from old field fine land, four brands were used. Here the committee also found the best results, very decidedly, in the acre on which

Yours truly,
L. A. HARDY.

I have sold the tobacco made on the four acres mentioned above. The tobacco made on the acre on which the Bellefonte was used brought thirty-four dollars and fourteen cents ($34.14) more than the tobacco made on either of the other three acres, either in cultivation or natural fertility, or any other way. I know the tobacco did not get mixed in cutting, curing or shipping.

L. A. HARDY,
Committee for W. A. C.

I have used the several brands of guano made by the Blackstone Guano Company, for ten years and have tested them by brands of other makes on the same field and truthfully say that I think the Bellefonte and Hard Cash are unsurpassed for tobacco. It gives me pleasure to recommend the Blackstone Guano Co.'s Guano to the farmers of Southside Virginia.

JOS. M. HURT.

Nottoway County.

Gentlemen:—I used your Bellefonte Guano last year along with another brand and sold the tobacco from the Bellefonte at an average of $19 per hundred, and the tobacco grown with the other brand at an average of less than $12, showing a difference of $7 per hundred in favor of Bellefonte Guano. This ought to be enough to show what I think of Bellefonte Guano.

V. C. LOVE
Danville, Va.

Gentlemen:—I have used your Guanos for the past ten years, and they have given me perfect satisfaction. I consider the Bellefonte the best I ever used, and shall use it the present year.

FRANK WHITE,
Nottoway Co.

Gentlemen:—I used your Bellefonte Guano last season along with other brands and am thoroughly convinced that it is the best I ever used. I have sold one barn of tobacco raised with the Bellefonte at an average of $15 around, lugs and all, which is a high average for shipping tobacco.

V. O. ANDREWS.

Dinwiddie, Co.

Blackstone Guano Co.—Gentlemen:—I bought of your agent, Mr. J. J. Mason, and used your Bellefonte Guano last season and am well pleased with the results. I have used a great many brands and think I can truly say it is the best I ever used, especially in the last ten years. Will say to my farmer friends that I think it a great mistake to use a low grade guano to save a few dollars in the ton at the expense of a larger difference in each hundred pounds of tobacco grown.

MESSAGE OF THE LILIES.

My soul and I went walking
Beneath the moon of spring.
The lilies tall were talking--
We heard them murmuring.

In dimly moonlit places
Some raised sweet throats of white,
And others lifted faces
Of fragrant snow and light.

Their language was an essence,
But clearer than a bird's,
And from it grew a presence,
As music grows from words.

A spirit born of silence
And purity and dew
Among Elysian islands
Were not more white of hue.

A spirit born of fire
And holiness and snow
Within the heaven's desire
Were not more pure to know.

He smiled amid them, lifting
White hands of prayer and peace,
And through the moonlight drifting Came words to me like these:

"We are his lilies, lilies!
His praises, aye, we sing!
We are his lilies, lilies!
Behold the word we bring!"

—Madison Cawein in Louisville Courier-Journal.

Easter Flowers.

The roses were the first to hear--
The roses trellised to the tomb.
Bring roses! Had the marks of spear
And cruel nails that sealed his doom.
The lilies were the first to see--
The lilies on that Easter morn.
Bring lilies! Crowned with blossoms be
The head so lately crowned with thorn!

The roses were the first to hear.
Ere yet the dark had dreamed of dawn
The faintest rustle reached their ear.
They heard the napkin downward drawn.

They listened to his breathing low,
His feet upon the threshold fall.
Bring roses--sweetest buds that blow!
His love the perfume of them all!

The lilies were the first to see.
They, watching in the morning gray,
Saw angels come so silently
And roll the mighty stone away.
They saw him pass the portal's gloom.
He brushed their leaves--oh, happy dower!

Bring lilies--purest buds that bloom!
His face reflected in each flower!

The roses were the first to hear,
The lilies were the first to see.
Bring fragrant flowers from far and near

To match the Easter melody!
"Rabboni!" be on every tongue,
And every heart the rapture share
Of Mary as she kneels among
The roses and the lilies fair!
—Clarence Umy in Century Magazine.

The Merry Easter Sun.

The sun was believed to "dance on Easter." In 1708 this bit of doggerel appeared in The British Apollo:

Question: Old wives, Phoebus, say
That on Easter day
To the music of the spheres you do caper.
If the fact, sir, be true,
Pray let's the cause shew
When you've any room in your paper.

Answer: The old wives get merry
With spiced ale and sherry
On Easter, which makes them romance,
And whilst in a rout,
Their brains whirl about,
They fancy I caper and dance.

THE GENERAL'S EASTER DAY.

Easter Sunday in the year of grace 1733 found the little colony of Yamacraw Bluff in a flurry of confusion and tumult.

The outlines of streets and squares, a general storehouse, five or six clapboard cabins, a score of tents, all inclosed by a strong stockade protected by a battery of five cannon pointing down the river--this was Savannah.

A tall, soldierly looking man in the fatigue uniform of a British general was surveying the scene. In the prime of life, with strong, handsome features and a figure suggesting great strength and activity, Oglethorpe would have been a man of mark anywhere, in a royal court or in a pioneer camp.

On this particular morning the general was apparently restless and disturbed in mind. He walked out of the stockade and gazed longingly down the river.

HE WALKED OUT OF THE STOCKADE.

"Acting in anger," he muttered to himself, "and my people are in no mood to wait any longer."

"A glorious Easter, general!" said a voice behind him.

"All nature wears a smile," replied
Oglethorpe, turning to greet Parson Herbert, a little man in black, with a powdered wig, whose silk stockings and silver buckled shoes were models of clerical neatness. "Yes, nature smiles," he continued, "but my people wear frowning faces, and I like it not, this day of all others."

"Good sir, speak them fair," answered the parson; "bear patiently with them.
Remember some of them are of gentle birth, and the hardships they endure ill suit men who have passed their lives in a crowded city. Besides they are affrighted by many things in this strange land--the red man and the wild beasts of the forest, to say nothing of their dread of the bloodthirsty Spaniards in the province below."

"I know--I know," returned the general, "but just now they complain of their food. They like not this meal made from the Indian maize, and game and fish sui-not a Londoner three times a day. Their tastes want Madeira, and their molasses has given out, so that they can brew no beer."

"A grievous famine it is," said Parson Herbert, "but in my Easter talk this morning I hope to persuade these discontented ones that Providence is on our side."

"Zounds!" Oglethorpe exclaimed excitedly. "Will such words satisfy men who clamor for luxuries--such men as Hugh Ellington?"

The little parson's face clouded.

"Good sir, I pray you have patience," he said. "We cannot in this heathen land build a commonwealth or a city in a day.
We must go through years of toil and privation, but if we but show ourselves good men and true, stout and pure of heart, industrious and prayerful, the Lord will help us. Be merciful to Ellington. He fell into wild ways at home and lived with the ungodly. There may be the making of a man in him."

"No!" cried Oglethorpe. "If Master
Ellington denies me and plays the rebel,
he shall be shot."

Parson Herbert drew himself up and showed his displeasure.

"I crave your pardon," said the general a moment later. "The habits of an old soldier cling to him."

Little more was said, and the two walked slowly back to the stockade.

Of the 150 colonists and friendly Indians more than half were at work, although it was Sunday.

Oglethorpe gave Parson Herbert a meaning glance. Pointing to the men at work,
he said:

"That comes within your province, parson."

The clergyman took the hint and hurriedly went the rounds, protesting, pleading and scolding, until in a short time work was suspended, and the colonists collected in little groups to talk over their troubles.

After the Easter service the good clergyman approached General Oglethorpe and spoke with some indignation.

"That misguided young man, Elling-ton," he said, "refused to worship with us. He had a bottle of rum in his tent and openly told several of the churchmen that he was going to enjoy himself, and that he defied the parson and the general."

"Aha, parson!" he replied. "Master
Ellington knows how to stir your blood.
He prefers the bottle to your sermon, does he? He is a wicked fellow, and I must speak to him."

It was some time before the general found Ellington, and when he saw him the graceless scamp was talking to a crowd of idlers in a profane and ribald fashion. He boldly advocated open opposition to their leader, and proposed that a party should go northward and start an independent colony.

"Why stay here?" he said. "Oglethorpe acts like a Puritan. If we get rum, we must smuggle it from Carolina, and now we are without even beer and wine. He will not allow us to have slaves like the Carolinians. Let us go where we can please ourselves."

Just then the general marched up to the group and spoke sternly to the young man.

"Go to your tent," he commanded,
"and stay there until you are sober.
Then, Master Ellington, we must have a talk."

"I am no man's slave," answered Ellington, "and I shall remain here with my friends. If you like not my talk, go elsewhere."

A dead silence fell upon the group.
Oglethorpe's face flushed.

"Scoundrel," he roared, "you shall have your dose of bread and water in the guardhouse!"

The words were hardly spoken before Ellington dashed forward and struck him a heavy blow in the face.

Before the general could draw his sword the men leaped upon the outlaw and bore him to the ground. In spite of his struggles he was dragged off and locked up in the guardhouse.

The colonists were in favor of having Ellington shot, and even Parson Herbert admitted that he deserved such a fate.

But not a word fell from the lips of General Oglethorpe.

It was late that afternoon when Elling-ton, guarded by two soldiers, stood before the general. Parson Herbert and the principal men of the colony were present.

The prisoner looked somewhat shame-faced, but determined.

"SCOUNDREL!" HE ROARED.

"Sit down, Master Ellington," said Oglethorpe. "This is Easter--a day that should bring all Christians together. For some reason you failed in your duty today, and your bottle made you say things that you must regret. But I made a mistake also. I addressed you abusively before your companions, and you struck me.
Perhaps it is my duty to punish you, but on this day, after listening to the lessons drawn by good Parson Herbert from the life of Christ, I feel a pity for all who suffer, and I feel that I can forgive any blow directed against myself. Master Elling-ton, you may strike me, but if you will pledge yourself never to hurt my colonists you may go."

"Go where?" asked the startled prisoner.
"Anywhere--to Carolina if you desire."
"And you forgive my words and the blow?"

"Everything--if I am to follow Christ and found a Christian commonwealth. I have no time to punish my personal enemies. I must live and work for others."

Ellington dashed away the tears streaming from his eyes and seized Oglethorpe's hand.

"The devil was in me," he said. "I expected punishment, but this is more than I can bear. You are the grandest and bravest man I have ever seen. If you will let me stay here and give me a chance, you shall never complain of Hugh Elling-ton again."

"Remember, I trust you," said the general.

The parson wiped his eyes and the others looked very grave.

Ellington went away still weeping.
"We shall see," remarked Oglethorpe to the bystanders.

The next day found Ellington sober, loyal and industrious. He never forgot the lesson of that Easter day. For years he was one of the best men in the colony, and if a Spanish bullet had not cut short his career he might have won fame and fortune.—Atlanta Constitution.

THE OLD EASTER BONNET.

Don't make 'em like they use to—done killed with too much style;
Fixed up with such an ribbons till you'd know 'em had a mile!
They all look mighty fancy in the big store windows hung,
But they're nothin like the bonnets they wore when we was young!

AN EASTER GIRL.

How much completer, neater an sweeter was the old
Time bonnet coverin rosy cheeks an ringlets black an gold!
Plain, with no fixin's on it, with ribbons white an blue,
But a kiss beneath that bonnet was as sweet as honey dew!

Don't make 'em like they used to, yet the girls that wear 'em seem Almost as lovely as the girls that made our boyhood's dream!
But still I sigh to see 'em in the big store windows hung,
For they're nothin like the bonnets that they wore when we was young!

THE OLDBELL RINGER

From the church of a forest village the old belfry arose high and somber, with its steeple pointing toward the sky, and on this Easter night weary steps were heard ascending the winding stairs leading to the platform where the bells were hung. The old bell ringer Mikael was slowly mounting until at length his lantern appeared on high like the pale glimmering of a star. The ascent was painful. The old man's limbs almost refused support, and he scarcely saw his way before him. He was so worn out, old Mikael—so worn out! Ah, it is true, it is surely time, thought he, to depart to the land of rest, but God wills it not thus. How many times had he aroused the night from this belfry with the glad tidings, "Christ is risen!"—how many times? He could not exactly tell, and yet God willed that he was still to ring the bells.

The old man approached the balustrade and leaned pensively thereon. Below, surrounding the church, he vaguely perceived the cemetery of the village bristling with dingy crosses, which, with outstretched arms, had the appearance of mounting guard over the dead slumbering beneath them. Thickets of birch trees, still denuded of their foliage, inclined above the tombs, and as Mikael gazed on the melancholy scene a voice from below suddenly aroused him:

"Mikael! Mikael!"

The voice was feeble and trembling. The aged deacon of the village looked up. He tried to see the platform of the belfry, his hands curved over his winking eyes in order to have a better view. "I am here. What wouldst thou have?" asked the bell ringer, half leaning over the balustrade. "Dost thou not see me?"

"No, I do not see thee. Dost thou not think it is time to ring the bells?"

Mikael looked at the stars. The thousand fires of heaven sparkled in the azure.

"No, not yet. Wait a little while," answered the bell ringer.

He had no need of a watch. The stars would tell him when the hour had come.

The heavens and the earth, the white clouds floating in the azure, the somber forest, and even the little murmuring river running in the shadows, spoke to him in language he understood, for there was a close communion between him and these things. It was not in vain that all his life had centered in this belfry.

Now all the distant past arose before him. He recalled the day when for the first time he mounted on this platform with his father.

And he saw himself a child, with bright eyes, and fair hair floating in the wind. But it seemed to him that wind was not the same as this which raised the blinding dust of the highways. No! it was a breath from on high that only swept the summits. In the vision of his childhood this forest receded to a distance without bounds, while the clearing which inclosed it spread out immeasurably.

"However, it is here before me all entire," said the old man with a smile, in embracing the narrow space with a single glance.

And this truly was his life. As a child he saw no end, and yet from the first day until the last he was held in this narrow space, as in the hollow of the hand. However, the hour had come. Throwing a last look toward the stars, Mikael arose, took off his hat, made the sign of the cross and gathered the ropes in his hands. An instant after the bells began to ring. First one, then a second, a third, a fourth, until repeated strokes followed in quick succession. Then succeeded a flight of sound whose prolonged vibrations filled the night.

Then the bells ceased ringing. Mikael seated himself on his bench, his ears filled with the dying vibrations and his mind absorbed in vague reflections.

The platform was feebly lighted by the vacillating gleams of the lantern. Above his head the bronze still prolonged its tremblings, from the church arose faint chantings, and the evening wind swept the bell ropes to and fro.

The silvery voices of children echoed around the altar, while Mikael, with bowed head, again lost himself in visions of the past.

"Mikael! Ho, Mikael! Art thou sleeping?"

"What!" exclaimed the old man, suddenly starting to his feet. "Is it possible I have been asleep? Never, never have I been so wrong."

And with his accustomed hand Mikael seized the cords. Below a crowd of peasants swarmed like bees in a hive, banners floated in all the splendor of their embroideries of gold, the procession was making the tour of the church, and joyous voices reached the old bell ringer:

"Christ is risen!"

And this acclamation echoed powerfully in the heart of the good man. It seemed to him that the candles burned in the shadows with brighter light, that the banners floated more freely, and that the wind, aroused, carried to the heights and depths in united harmony the chants of the faithful and the songs of the bells.

Never had the old man thus rung out the chimes before. His whole soul seemed to have passed into the bronze as the trembling bells threw to heaven their sounds, sometimes joyous, sometimes weeping.

And the stars seemed more brilliant, and the variations of the bell fell toward the earth in a long caress of love.

The bass ruled all singing in its voice sovereign and profound.

"Christ is risen!"

In clearer notes the two tenors repeated joyously with their metal lips:

"Christ is risen!"

And the two softly sounding bells, like children's voices lost in a concert of manly tones, took up the refrain, proclaiming:

"Christ is risen!"

The wind which swept the brow of the old bell ringer and which filled the belfry tottering to its base repeated in low, whispering sounds:

"Christ is risen!"

Then Mikael forgot his life of sorrow.

He forgot that he was alone in the world, like an old tree shattered by the storms. He heard his bells ringing, weeping, and he believed he was surrounded by his wife and children. He thought the voice of the bells was that of his loved ones, thus forming a heavenly concert which sang of happiness and joy which he had never known.

And with stiffened arms and bending form he drew, drew the cords, the old bell ringer. Tears blinded him and his heart throbbed wildly. The world below listened in wonder to this strange flight of sound, saying, "Never before—no, never, had old Mikael thus rung the bells!" Suddenly the great bell swung with an uncertain jerk and then stilled. The smaller ones threw out confused trills, then stopped, as if listening to the dying plaint of the others trembling in the air.

"Mikael! Ho, Mikael!" again called a voice from below.

But Mikael was sleeping the sleep of death. The old bell ringer will ring the bells no more.—Translated From the Russian by M. M. Hallowell.

Sanctioned by Tradition.

Not long ago in the town of Bedlington, Northumberland, a coal miner was sued for kissing a woman on Easter. He pleaded the old north of England custom of doing such things at Easter time and was immediately released by the conservative justices, who informed the complainant that "if she didna want Georgie's kiss she could ha' gi'en him a siller saxeence."

The decision was printed in the county papers and excited much favorable comment in north Britain.

The Easter Rabbit.

In Germany rabbits enter largely into Easter amusements. Eggs are hidden in nests for children to find, and the deed is attributed to the Easter rabbit.

A Quaint Lenten Rhyme.

"Pase Egg day" is the curious name by which Easter is called in the rhyme which gives the names of the Sundays in Lent:

Tid, Mid and Misera

Carling, Palm, "Pase-Egg day."

The meaning of "Tid," "Mid" and "Misera" is lost; Carling is mid-Lent, sometimes also called "Mothering day."

Easter In Olden Time.

Easter was at one time celebrated by feasts and games held in the churches. These at first were decorous and useful in bringing the congregations together in rejoicing after the severe duties imposed upon them during Lent. The custom was abandoned because of the excesses, which became a scandal to the church.

EASTER IN WARFARE.

ALL OUR WARS WERE BEGUN AT THIS SEASON.

One of the Ironies of History—The Beginning of the Revolution—The War of 1812—The Struggle With Mexico—Hostilities With Spain.

Man is the only animal that wars upon his kind, and this, although often made as a reproach, really indicates the essential difference between man and brute. The physical life which man has in common with the brute he will sacrifice for an idea, whereas the brute simply obeys his individual appetite and fights for its satisfaction. The distinction shows that in his moral and intellectual nature man is of another order of existence than the brute.

Nevertheless it is a strange irony of fate that the day which typifies the resurrection of the Prince of Peace has come at the opening stage of every war in which this country has engaged. Easter Sunday, being the first Sunday after the full moon which happens on or next after March 21, comes at various dates between March 21 and April 25. This Easter period has been an extraordinarily important one in our history.

The first historic Eastertide in the American war record is one identified with the history of Pittsburg. It was in April, 1754, that a French force under Captain Contrecoeur attacked the English and colonial forces who were building a stockade at the river junction and proceeded at once to erect Fort Duquesne. This fort was the center of the military operations of the French in this part of the country, and the war over its possession involved Braddock's defeat in 1755 and Grant's defeat in 1758, until finally in November, 1758, it was captured by General Forbes and converted into Fort Pitt, from which Pittsburg takes its name.

In April, 1775, the difficulties between the American colonies and England reached a crisis. The stage of negotiation was ending and that of hostilities was beginning. A British army held Boston and was preparing to beat Massachusetts into submission. On a fateful morn a detachment of British troops was sent to seize some munitions of war at Concord. They were met by the provincial militia, and at the battle of Lexington, April 19, 1775, the war of the Revolution began. The war lasted until 1782, but no other battle took place during the range of the Easter season.

The war of 1812 was not formally declared until June 19, 1812, but Easter of that year saw the exhaustion of all pacific measures and the definite turn of events toward war with England. The young republic was caught between the upper and the nether millstones in the titanic conflict between England and the Napoleonic empire and from each had received affronts and injuries which justified war with either. The choice was indicated April 4, 1812, when the president signed a bill laying an embargo on English commerce. When war did come, the administration was pushed into it by congress without adequate preparation, and the results were inexpressibly humiliating at first. The honor of the flag was chiefly upheld by the little navy which congress had left barely in existence. August, 1814, a British expedition actually invaded Washington and burned the capitol. The same army was beaten back from Baltimore and its commander killed by the stout defense of the local militia, led by their own authorities, who had the wit to lay out strong earthworks to shelter and encourage their green troops. The bloody repulse of the British at New Orleans was accomplished by similar means.

Easter in 1846 saw the approach of the Mexican war. That war, which began in advance of any formal declaration of war. The annexation of Texas took place March 1, 1845, and General Zachary Taylor, with a small army, was sent to the Rio Grande. Mexico claimed the territory between the Nueces and Rio Grande rivers, and a collision between the opposing forces took place in April. The battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma followed early in May.

The firing on Fort Sumter, the opening of the civil war, took place April 12, 1861, and the surrender of the fort to the Confederates took place the next day. In April, 1862, the battle of Pittsburg Landing was fought and Island No. 10 surrendered to General Pope. With this exception none of the important engagements of the war took place in the Easter season until the close, and then they crowded thickly. The battle of Five Forks was fought March 31 to April 1, 1865. The next day Petersburg was carried by assault, and the surrender of Lee at Appomattox Court House on April 9, 1865.

Although in our late unpleasantness with Spain the formal declaration of war was not made until April, 1898, the blowing up of the Maine in February may be regarded as the beginning of hostilities. At Easter time of last year it was pretty generally known that our country was on the eve of war, and once more an old irony of American history repeated itself.

Our Easter wars have been commemorated in this spirited sonnet, contributed to the New York Sun by Grace Ellis Taft:

The month of dim beginnings, freedom owes
All peace to thee, all joy of shackles cast
And triple strength of victory amassed
Through long, slow years of strife to sure repose!

Rise, dew sweet days, that bathed old Fort Daquesne

In liquid light; that showered on Lexington
Auroral rays o'er martyred slain; that shone
Where Sumter's walls death thunders hurled
In vain!

But if the Easter season has been prominent in our history as a prelude to war it is also distinguished for an illustrious triumph of peaceful methods in the settlement of international differences. The treaty of Washington, which submitted to arbitration the claims of this country against Great Britain for allowing Confederate cruisers to be sent out of her ports to prey upon our commerce, was concluded during the Easter season of 1871. Its final ratification took place May 8, 1871.—New York Telegram.

EASTER EGG ROLLING.

A Unique Custom Among the Children of the National Capital.

Easter Monday is always a gala day at the national capital for children and for their fathers, mothers and grandmothers, to say nothing of their sisters and their cousins and their aunts. The unique custom of egg rolling always turns Easter Monday in Washington into the prettiest and most jubilant children's holiday in all the year.

This egg rolling on Easter Monday is one of the very quaint customs of the world. There is no other capital that knows it, and it is a privilege and a feast given to children that are unique in movement, motive and power. It not only includes the great army of children in Washington, but their mothers, grandparents and uncles. It is a holiday all over and for every one, and that American who has not seen a presidential egg rolling must count himself as having missed one of America's great holidays.

There was a time a few years back when the egg rolling festival was divided half and half between the White House grounds and capitol grounds. Nobody knows or perhaps cares to say egg rolling in the White House grounds, why the day has vanished from the capitol grounds and gone entirely to the White House grounds. But small boys have intimated that they feel more at home where the president "keeps his eye on the police." So it is that on Easter Monday all children in Washington take possession of the president's "back yard," as one youngster called the White House grounds, and assert ownership with a refreshing disregard of authority.

The gardeners say their efforts must be given to gathering the shells over a good many acres of ground after one of these festivals. Besides gathering eggshells, they gather almost everything else in the line of broken lunch boxes, broken lunches, and paper almost by the ton. Every blade of grass must be raked, and a lot of grass must be made to grow again. In other words, the gardeners declare the work of months is undone by the pleasure of a day. It may be said with certainty that the White House gardeners are the only people in Washington who are not happy on Easter Monday. They even hope the day will come when the "egg rolling business" will have no place in the White House grounds. But the president who would risk his popularity by such a decree must needs be a man who would care more for his gardeners and grounds than for children and their good fellowship.

Easter Monday is the one day in the year when children of all classes, conditions and colors are on a social level within the grounds. The ragged black boy "picks eggs" with the millionaire's son, and little girls who never by any chance meet elsewhere or at another time "skip the rope" and play as equals. For this one day they are all members of the Four Hundred. It is a long day, beginning with some of them at 7 o'clock in the morning and ending at 6 in the evening. The gates are not opened until 8 o'clock, but the children go an hour ahead of time and keep the watchmen busy answering questions about the president. They feel that the president has a personal interest in every one of them, and they return the compliment.—New York Tribune.

The "Easter parade" before and after church service on Easter day is not so modern as many persons believe. It is interesting to note the existence of a popular superstition in east Yorkshire, England, to the effect that it is very unlucky not to wear new garments on that day. In that district, it is believed, rooks will ruin your other clothing if you fail to wear some new thing.

EASTER MORNING.

There is only one subject for Easter. Upon this morning when the grave was broken and Jesus Christ arose, His resurrection with all that it means for us must claim our thoughts. I think that many men who could not help hesitating if you asked them whether they really believed in the historical fact of Christ's arising from the dead, and men whose whole habit of thought is material, bound up with forces that the eye and hand can measure, still feel a certain sense of exaltation, the leaping of some unknown spiritual possibility when Easter morning opens on the earth. It is something that mortal men have been able even to imagine an immortality, and to find pleasure in telling one another that one at least of all the billions who have died and been buried has broken through the tomb and lived upon the earth again. I am sure that many men, blindly believing, who could tell little of what the Resurrection really means, have yet got a the heart of its meaning in a sense of freedom and openness, of the largeness of life and the liveness of God, which they have not felt, perhaps since last Easter day. Easter is remarkable for this, that it seems to take the most stupendous thoughts and through the familiar personality of Jesus bring them to men's apprehension and affection. "Christ is arisen!" "Christ is arisen!" Men say to one another. "Arisen!" Do we know what that means? The one invincible power of the world conquered! The one inevitable fate of man avoided! Death tasted and then laid aside like a cup that the lips would not drink! The most inexorable of natural laws, as we call them, broken through! Life and divinity claiming their pre-eminence! These are stupendous thoughts. And yet our souls are holding them today. The very children have taken these stupendous thoughts into their simple minds. They have been made real to us through the personal experiences of Christ whom we love, and they have been translated by our own instincts and the prophecies of our own needs. It is to those who have gone up the path to the empty tomb full of love for Jesus that the great truth of His resurrection has been shown, and their own truest longings have been made clear. Just as these flowers have taken the infinite and mysterious forces of nature, and put them into these clear shapes of visible beauty, so Easter, the flower of the year, takes the immeasurable truths of life and immortality, and holds them to us in a beauty that we all can see and love.—Phillips Brooks.

BISHOP WILSON.

Bishop Alpheus W. Wilson, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has returned to his home, 2408 Madison avenue, after an absence of about nine months spent in visiting the mission stations of the Church in Japan, Corea, and China. Bishop Wilson is enjoying ruddy health. He will be busy for the next three weeks with his correspondence, which has accumulated during his absence, and will then go to Nashville, Tenn., to attend the annual meeting of the board of Foreign missions and of the College of Bishops.

Bishop Wilson spoke hopefully of the outlook in the mission fields which he visited, and he particularly noted the change in the attitude of the people toward America. The change is largely due to the achievement of the American fleet under Admiral Dewey, which has given the people of the far East a different impression of the people on this side of the Pacific.

Bishop Wilson has been four times over the mission fields of China and Japan, and once in Corea. Altogether he has traveled something like 100,000 miles and has visited every mission in those countries.—Baltimore Sun.

HISTORY OF THE LILY

OUR POPULAR EASTER FLOWER FIRST
FOUND IN CHINA.

How It Was Transplanted to Japan.
Taken to Bermuda by an American.
At One Time an Edible Bulb—An Important Business.

To trace the history of the beautiful flower commonly known as the Bermuda Easter lily one must go back many, many years, even before the birth of Christ, and into the faraway land of China. The Emperor Chow, who reigned over the Flowery Kingdom 1,000 years before the birth of Christ, was a cruel ruler. Even the courtiers and members of his personal household stood in awe of him, for they knew not at what moment he might order their banishment or death because of some trivial or fancied offense.

The state of the empire under Chow rapidly grew worse, and one day at the close of a long session, at which many of the courtiers had offered wise plans for improvement, Minister Li signified that he would speak with the emperor alone. When the two had retired to an apartment where none but the slaves of the household were in attendance, Li Chung, with great solemnity, portrayed in most elaborate detail the purport of a message he had received from the gods, in which a great sacrifice of men and women and beasts and fruits was demanded, and in return was promised the prosperity of the whole nation. This sacrifice and feast, according to the message, were to take place upon an island in the sea many miles away, where the gods made their chief abiding place. Emperor Chow was overjoyed at this unexpected promise of prosperity.

Great proclamations were issued, and after months of labor the finest ship in the royal fleet was made ready for sea, with Prime Minister Li Chung as commander. With great care he had chosen 100 of the strongest young men and most beautiful of young women and beasts and fowls of the finest breed, and for the feasts there were stored away all the delicacies the land afforded. Among these was the delicious lily bulb bak-hap, which, translated, means "the lily of a hundred fields," so named because of its peculiar formation. Prepared in many ways, it became a sweet and dainty morsel, and it occupied an important place among the dishes that were to comprise the feast for the gods.

Months rolled away. The time for the return of the ship came and passed, but no tidings were received. Finally two men who had shipped as sailors in the imperial vessel came to port in a strange craft of their own fashioning. They made their way to the emperor and told him a sad story of the wreck of the sacrifice ship and presented themselves as the only survivors. That was the last Emperor Chow ever heard of his Prime Minister Li Chung.

But it was not death that prevented the return of Li Chung and the great ship. It was the success of his well laid plan. He had learned much of this beautiful island in the sea, and when the second night of the voyage had passed he called around him the youths and maidens to the selection of whom he had devoted so much personal care and poured into their delighted ears the knowledge that instead of being offered in sacrifice they were to inhabit and populate this beautiful island and live, as his subjects, lives of peace, happiness and industry. Thus Japan was peopled.

By reason of the change of soil the bak-hap gradually assumed greater height and strength above the grounds, presenting at the same time larger blossoms and more luxuriant foliage. As it improved in beauty it became less useful as an article of food, and as the people by reason of their peaceful lives had developed strong tastes for refinement and art they were quite happy to deny themselves this delicacy that they might produce something pleasing to the senses. Hundreds of years rolled away, the little island became a land of sunshine and flowers, and the arts of floriculture and landscape building were practiced and enjoyed by all. The bak-hap, the lily, steadily grew in beauty, and occasionally it was exported in bulb shape to European and American cities as the Lilium longiflorum.

It remained for an American named Harris to discover the beauty of this flower from our point of view, and after making a study of its development and growth he introduced it in Bermuda in 1878. Immediately it received the name Lilium harrisii, which it retains to this day. Its common names are the trumpet lily, Bermuda lily and Easter lily.

Because of the fact that Bermuda supplies the leading cities on both continents with the Easter lily bulbs, there is a popular impression that the lily is a native of this island, but old growers there have no difficulty in disproving this, and in proving the history as given above. Some floriculturists have tried to show that it was a sprout from the Japanese longiflorum, but in the end the majority have agreed that the years of careful cultivation in the peculiarly rich Bermuda soil have so changed its value as to give it the wonderful free flowering qualities it possesses. Scientific students and importers of the bulb see no difference excepting that the later day bulb may be "forced" more readily than the longiflorum, which is still produced in Japan, and that the flowers are wider and more robust.

The lily farmer in Bermuda devotes his attention exclusively to the cultivation of the bulb for purposes of export. The industry has grown steadily since the introduction of the flower, some 3,000,000 bulbs being exported each year. Of these about 250,000 were forwarded to Europe, the majority to London and the remainder to leading cities in Germany and France. Because of the duty recently placed on bulbs, those intended for European markets are shipped via Halifax, where, heretofore, they passed through New York.—New York Herald.

IMPORTED EASTER LILIES.

A Thriving Business Between Bermuda and Our Markets.

A feature that gives promise of becoming a very important factor of the Easter market is the importation of the lily blossoms direct from Bermuda. They were first brought here about 12 years ago, but no attention was paid to this business until four years ago, when about 750 boxes, containing 70 buds each, were imported. The quantity increased year by year, until last Easter it reached 3,562 boxes.

The lilies are imported in the form of buds, which are cut, with about one foot of the stalk, before they have developed. Each stalk will have from two to three buds. After they have been carefully wrapped in tissue paper they are packed in small boxes, provided with layers of wet moss, live plant or fern, to prevent crushing and to maintain a certain moisture. The cutting and packing are done the day before the steamer leaves Bermuda for New York, so that the buds may not remain in the boxes longer than necessary, and the packers usually work all night at this task. The work is so timed that the steamer usually arrives in New York the Monday or Tuesday before Easter Sunday. The growers pack from 70 to 80 buds in each box and guarantee 60.

Upon the arrival of the steamer in New York the brokers, who for months previous have been obtaining orders, ship the boxes immediately to the purchasers for $2.70 per box, the majority of the buyers com-

THE JUNIOR RECORDER.

RICHMOND AND BLACKSTONE, VA., MARCH 30, 1899.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON II, SECOND QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, APRIL 9.

Text of the Lesson. John xii. 1-11.
Memory Verses. 1-3—Golden Text,
Mark xiv. 8—Commentary Prepared
by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

1. "Then Jesus, six days before the Passover, came to Bethany, where Lazarus was which had been dead, whom He raised from the dead." The sisters had been caused to forget their misery and to remember it as waters that pass away. Their sorrow had been turned into joy (Job xi, 16; John xvi, 20). Resurrection will heal every sorrow for the believer and bring us body and soul to be forever with the Lord (I Thess. iv, 16, 17), and we shall then see in that sense all present afflictions are light and but for a moment, and how they have all been working out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory (II Cor. iv, 17, 18). All the Bible records of the sorrows of the saints have been written for our instruction that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope (Rom. xv, 4).

2. "There they made Him a supper, and Martha served, but Lazarus was one of them that sat at the table with Him." We have no record of a single utterance from Lazarus after he returned from the joys of the spirit world to live again on this earth. Perhaps his testimony would be the same as that of Paul, that it was impossible for him to utter what he heard (II Cor. xii, 4). His life was now that of one really risen from the dead, and it bore fruit to the glory of God, as we shall see, even though there is no record of any testimony from him. Martha is still serving as in Luke x, 40, but she is no longer cumbered. It is our privilege to serve restfully.

3. "Then took Mary a pound of ointment of spikenard, very costly, and anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped His feet with her hair, and the house was filled with the odor of the ointment." Thus she truly worshiped Him; she poured upon Him that which had cost her a great deal; she gave unto Him that which naturally she would have used upon herself. One has said that in the three we have a full Christian life—in Lazarus a risen life, in Mary true worship, in Martha service without being cumbered. We must not confound this anointing with that in the house of Simon the Pharisee (Luke vii, 37, 38), as the incidents and the people were altogether different. That was by a woman whose name we know not. We have no right to suppose that she was Mary of Magdala. In our worship may we have the spirit of Mary of Bethany and of David, who said that he would not offer to the Lord that which cost him nothing (II Sam. xxiv, 24).

4, 5. "Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred pence and given to the poor?" Thus said Judas Iscariot, but the other disciples also had indignation and said, "To what purpose is this waste?" (Math. xxvi, 8.) When we worship Him and give Him our best, we may expect that some will find fault. They always have and always will. Men may misjudge thy aim, think they have cause for blame, say thou art wrong. Hold on thy quiet way. Heed not what men may say; Christ is the judge, not they. Fear not; be strong. A sincere desire to please Him will always find acceptance in His sight, even though the effort may be poor.

6. "This he said not that he cared for the poor, but because he was a thief, and had the bag and bore what was put in." This is most remarkable. It is true that Jesus knew that Judas was an evil one and a thief (John vi, 70), yet He suffered him to be there, and put up with him so long. He was suffering patience, not humanity, to be evil! And then to think that it was because He could allow Judas to live! It is too much for us! How could He do this? He has in all things left us an example that we should follow His steps, when He was reviled reviled not again, when He suffered He threatened not (I Pet. ii, 21-23). When we have to do with wicked people, let us consider that He endured such contradiction of sinners against Himself, lest we be weary (Heb. xii, 3).

7. "Then said Jesus, Let her alone; against the day of my burial she hath kept this." He also said, "She hath wrought a good work on me; she did it for My burial" (Math. xxi, 10, 12). "She hath done what she could, she is come aforehand to anoint My body to the burying" (Mark xiv, 8). The women who bought spices after He died and came to the sepulcher on the morning of the third day to anoint His dead body did not find a dead body to anoint, but found a risen Christ to greet them. They manifested love, but not faith. Many manifested the faith which worketh by love.

8. "For the poor always ye have with you, but He ye have not always." Mark says that He added in connection with the poor, "And whenever ye will ye may do them good" (Mark xiv, 7). The law said, "The poor shall never cease out of the land" (Deut. xvi, 11), and concerning Israel in her time of suffering for her sins the Lord said, "I will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord" (Isa. lvi, 12). Such are spoken of in Jas. i, 5, as "the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the Kingdom which he hath promised to them that love Him." What an honor to be permitted to do anything personally for our Lord, and He said that what Mary did would be spoken of in all the world for a memorial of her (Mark xiv, 9).

9. "They came not for Jesus' sake only." This is written of the Jews who came to see Lazarus, whom Jesus had raised from the dead. Does not the expression describe many who attend public worship and possibly some who preach and teach and sing or work in works that are good? Let us always apply it first to ourselves—Am I doing everything for Jesus' sake only?

10. "But the chief priests consulted that they might put Lazarus also to death." The rich man in Luke xvi who finds himself in a place of torment is heard saying that if only one from the dead will go to his brothers who are still on the earth they will believe, but he is told that if they will not hear Moses and the prophets neither will they believe though one rose from the dead.

11. "Because that by reason of him many of the Jews went away and believed on Jesus." If people could see in Christians the reality of a Christlike life, while many would be provoked to hate such a life, yet there might be many more believing on Him. There are four gospels in the Bible which are not much read, but there is a fifth gospel which is being constantly read, and that is the gospel according to you.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning April 9, "Holy Garments"—Text, Eph. iv, 20-24; Rom. vi, 4.

"Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts thereof."

The epistle to the Romans gives a graphic picture of the vileness into which all flesh a society had sunk in the absence of the Holy Spirit. The chief thought was to gratify the bodily appetites and passions. All sense of shame seemed lost. The very gods worshiped were personifications of lust. Enamets and rambles and night orgies were the common indulgence. That Paul does not exasperate the prevalent iniquity of the times is shown from the Latin poets and historians of the time. They paint the scene in darker colors, if that be possible, than those of the apostle. "Oro Vadis" has recently placed clearly before the multitude the abominations heretofore covered under a foreign language.

Against all this moral barbarism and shameful practice, the Gospel of Christ lifts a clear voiced protest and trumpet call to cleanness of life and soul.

The reference is made to actors who clothe themselves in garments like those of the persons they represent. Tones, walk, actions, are all in imitation of the character assumed. These Christians, all followers of Jesus Christ, have been called from the reviling and excesses of the world lying in the darknesses of moral night and rounded to the coming of the pure light of God's day of holiness. They are to lay aside all former practices and robe themselves in the character of Christ, the pure one. They are to think as He does, talk as He talks, act as He commands. They are to assume His character, not as mere stage players, but, in a real fact, putting on His garments, are to become like Him. The old life has passed; all is new. Each one is to put on the armor and garments of the Lord of the day.

This exhortation is particularly needed at the present time. Wealth has increased fabulously during the past few years. Luxuries possible only to the rich a short time since are within reach of the common people now. Old ideas have given place to new. Former customs are replaced by new practices. The danger is that in the bettering of the material conditions and in the increase of intelligence all the old notions of purity and frugality and substantial morality shall suffer. Lust is as deadly now as ever. The temptation to gratify bodily appetites and starve the religious cravings of the soul is strong upon our young people. The choice must still be made—Christ or the world. Put on the holy garments and let the Holy Spirit cleanse the heart from all lust for evil things.

BIBLE TRUTHS FOR BUSY FOLK.

"It is only a little ray of God's light that our poor, weak eyes are ever able to bear."

THE Woman Who Worries sent for Uncle Bez, the other day, and told that she was in great trouble. "There are so many things," she said, "that I do not understand. It isn't that I haven't faith, but I don't see why things can't be made a great deal plainer than they are. It would be just as easy, it seems to me, to speak right out about things, instead of beating about the bush, so. Of course, I'm not finding fault, Uncle Bez, but I'm willing to confess that things do worry me some. Now, about our friends in heaven; do you think the Bible teaches us that we will know them over there? And about our friends who don't go to heaven, will we know about them? And heaven, and hell, what are they like? They don't let the preachers preach about fire and brimstone any more, but don't you think if they could tell us just what heaven is like, and just how bad hell is, their preaching would be more forceful? I wonder why the Bible doesn't make things plainer?"

The Woman Who Worries sighed, but Uncle Bez only smiled a little.

"And that is what's worrying you, today," he said. "Why, my dear woman, don't you know that the Bible tells us a great deal more than we will ever comprehend or understand? We can't know, we can't understand. Your son, Will, is in college, isn't he? Well, he studies trigonometry, I suppose. Now, you might take up his book and read it for a week, without understanding a single thing in it, because you have never studied geometry and algebra. Those steps come first. You might take up his French book and spell out all the words in it, and still be none the wiser, because you had not studied the French grammar and the French dictionary. We must crawl before we can walk. We can't take the last step in a journey, until we have first taken all the others that come before it. Well, you and I have only begun to crawl in God's school; we're in the primer class yet, while we're on earth, and until our souls are more developed—until we have grown in grace—until we have, indeed, become new creatures, we cannot comprehend all that God tells us in his revelations of Himself.

"Do you remember when the three disciples saw Jesus transfigured upon the mountain before them? 'They wist not what to say.' 'They fell on their faces and were sore afraid.'"

"Do you remember when God spoke to Moses on Mt. Sinai? The people said, 'Let not God speak with us, lest we die?'"

"Are we so much stronger and wiser than the disciples of Jesus, or the people of Israel, who had Moses for their guide and instructor? Mortal man cannot stand before the glories of the heavens; mortal mind cannot comprehend their mysteries. It isn't because God has made them secret, or tried to hide them from us. It is because our minds are not great enough to grasp them.

"You know poor Tom Watkins was born blind? Do you think you could explain to him what you mean by 'seeing,' or what 'light' means? He cannot have any idea of it at all. Do you suppose that the child born deaf and dumb ever gets any idea of what 'sound' is? No explanation is going to explain it to him. All the books in the world wouldn't give him an idea of what sound is like.

"Well, we people on earth are spiritually blind, and deaf, and dumb. The Great Physician comes and begins the cure, but it is only a little ray of God's light that our poor, weak eyes are ever able to bear, only the faintest whisper of God's voice that we are ever able to hear. And our duty is not to murmur because we cannot hear and see more, but to try to comprehend what we do see and hear. You remember that the disciples, upon coming down from the Mount of Transfiguration, did not understand what Jesus said to them, and often we fail to understand what is told us plainly, but instead of trying to get the most from what we have, we spend our time in vain questionings about very immaterial things.

"I have known men and women to worry days and nights for fear they wouldn't be able to recognize their friends in heaven, when they didn't even recognize on the streets of their town their brothers and neighbors who happened not to belong to their set.

"I have known men and women to worry days and nights over whether they would be compelled to know that some of their friends were lost forever, when they didn't turn their hands over to save them while they were on earth.

"I have known men to spend years in figuring out by the Bible, exactly when the end of the world is coming, and they could quote Scripture by the yard to prove it, and yet they seemed to find nothing in it all to make them live a better life while yet on the earth.

"No, my dear sister, the Bible wasn't given us to satisfy curiosity. And God doesn't give you the plans and specifications of the mansion he is preparing for you. You've got to take God on faith, and remember that while we're in the primer class we can't expect to know the depths and heights of God's wisdom. And we never will know until we are graduated into that other and better school.

"So, if I were you, I wouldn't worry so much about those things. I would read my Bible a little more diligently and take its promises in God's way—with faith believing."

CHURCHES.

AN ACROSTIC BY STEPHEN F. READ.

Churches are the home of God, they say,
This ministers, the preachers that we pay;
Unchristian deeds are done within this home

So weak their holiness and wealth so strong.

LIFE IN LITTLE NUTSHELLS.

By CHARLES FREDERIC GOSS.

Crash!

Down the sooty throat of the great old chimney fell three little swallows—one of them as dead as a door nail, and the other two clinging to some twigs with their little claws, and chattering for all they were worth, with what little life there was left in them.

The old farmer picked them up with a callous air, took them out of doors and laid them on the grass.

"You are not going to leave them there for the cats to eat?" cried Madge, the "summer girl" rushing frantically after him.

"Sure! it's the easiest way to 'get shet' of them," answered "Uncle Bill."

"Heathen!" she muttered under her breath; picked up the two shivering, half-starved, helpless things and fled away to the kitchen.

In another minute she was brooding them in her beautiful hands, and trying her best to poke bread crumbs down their throats.

But what do you think? These hungry little creatures who would have opened their bills almost to their tails, if their mother had hovered above them with a maggot, shut them up as tight as a steel trap when Madge attempted to feed them!

She pried them open with knife blade and toothpicks, cramming them with cookie crumbs and shreds of meat, nursed them, petted them—and in the morning they were dead!

Madge (God bless her) sat down on the door step with the basket in her lap. The dead swallows in a basket, and a tiny, hemstitched handkerchief to her beautiful great, brown eyes.

As for old Uncle Bill—he stood by her side with his hands in his pocket, a corn cob pipe in his mouth and to his honor be it said, a great tear rolling down his sun-burned and astonished cheek—a cheek which had not felt a tear for a quarter of a century.

"Child," said he kindly, "you have done your best. Angels couldn't do more."

Sob-sob.

"It is hard to make birds sing when they won't sing—or eat, when they won't open their mouths!"

Sob--sob.

"I have seen so many such failures, that I have grown a little hardened."

Sob--sob.

"You can observe the same thing any Sunday in a meeting house. It is easy enough for a preacher to feed his people when they open their mouths: but when they shut them up and set their jaws and say with every feature of their faces—

We will not eat," there is mighty little use fooling with them."

Sob--sob.

"When I was a boy (hesitatingly) my good old father tried to feed me with crumbs of Divine wisdom; but I set my teeth and—and—well—there is no use telling you the rest of the story. And I had a boy of my own—bright, beautiful, full of promise, but headstrong; and when I tried to save him from what I had been through, he set his teeth the same way I had done, and—and—well, there is no use telling you that story, either.

"But the fact of the matter is, little girl, I have grown hard hearted. I have fallen into the habit of saying about everything that won't eat, 'let it starve!'

"And that was why I put those swallows out under the tree.

"But somehow or other your little act of kindness, your simple faith, your genuine pity, has broken the old man all up, and I have been wishing that—that I had another chance to try and save that boy."

Just at that moment a footstep was heard upon the gravel walk. Something about it made the old man turn pale.

The latch of the kitchen door was lifted—a young fellow crossed the floor and threw his arms about the old man's neck.

"Good God!" cried the old man.

MADGE SAT DOWN ON THE DOOR STEP WITH THE BASKET IN HER LAP.

movement in the dark continent was David Livingstone, the great missionary. At the present time, when our own church is taking such interest in Africa and while Bishop Hartzell is meeting such encouragement in his plans for our missions there, the League should devote special attention to a study of the situation and the past history of the land. Material is abundant, and several evenings can be spent with most fascinating interest in the discussion of the opening of this old land, where King Solomon's sailors came in ages past for gold.

Easter Music.

Carols for Christmas, but anthems for Easter—both equally joyous and sacred, but the latter deeper, more solemn and infinitely full of glory, possible only when the Babe of Bethlehem has become the Jesus of Nazareth, the Man of Sorrows, Son of Man and Son of God, Saviour of Men!

Rest.

O Christ, who givest rest, we come to Thee!
Thy voice calls sweetly o'er life's fretful sea,
And we are weary
With our journey dreary,
And Thou art waiting our sweet rest to be.

It is the rest of meekness and content,
Duty and discipline are heaven sent,
So sad souls, weary
With life's duties dreary,
Take from God's hand what He in love hath lent.

It is the rest that maketh burdens light,
Which takes the irk from care, from frost the blight,
And to souls weary,
With their weeping dreary,
It giveth joy songs in the darkest night.

O Christ, give Thou to us Thine own sweet rest!
Of all Thy precious gifts it is the best,
Then souls are weary,
With their labours dreary,
Shall take heart and renew their heavenly quest.

A DOCTOR ON ALCOHOL

Opposed to the Use of Whisky as Medicine.

For many years I have had little sympathy with the use of alcohol, says John R. Boynton, M. D., in The Union Signal. Sometimes I get into what doctors might call a "sweatbox." People will call in a doctor, and after awhile, not being satisfied with the progress, they will say, "Can't you give a stimulant, doctor?" and often will insist upon it. It puts a doctor in a pretty tight place, but when a man predicates his theories upon science he can afford to resist the appeal.

"I remember such men as Sir Isaac Newton and John Locke, who were radical temperance advocates. They were considered fanatics, but the influence of their lives has pushed its way into the ranks of thinking people and from them has come what you and I see to-day.

"I am connected with a little college in Chicago. When I went there, there were several men of the faculty who would occasionally use liquor. When they invited me to drink with them, I replied that if they did not give up the custom of going out to take an occasional drink I would leave the faculty. We have persuaded and cut down and weeded out until today there is not a man on our faculty who will prescribe liquor or use it in any form whatever. We tell our students that when they go out to fight and contest and wrestle with disease they must take with them remedies which do not contain alcohol, such remedies as shall build up the system rather than waste its tissues.

"I remember once 24 years ago when I called on a clergyman in a southern city. He had the servant bring a large decanter, a couple of glasses and some cigars. When I declined to partake, he asked if I did not drink. I told him 'No.'

"Today you will see buffets and dining rooms that would blush at the presence of liquor. The best and most highly educated people of today would no more have a decanter of wine in their house than a mad dog. The gentlemen before named would not compromise to the least extent. They would not use a particle of liquor. They said, if much is poison, little is poison, and it does not do to trifle with poisoned matter.

FRANKLIN ON BEER.

He Looked on Alcohol Drinking as a Vile and Senseless Habit.

Of ever memorable value is the anecdote which Franklin tells of his practice and experience in a London printing office.

"I drank only water," says he. "The other workmen, nearly 50 in number, were great drinkers of beer. On one occasion I carried up and down stairs a large form of types in each hand when others carried one in both hands. They wondered to see that the 'Water American,' as they called me, was stronger than themselves who drank strong beer.

"We had an alehouse boy, who always attended in the house to supply the workmen. My companion at the press drank every day a pint before breakfast, a pint at breakfast with his bread and cheese, a pint between breakfast and dinner, a pint at dinner, a pint in the afternoon about 6 o'clock and another pint when he had done with his day's work.

"I thought it a detestable custom, but he supposed it was necessary to drink strong beer that he might be strong to labor. I endeavored to convince him that the bodily strength afforded by beer could only be in proportion to the grain or flour of the barley dissolved in the water of which it was made; that there was more flour in a pennyworth of bread, and, therefore, if he could eat that with a pint of water, it would give him more strength than a pint of beer. He drank on, however, and had four or five shillings to pay out of his wages every Saturday night for that vile liquor, an expense I was free from. And thus these poor devils kept themselves always under."—Selected.

Belgium's Curse of Drink.

Belgium has a population of less than 7,000,000, which it takes 198,000 wine and beer shops to supply. This is one for every 39 persons, women and children included. Its annual drink bill is figured at $100,000,000, the item of gin representing one-third of this sum. Investigation shows that of the convictions in criminal courts 74 per cent of the crime is to be traced to drink, of the suicides 80 per cent, and of the paupers 79 per cent are thus accounted for. Under these circumstances thoughtful and serious Belgians are deeply pondering the drink problem and endeavoring to find some means of limiting the practice and diminishing its destructive effects. M. Jules le Jeune, ex-minister of justice, is authority for the statistics given, and so far nobody in Belgium or elsewhere has tried to impugn them.

Alcohol and Longevity.

Life is considerably shortened by the use of alcohol in large quantities. But a moderate consumption of the same also shortens life by an average of five to six years. This is consistently and unequivocally seen in the statistics kept for 30 years by English insurance companies, with special sections for abstainers. They give a large discount and still make more profit, as not nearly so many deaths occur as might be expected under the usual calculations. According to federal statistics in the 15 largest towns of Switzerland over 10 per cent of the men over 20 years of age die solely or partly of alcoholism.—Dr. A. Forel, Late Professor of Psychiatry in University of Zurich.

Drinkers and Abstainers.

Between the ages of 20 and 30, where 10 total abstainers die, 31 moderate drinkers die. Between the ages of 30 and 40, where 10 total abstainers die, 40 moderate drinkers die.

prising societies and churches, who use them for decorative purposes. Printed directions accompany each box, giving full information concerning the care and development of the bud, so that it may become a perfect blossom on Easter Sunday. The remarkably low price brings the Easter lily within the reach of the poorest parish. With the millions of flowers that bloom in Bermuda little or no value is placed on the bud, and, in spite of the low figure, the importer makes a fair profit out of the investment. Many boxes of lilies are also shipped direct from Bermuda by growers to the homes of tourists who left an order during a visit to the island. A conservative estimate is that 6,000 boxes will be imported for this Easter tide.—New York Herald.

DR. TALMAGE ON EASTER.

Timely Thoughts on the Significance of Flowers.

Fourteen times in the Bible is the lily mentioned; only twice the rose. Caesar had his throne on the hills. The lily had her throne in the valley. In the greatest sermon that was ever preached there was only one flower, and that a lily. The Bedford dreamer, John Bunyan, entered the house of the Interpreter and was shown a cluster of flowers, and was told to "consider the lilies." I take the lily as typical of all flowers, and Easter garlanded with all the opulence of floral beauty seems to address us, saying, "Consider the lilies, consider the azaleas, consider the fuchsias, consider the oleanders."

The flowers are the angels of the grass. Martin Luther always had a flower on his desk for inspiration. Through the cracks of the prison floor a flower grew up to cheer Picciola. Mungo Park, the great traveler and explorer, sank down in the desert to die; but, seeing a flower near by, he got up with new courage and traveled on to safety.

What are flowers good for? They are good for the bridal day. So much of the pathway of life is covered up with thorns, we ought to cover the beginning with orange blossoms.

They are good to honor and comfort the obsequies. The worst gash ever made into the side of the earth is the gash of the grave. There needs something to cover it up—flowers for the casket, for the hearse, for the cemetery.

What are flowers good for? For religious symbolism. The Bible is an arbor-eta, a divine conservatory. To illustrate the brevity of the brightest human life you will quote from Job, "A man cometh forth as a flower and is cut down."

Flowers have no grander use than when on Easter morning we celebrate the reanimation of Christ from the catacombs. And so I twist all the festal flowers of all the churches of America with all the festal flowers of chapels and cathedrals of all Christendom into one great chain, and with that chain I bind the Easter mornings of our lives with the closing Easter of the world's history—of the resurrection!—New York Journal.

The Beauty of Giving.

As an Easter gift the 4-year-old youngster presented his grandmother with a pretty workbasket which was full of bonbons. He assisted her in admiring the gift and then grew suddenly pensive. The strain became too much for him finally, and he murmured timidly, "Gan'ma, ain't you doin to give the 'tittle boy de candy outen it?"

Early Christians' Easter.

Easter as at first observed by the early Christians was a thanksgiving lasting eight days. This was at first reduced to three days, afterward to two and finally to the single day, Easter Sunday.

OLD EASTER CUSTOMS

MANY QUAIN T TRADITIONS THAT HAVE NOW PASSED AWAY.

Hot Cross Buns—The Derivation of the Word Easter—Removing Shoe Buckles—Heaving For a Forfeit. The Ancient Game of Stool Ball.

On Easter mornings of long ago, as the people went forth into the warm spring air and the bright sunlight, they greeted one another with a glad kiss and a joyous "Christ is risen!" and were answered, "Christ is risen indeed!"

But this custom, with most of the customs of ancient Easter days, has sunk into disuse. Today the anniversary of the resurrection of the Christ, beyond a few floral decorations and church services, is not considered a time of unusual joy.

During the Lenten season the people fasted according to their consciences, wills and the dictates of their church. On Good Friday morning the people were awakened by the cries of the bakers passing through the streets:

One a penny buns,
Two a penny buns,
One a penny, two a penny,
Hot cross buns!

These little cakes were marked on the top with a cross and were eaten plentifully on Good Friday. Some say that those who ate the greatest number of them were considered the most devout.

On Easter eve the lights and fires in the churches were wont to be extinguished and kindled anew, and for a time the "howling over the paschal" was considered an important ceremony in the Catholic proceedings.

In the early days it was a popular custom to rise early and go into the fields to see the sun dance, as it was a superstition that the sun played more on Easter morning at its rising than on any other day.

The custom of distributing the "pace" or "pashe egg" is observed by children and by the peasantry of Lancashire, England, to this day. This custom can be traced up to the theology and philosophy of the Egyptians, Persians, Gauls, Greeks and Romans, among all of whom the egg was an emblem of the universe, the work of the Supreme Divinity. The Egyptians held eggs as the sacred emblem of the renovation of mankind after the deluge. The Jews adopted them as a type of their departure from the land of Egypt, and they were used at the feast of the Passover as a part of the furniture of the table with the paschal lamb. The Christians have used it on this day, as retaining the elements of future life, as an emblem of the resurrection. In Italy it was the custom to have games with hard boiled eggs. These were colored, mostly red, and were to be seen everywhere. In some places all who ventured forth on Easter day carried with them a colored egg, and on meeting and greeting a friend the eggs were exchanged.

On Easter afternoon the ecclesiastics and laity used to play at ball in the churches for tansy cakes. In some places cakes were distributed to the parishioners by the clerks.

On Easter Sunday the young men, in the Yorkshire villages especially, removed the women's shoe buckles. On Easter Monday the young women retaliated by depriving the young men of both shoes and buckles with a good deal of fun and merriment. Then on Wednesday they were redeemed by little pecuniary forfeits, out of which an entertainment called a tansy cake was made.

The "lifting" or "heaving" was indulged in by the men on Easter Monday, and the women on Easter Tuesday. Being a stranger in the town made no difference. The men surrounded every woman they met and lifted her three times high above the head with a great deal of noise and loud shoutings, and the victim was not released until she had paid the fine required, whether it was in the form of a kiss or a small sum in the coin of the realm.

The women found it more handy to carry a chair into which each man they met was compelled to take a seat and then lifted high above their heads and was not released until a pecuniary forfeit had been paid.

Another peculiar custom was that of rolling one another down Greenwich hill. This was peculiar to the metropolis alone and was considered the oldest custom of all with the exception perhaps of this giving of eggs, which antedates Christianity.

Another curious sport which occupied the young girls during Eastertide was the game of "stool ball." This is still a pastime in almost every village in Sussex and is to the ladies and young girls of the same value as cricket is to men. Two pieces of board, 8 inches by 12, are fixed to two sticks from three to four feet high, according to the age of the players.

These sticks are stuck into the ground sloping a little backward and from 10 to 15 yards apart. The players take sides, generally eight to ten each.

The bowler pitches the ball at the board, which, in fact, is the wicket. If it hits, the player is out. The same is the case if the ball is caught, and the running out, stumping, etc., are exactly like cricket.

A most ancient diversion for all concerned was recorded by Durandus, who claimed that on Easter Tuesday the wives beat their husbands and on Easter Wednesday the husbands beat their wives; but, however that may be, it is related that at this particular season there were foot courses in the meadows, in which the victors carried off each a cake given as a reward by some wealthy one in the neighborhood. Sometimes two cakes were offered, one for the men and another for the women, and then a great concourse of people gathered, and there were a deal of merrymaking and good laughter.

The old Easter times may not have been wholesomely pious, but it was certainly with no heavy hearts that the greeting "Christ is risen indeed" was given.—San Francisco Examiner

THE PRIMITIVE EASTER.

Ceremonies Enacted Before the Birth of Christ.

Among the early Indo-European races the vernal equinox was greeted with great rejoicing and mystical rites, symbolical of the return of spring. This equinox occurs on or about the 21st of March and was without doubt the period of the primitive Easter.

De Gebelin states that it was celebrated in Egypt, Persia and Syria by the lighting of huge watch fires and the distribution of colored eggs.

In India the Parsees still exchange red eggs, on their spring festival, according to Schwartz, who adds that the custom is traceable to the earliest ages.

This giving of eggs typifies the birth of life in that which is apparently dead, as exemplified in the return of spring. The Christian fathers adopted it in the east, as they had done the celebration of Eostre in the west, and made it one of their paschal observances. It still flourishes in the Easter egg of our own times.

When the Celtic races left their cradleland in Chaldea and journeyed toward the setting sun, they carried with them the worship of Bel, god of fire, whom many great doctors believe to have been that sun itself. Twice a year, on the vernal and autumnal equinoxes, they kindled monster Bel fires in honor of this deity. The autumnal fire was in thanksgiving for the harvest, while that of the spring was intended to propitiate Bel for the coming year. Both these feasts were called "Bel time." Of "games of Bel." At the same "Bel time" games of all sorts were indulged in, and an immense procession of men driving before them their flocks and herbs passed between the fires lit by the Druids.—Philadelphia Press.

GREET THE RISING SUN.

Moravian Custom Still Observed on Staten Island.

No more quaintly impressive custom has descended to Greater New York from the early days than the Easter sunrise services held by the Moravians in their old burying ground over on Staten Island. Since the year 1763 there has never been an Easter morn in which these devout worshipers have failed to greet the dawn with praise and thanksgiving. With the farm lands and picturesquely wooded hills and fertile meadows of Staten Island absorbed under the new charter there came into the municipality the Moravian cemetery at New Dorp. There, on the hillside, since the old hip roofed frame building, which still stands, was dedicated as church and parsonage under British rule, the followers of John Huss have held a service at daybreak on every Easter day under the morning sky, among the ever multiplying graves, to emphasize their faith in the resurrection of the body and their sense of exultation in the triumph of life over death.

The present church of white painted wood, with its lofty square columns and a cupola containing the bell which calls the worshipers to service, stands within the burying ground, on one of the loveliest spots in the new city of New York. Beginning the service by artificial light within the consecrated walls, the congregation moves out into the grayness of the air at the moment of dawn.

The mists of the night still shroud the lowlands between the cemetery and the sea, above which the sun is just appearing. As the red and yellow beams beat shoreward over a gilded track the winding sheet is swept from the land, exposing the lush, marshy vegetation of the lowlands garbed in the tender tints of spring, with brightness softened by a hazy bloom. Birds begin their morning song among the fruit trees planted by the early settlers, tender leaves bestir themselves in bright array on the branches, and the very blossoms seem to join in the refrain of the resurrection, rejoicing in nature's return to active life after the dreary deadness of winter.—San Francisco Chronicle.

EASTER IN RUSSIA.

How the Sacred Day Is Celebrated in the East.

Perhaps there is no part of the world where Easter is celebrated with such universal enthusiasm as Russia. To the somewhat childlike peasantry of that savage land the anniversary appeals with a force that more self contained and less trusting nations do not know. The day is expected, watched for and made the occasion of greeting and fraternizing, much as New Year's day used to be made here. In Moscow the people—at least a great number of them—assemble under the walls of the Kremlin before midnight and await the stroke of the bell that tells them of resurrection day. As in New York, before the doors of Trinity church on New Year's eve, all classes are represented. There is no yelling and jeering and blowing on coarse toned horns. People in fashionable garb and laborers in their sheepskin cloaks rub elbows in the throng, and nobles and tramps are enforced companions. As the hour draws nigh a hush spreads over the great assemblage. Then the monster bell on Ivan tolls midnight. It is Easter. Instantly the

... in an the steeples begin to swing, gunners mount the parapet, the walls seem to rock to the detonations of the old saluting pieces, and sounds of rejoicing fill the air. But the sight is even stranger than the sound, for every member of the company below the walls who considers himself has been provided with a candle, and on the boom of the bells lights are passed to and fro, so that in a few moments the whole company seems to be enveloped in a glow. The church doors open for solemn service and the priests are called upon to bless the heavy, plum filled Easter cakes that are eaten by the people, these cakes being set out in long rows and topped with lighted candles. Kissing is promiscuous in token of the heavenly affection that the day stands for. This part of the business is said by foreigners of tender stomach to be one of the most trying experiences of a lifetime. Officers and private soldiers and sailors swap kisses. They keep it up for hours, and the czar has to do his share in kissing his ministers and other functionaries that live on the empire as well as the army and navy officers and clergy who assemble in his palace on Easter morning before sunrise.—Washington Post.

EASTER SUPERSTITIONS.

Traditions of the Day In All Parts of the World.

In European countries some of the extraordinary Easter customs are sacredly kept alive. In Durham, England, on Easter Monday the men claim the privilege to take off the women's shoes, and the next day the women retaliate.

Anciently both ecclesiastics and laymen used to play at ball in the churches for tansy cakes on Eastertide, and, though the pious part of this custom is happily everywhere discontinued, tansy cakes and tansy puddings are still favorite dishes at Easter.

In some parishes in the counties of Dorset and Devon the clerk carries round to every house a few white cakes as an Easter offering. These cakes, which are about an eighth of an inch thick and of two sizes—the larger being seven or eight inches, the smaller about five in diameter—have a mingled bitter and sweet taste. In return for these cakes, which are always distributed after divine service on Good Friday, the clerk receives a gratuity according to the circumstances or generosity of the householder.

There are many superstitions connected with Easter Sunday which are significant of the season and are almost as imperative as laws. One of these is the necessity of having something new to wear on this day in order to insure happiness for the coming year; hence the Easter bonnet.

It is also claimed in heathen countries, where the superstition originated, that the lambs frisk and dance in the light of the rising sun on Ostera, the name of a heathen divinity who was also represented as dancing and who gave to our Easter the name.

A German custom is to light fires on the hillside of the Harz. Obtaining the holy water from the streams at midnight, when the good spirit moves the waters, and the presentation of cakes, shaped in the form of the rising sun, are made special features of the occasion.

The rabbits enter largely into Easter amusements, especially among the Germans, who hide eggs in nests for the children to find, attributing the deed to the Easter rabbit.

In Jerusalem, as may be expected, Easter Sunday is commemorated with fitting ceremonies. Pious people leave loving tokens at the antique places made sacred by the presence of Christ.

On Easter day the reputed tomb of Christ in the Church of the Holy Sepulcher is covered with the lilies which are used all over the world. The Mount of Calvary is visited by the Christian population of the town and the members of the various religious orders inhabiting it, and flowers are strewn upon the spot where the cross is supposed to have stood. The archways under which Christ walked on the morning of the crucifixion, and which are now standing and may stand for another 2,000 years, are visited and pointed out to the small children and their histories told.

In Rome the Easter festival draws crowds of visitors to the city. The ceremonies begin with the firing of cannon from St. Angelo castle, St. Peter's, which is richly decorated for the occasion, is the scene of imposing ceremonies, at which the pope officiates. The pope is borne into the edifice with all the pomp of the Vatican attending him.

After officiating at mass at the high altar the pope is, with the same ceremony, carried back through the crowded church, and then ascends to the balcony over the central doorway. Rising from his chair of state and surrounded by his principal officers, he pronounces a benediction with indulgences and absolution.—Philadelphia Press.

GROWN WITH "HARD CASH" GUANO

From Farm of Joseph M. Hurt, by J. P. Pettus.---Average Length of Leaf, FORTY INCHES.

MARCH 1st, 1899.

TESTIMONIALS:

MARCH 1st, 1899.

TEST MADE BY WALKER CLUB the Bellefonte Guano was applied.

TINKLING, Lunenburg Co., Va.
To the Blackstone Guano Co.,
Blacksburg, Va.

Gentlemen:—A committee of the Walker Club, composed of John O. Bragg and F. S. Manson, Jorgenson, and Theo. Orgain, Tinkling, Va., have examined the results of the fertilizer test made for the club on my farm with ten of the best brands of guanos. On plot No. 1, old lot land, ten brands of fertilizers were applied, each at the rate of 800 pounds per acre, the ten sections carefully marked and treated alike. The committee picked out the section on which your Bellefonte Guano was used as the one showing the best results. On plot No. 2, four acres of new ground from old field fine land, four brands were used. Here the committee also found the best results, very decidedly, in the acre on which

Yours truly,
L. A. HARDY.

I have sold the tobacco made on the four acres mentioned above. The tobacco made on the acre on which the Bellefonte was used brought thirty-four dollars and fourteen cents ($34.14) more than the tobacco made on either of the other acres. This acre, as far as I know, had no advantage over the other three acres, either in cultivation or natural fertility, or any other way. I know the tobacco did not get mixed in cutting, curing or shipping.

L. A. HARDY,
Committee for W. A. C.

I have used the several brands of guano made by the Blackstone Guano Company, for ten years and have tested them by brands of other makes on the same field and truthfully say that I think the Bellefonte and Hard Cash are unsurpassed for tobacco. It gives me pleasure to recommend the Blackstone Guano Co.'s Guano to the farmers of Southside Virginia.

JOS. M. HURT.

Nottoway County.

Gentlemen:—I used your Bellefonte Guano last year along with another brand and sold the tobacco from the Bellefonte at an average of $19 per hundred, and the tobacco grown with the other brand at an average of less than $12, showing a difference of $7 per hundred in favor of Bellefontaine Guano. This ought to be enough to show what I think of Bellefonte Guano.

Danville, Va.

Gentlemen:—I have used your Guanos for the past ten years, and they have given me perfect satisfaction. I consider the Bellefonte the best I ever used, and shall use it the present year.

FRANK WHITE.

Nottoway Co.

Gentlemen:—I used your Bellefonte Guano last season along with other brands and am thoroughly convinced that it is the best I ever used. I have sold one barn of tobacco raised with the Bellefonte at an average of $15 around legs and all, which is a high average for shipping tobacco.

V. O. ANDREWS.

Dinwiddie, Co.

Blackstone Guano Co.—Gentlemen:—I bought of your agent, Mr. J. J. Mason, and used your Bellefonte Guano last season and am well pleased with the results. I have used a great many brands and think I can truly say it is the best I ever used, especially in the last ten years. Will say to my farmer friends that I think it a great mistake to use a low grade guano to save a few dollars in the ton at the expense of a larger difference in each hundred pounds of tobacco grown.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

Life must be built upon faith, and if it is not based upon it our hope is dead. —Father Monahan, Catholic, Philadelphia.

Immortal Man.

If man be not immortal, then God has planted falsehood in the very center of our being. —Rev. J. F. Carson, Presbyterian, Brooklyn.

A Christian People.

We are not a pagan, but a Christian people, and Christianity is the idea of our manhood. —Dr. Conaty, Catholic University, Washington.

Necessary Agency.

Every agency, whether civic, religious or educational, doing the work of Christianity, is necessary. —Rev. Reuben Thomas, Congregationalist, Boston.

Christ.

Christ is not only the keystone which holds the arches together, but he is the foundation upon which all is built. —Rev. W. P. George, Presbyterian, Kansas City.

A Chastened Spirit.

We must not be unmindful of the spiritual gains that come from a chastened spirit. Humiliation fertilizes the soul. —Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, Independent, Chicago.

Uncertainty in Churches.

A weakness in our churches is the tone of uncertainty which seems to be struck every now and again in the religious service. —Rev. Thomas Van Ness, Unitarian, Boston.

To Make Christians.

Let us give our hands, our hearts, our prayers, and let us make it the prayer of our whole land, to make Christians of all the people of this land. —Rev. B. F. De Costa, Episcopalian, New York.

To Be Truly Great.

A man to be truly great and to have all his noblest powers aroused needs to feel that thrill and throb of the long yesterdays and the quivering pulsations of the great tomorrows. —Rev. George B. Vosburg, Baptist, Denver.

The Greed For Gain.

"Greed for gain is the fault of our nation," he said. "Our soldiers in camp, our men of business, our very women are ruled by cupidity. The national standard is the dollar mark." —Bishop Potter, Episcopalian, New York.

The Secret of Success.

Today the high church party in England is strong because it is religious, not because it is ritualistic, but because it is religious in its ritualism and is working earnestly for the gospel of Christ. —Dr. Lyman Abbott, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.

How the Good Are Sustained.

The Lord God has written it plain in his word that he often calls the best people to suffer most. Storms are meant just as much for good people as for wicked people. The winds, frost and chill meet them as much as others, but they are sustained by divine strength and fortitude. —Dr. Northrup, Baptist, Kansas City.

Christianity Is Truth.

Christianity has nothing to dread from the facts. It is the truth, and it matches with the truth, all of it. As Christianity is a thought, a spirit, a temper, so the larger our knowledge, and the completer and more adequate our thinking, the more can Christianity be to us. —Rev. David N. Beach, Congregationalist, Denver.

The Benefits of Peace.

The people of this country, as I say, are in favor of the czar's proposal. They have a particular reason for wishing well to the great peace conference which is about to take place. They desire universal peace, not simply as Americans, but as sons and daughters of God. Our Christian people join in this movement to place themselves under the banner of the Prince of Peace on earth. —Dr. Edward Everett Hale, Congregationalist, Boston.

Genuine Religion.

A man's life is pretty nearly what he makes it. He can think himself into a fever over his disagreeable experiences, just as he can brood over a headache until he seems all head and all ache. He can also look so steadily at what is bright that what is dark becomes invisible. When a man tells me he is religious and then finds fault with everything, I know that what he calls religion is a chemical concoction which ought to be labeled "counterfeit." The genuine article comes from the fountain of eternal youth, but what he has produces premature decrepitude. —Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

Church Taxation.

Houses of worship should remain untaxed, because this is a Christian nation. The Sabbath is honored in the law, the Bible is recognized in the courts, prayer is offered in congress, and the name of God is on our coins. One in four of the population is a church member, and probably one in two is an attendant of and sympathizer with the church. The church should not be taxed, because it is supported by the voluntary offerings of the people. To tax church property is therefore a tax on a tax and thus outrages the fundamental principles of taxation. The church is for the public good. It stands for obedience to law, respect for the authorities and for good order. In proportion to its growth and support it lessens the prison and asylum taxation. It is against all criminality and seeks the transformation of life of all who otherwise might become burdens upon an overtaxed people. Clergymen are in a special sense the servants of the public, sustained by meager salaries, yet giving their lives to the uplifting of the fallen and the aid of the destitute. Some countries so highly value the work of the church that they levy a special tax for its support. No other state in the Union accepts a tax from the church. —Rev. Charles E. Locke, Methodist, New York.

BEYOND THE GATES.

BY REV. WM. A. QUAYLE, D. D.

When day is done, and from the gaudy sky
The glory fades,
Then quiet falls; and rest comes by and by
With night's dear shades.

When life is done, and climbed its craggy steeps,
All hot suns set;
When in vast joy that neither sighs nor weeps
We then are met:

What rest shall hold our hands, and grace,
Lik' evening psalm,
Shall whisper peace! And from the troubled face

Heaven's blessed calm

Shall every tear-stain wipe away and fear,
With Christ at hand

No heart-ache can through golden years draw near

That heavenly land.

EDITORIAL.

NO INJUSTICE DONE BISHOP POTTER.

One of our readers and good friends sends a clipping, and says: "I think the RECORDER ought, in justice to Bishop Potter, to publish the following clipping from the New York Churchman."

"The Bishop of New York has been so industriously misrepresented in his brave and truthful utterance on the necessity of conquering the saloon by the quiet process of substitution that we are glad to give the widest currency to a letter addressed to the Rev. Geo. M. Hammell, editor of the Western Christian Advocate, of Cincinnati. The letter is dated January 21, and runs as follows:

"MY DEAR SIR: You have been misinformed. I have never expressed any opinion as to the 'dram shop.' In a recent address in behalf of coffee houses, coffee wagons, coffee carts, and the like, I stated that something answering to the saloon, i. e., place of inexpensive recreation and refreshment, would always be a necessity. I may add that, until it is provided, the mischiefs of the saloon, which nobody recognizes more clearly than I, will continue. The saloon may be driven to cover, but it cannot be abolished. Something better, something wholesome, harmless, undefiled and undefiling must take its place and so expel by substitution."

"Legislation has failed to do this, and prohibition has failed. Denunciation has failed. It is a case for Christian capital, wisely employed, as the history of the Liverpool coffee houses has shown."

H. C. POTTER."

The editor of the RECORDER is very glad to publish the above clipping, but is not able to see that justice requires it. This letter of Bishop Potter was written in January and expresses Bishop Potter's views on the subject of how to meet the saloon. The view is no novelty, and has been held by the editor of the RECORDER ever since he has thought on the subject at all, and of the methods we use used in driving out the saloon. Our soda fountains, soft drinks, Y. M. C. A. halls are all based on this principle. The RECORDER has never said anything about Bishop Potter's views on the saloon, or how to drive it out. The editorial in the RECORDER of March 16, entitled "An Apostle of Temperance," in which he criticised some statements made by Bishop Potter in the Outlook of March 11, six weeks after the letter given above, was on a very different subject. Bishop Potter in this letter denounced the Prohibitionists as "Scribes and Pharisees," as "arrogant, denunciatory, ignorant, unscrupulous, and untruthful." The RECORDER had nothing to say as to Bishop Potter's views on the subject of Prohibition. It was distinctly stated that "the question is not as to whether Prohibition is right, but the question is, to whom ought the term Pharisee and all that string of adjectives to be applied?" That was the only question discussed by the RECORDER. Bishop Potter in his letter slandered most shamefully the Prohibitionists of the country. The editor is of that company, and rejoices to be associated with such noble souls as many of them are. He thinks that the law should prohibit drunkard-making just as it does gambling, and lotteries, and prostitution, but he does not think any of Bishop Potter's epithets merited by him because of that fact. He, therefore, proved, to the best of his ability, that Bishop Potter's language was unworthy of his position and character, and was, in fact, slanderous.

The clipping published above does not alter the facts. It simply states Bishop Potter's views on the saloon. They are not so original that they deserve any special mention as coming from him. The RECORDER has never discussed Bishop Potter's views of saloons; it discussed his views of Prohibitionists, and it has seen no reason to abate one word of the editorial of March 16. That editorial was written immediately upon reading his letter, and two weeks later the great papers of the Church are expressing themselves in line with the sentiments of the RECORDER. There is no objection to publishing the clipping above, but justice does not demand it, as the subject is entirely different.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BRO. KILBY TALKS AGAIN.

The only reason given, as far as I have heard, for not enlarging the districts at our last Conference was that no plan had been formulated. Several questions naturally arise. Why was a plan not formulated? And whose business was it to formulate a plan? Certainly there was time enough between the adjournment of the General Conference and the convening of our Conference to formulate a dozen plans. Such a reason as given looks very much like a subterfuge. Will a plan be formulated by next Conference? If so, by whom?

Does anyone suppose that the perpetual presiding elders will formulate a plan that will enlarge their duties, or possibly, by decreasing the number of districts, cut them out of a soft job altogether? Of course not. The Discipline puts this work on the Bishop; and while the Conference is in session is the proper and only time to formulate the plan as all the elders are present and can give the requisite information as to boundaries, etc.

I hope our next Conference will be presided over by a Bishop who was not a presiding elder himself for some time, and hence not so much influenced by that fellow feeling that made him so wondrous kind. It is very evident that the old elders intend to hold on until they are put out. Read the following extract from Dr. Whitehead's letter in the Nashville Advocate of January 12:

"The Bishop did not disturb elders whose terms were unexpired, and contrary to the doctrine of some of our ecclesiastical statesmen, he reappointed several who had held the office continuously for very long periods."

After speaking of the presiding elder question as a "dead issue" he further says:

"It is very certain that the Bishops will not allow themselves to be dictated to, or hampered by Annual Conference resolutions on the subject."

The plain English of which is simply this: We are in the office and propose to stay as long as we can, regardless of the wishes of the Conference, until some Bishop comes along who will turn us out, or until the General Conference changes the law so we will have to get out. This is a deplorable state of affairs, and to anyone with any delicacy of feeling, a humiliating one, but our presiding elders seem to have toughened in the work and become unimpressible. Well, I believe something will happen yet, and the people will, sooner or later, hear something drop.

Changing the subject, there is another matter I wish to mention. After mature deliberation, I assert that it is, in my opinion, a desecration of a Church to hold in it a session of the Virginia Conference! Let me explain: One morning, after the adjournment of our late Conference, I stood near the altar of the Church and, looking in different directions, I saw about four or five puddles of tobacco spittle as large as my hand, on the carpet, and around the outside of several spittoons, near by, was a rim of tobacco juice, showing that they had been used as often as hit by th law that tobacco shall not be used in any form in the Church during the session. If this cannot be done, then the Conference should be held in a hall, and not in a consecrated building. It is an OUTRAGE and a SIN to use a Church in that way.

In conclusion, I will ask two questions which each person can answer for himself. What would you think of a MAN who would deliberately spit tobacco juice on the carpet in the house of a FRIEND? Then what do you think of a MINISTER who deliberately spits tobacco juice on the carpet of the house of GOD?

THE SAD ENDING OF A HUMAN LIFE.

A special from a town in North Carolina to the Richmond (Va.) Times, published in a recent issue, gives the particulars of the finding of the dead body in the woods near by, by a party of fox hunters, of a young man formerly from Virginia. The correspondent says that the dead man had been suffering from despondency, resulting from a habit which he could not control. Wandering in the woods, under this great burden of despondency, the presumption is that the young man took his own life. This writer was personally acquainted with the unfortunate young man whose fate was so sad; and living in the same town with the deceased for some time, we learned enough about his history and habits to be able to tell the nature of the "habit" which so sadly mastered him. It is the old story of the effects of drinking liquor, about which we hear and read so much these days. Before this young man was mastered by whiskey he was a pharmacist of note, having filled with credit the position of a naval drug clerk. But alas! the destructive, ruinous whiskey habit overcame him and his life was ended in darkness and shame. I am not able to tell all the factors in the ruin and death of this young man, but this I do know, that a terrible responsibility rests somewhere. If such cases were not so common in our land, one might linger long in thought over the fate of this young man. This is a specimen of the ruinous work done by the saloon which in our country is legalized and protected by the strong arm of the law. How long will our christian country tolerate this accursed blot upon our boasted civilization, the legalized saloon.

DEDICATION AT SMITHFIELD.

DEAR BRO. CANNON:

The Church at Smithfield will have its red letter day on the second Sunday (9th) of April, when our elegant house of worship will be dedicated to the service of God. Rev. Henry E. Johnson, D. D., of Norfolk, will preach the dedicatory sermon. All ex-pastors are hereby invited to be present on this interesting occasion.

We are making substantial progress in Smithfield, and Methodism has a bright future before it in this community. The services connected with the dedication will be continued and we religion in our town. We have a fine congregation here to whom it is a genuine pleasure to minister in sacred things.

Very truly,

J. K. JOLIFFE.

SHALL THE DISTRICTS BE ENLARGED?

BY NORTH GEORGIAN.

In the Advocate of January 26 there appeared an article from the pen of Rev. I. C. Renfro, of the Pacific Conference, in which he deprecates the enlargement of presiding elders' districts. All other things being equal, we are of Brother Renfro's opinion. We believe in the presiding eldership. We believe in "oldfashioned" quarterly meeting, with two or three days' service, with their mighty sermons and their far-reaching influence. We believe in presiding elders who linger in their pastoral charges, help in protracted meetings, and make themselves known as factors in the work of upbuilding the Church.

There are evils, however, connected with the presiding eldership in our Church from which public sentiment is reacting; and, unless those evils are remedied, we believe that our people are going to demand an enlargement of districts to the full extent allowed by the law.

In mentioning these evils may we be permitted to use great plainness of speech? Our desire is to arrive at the truth, and a candid discussion can only help the right.

Nothing, perhaps, in the polity of our Church has given more general dissatisfaction, during the last two decades, than the management of the presiding eldership. The principal causes of this dissatisfaction may be classed under the following specifications:

1. Appointing men to the presiding eldership because of their unfitness for other work. When the question comes up what to do with a man who is not acceptable, it has become a by-word: "Locate him or place him on a district."
2. Continuing men in office for years and years. Against this there are many strong reasons. Public sentiment is largely opposed to it. If the matter were left to a vote of the Conferences, we believe that the result would be startling. All the analogies of our itinerant system are against it. Pastors must change every four years. They usually change much oftener. Our bishops, by an unwritten law, seldom preside over the same Conference more than one year at a time—never, we believe, more than twice consecutively. And yet men of no special qualifications are often retained in the cabinet of our Conferences for a generation, against the earnest wish of a large number—we believe a large majority—of our members.

3. Continuing men in the presiding eldership who are not acceptable. When a pastor is not acceptable the revelations in the cabinet cause his prompt removal; but in the case of the presiding eldership there are no "revelations." For a private member of the Conference to inform against a presiding elder is a thankless task, which generally reacts disastrously upon himself. Hence the appointing officer has almost no means of information in regard to the man who fill the most important places in the Conference.

4. Paying burdensome salaries. We are certainly not of those who would needlessly cut down the salaries of our preachers, but, in all candor, there are two sides to this question. In order to pay the salaries which our presiding elders "expect," an assessment is sometimes levied of twenty per cent., or one-fifth of the pastor's salary. And yet many men could be found who would superintend a district most efficiently and who could live, and do live, on half that amount.

If the evils of which we speak are corrected, we believe that our Church will still adhere to the present district lines. If they are not corrected, we are confident that public sentiment will speedily demand, as the less of two evils, districts as large as the new law permits them to be.—North Georgian, in Nashville Christian Advocate.

FROM STATE OF WASHINGTON.

I will set apart this day by trying to comply with the request of my friends—"Be sure to write again for the Recorder."

Of course, the Editor has long since forgotten the some-time Idaho correspondent, nevertheless the good little paper has been held in remembrance, tho' lost sight of for quite a while in "roaming over the land."

"Well, after luxuriating in dear old Virginia for more than a year, in all the love and comfort of kindred and home—a God-given rest,—we find ourselves in the State of Washington.

I cannot touch on the severing anew of broken home ties, with their tender memories, now doubly dear and sacred. Leaving Richmond on Monday p. m., December 26th, I set out alone to join my "gude man" in our new home.

"I will sail the seas over for thee"

The trip was made with a difficulty—making perfect connections—and with much pleasure, especially on the Great Northern, where we kept our sleeper for several days and nights with no interrupting changes. Our traveling companions made a most agreeable and social party, each vying with another in adding to the pleasure and comfort of the rest. Most prominent among us a young Episcopal deaconess, from Canada, going as missionary to Japan; but none the less of interest was a young German girl, all the way from the "old country," en route to Alaska to join her sweetheart and be married immediately on her arrival. And altho' she could not speak one word of English, our hearts went out to her as she sat in blissful silence, her face radiant with that light that "shone on land or sea"—and surely its beacon must have been bright and pure to reach, as it were, from "pole to pole." There were many ladies on "pleasure bent;" one family making a tour of the western coast, all eager for new sights and enjoying thoroughly the grand scenery. A stately English lady, with white curls, from some part of Texas, and a dear motherly soul from De Leon, were particularly kind to the writer. Along the Koo nai river the view was fine, the picturesque rocks, rushing water, bright sunshine and bracing air made merry the heart, and ere we realized it, our train drew up in

Our Conference should pass a stringent law looking and praying for a revival of wonderful city of Spokane, and goodbye had to be said, while the pleasant acquaintances passed on "as the ship in the night." In a strange city, but met with no inconvenience; the hotel was all that could be desired, and the attendants most attentive. The next morning, crossing the Spokane river, I took a new branch of the Great Northern, wending its way northward; the snow (of which we had seen but little) began to get deeper. The view now was grand in abrupt mountains—great boulders rising up huge and grim, with now and then broad lakes looking like prairies in their coats of ice and snow.

As we neared our destination—Saturday evening, December 31,—my heart was almost suffocated with contending emotions—with happiness, yet vague imaginings of the new strangeness. But when I was literally dumped out into the deep, DEEP snow, strong arms were there to receive me and give me that heart-welcome which makes home anywhere.

Valley is comparatively a small place, situated in the mouth of the Colville valley—a broad, level plain stretching out some fifty miles, bordered on either side with well-timbered mountains, while the Colville river runs so quietly through it you would never know it was there. The soil is fertile, well adapted to farming, producing splendid vegetables and fruits, while wheat and hay are the chief products, making it quite a stock country. In the near and valuable quarries and mines of onyx, marble, paint, etc. We anticipate quite a future for Valley. Of course, it is now in a very primitive state and filled, mostly, with foreigners—Germans, Austrians, Swedes, Norwegians, etc., without Church or Sunday-school, but we promise ourselves as the mighty logs of the forest come forth in boards and timbers it shall not always be so, tho' now we are just in the nucleus and must "stand still and wait." Pray that we may not grow careless and indifferent. Already we are told that we will "GET OVER" this "longing for the courts of the Lord," which, alas! is but too true, pray earnestly that it come not upon us. For it is discouraging when all around jabber in an unknown tongue unless speaking directly to you—the heart hungers for its kindred with a cast-out-of-Eden feeling; and I verily believe the same old story is being enacted every day and it is absolutely necessary for some to be thus cut off—separated—from the heaven of home, as a test of motives and strength and to bring out the best in them. In new and untried environments we naturally strive for closer fellowship with our God and Saviour we KNOW to be true. And when we look on the grand mountains,—that so forcibly recalls. "And He went up into the mountain apart to pray,"—the lovely valley with blue sky and pure air, we feel He will send comfort in His own good time. I pray He may use us as instruments—that it may be good for us to be here in the truest and highest sense.

I would tell you of our extreme cold weather, but from the paper's quotation fear it is yet a tender point with you (?); still you did not have it 33 below zero as we did. The old-timers say hey never saw—felt—the like, and rehearsed many a weird story of the blizzards in the Dakotas. They come immediately after a calm, warm day, and the people all stay in bed to keep warm and to save fuel. They say, persons caught out can form no idea of direction or distance and are often carried miles away, and after being out for some time lose their minds from the intense cold, and see, as it were, mirages that lure them on and on. On one occasion, some lady heard a strange noise at the door and insisted that her husband get up and see, and when he opened the door he was startled by an apparition, and it was some time before he could make out it was really a human being, clad in a solid sheet of ice, the peculiar sound proceeding from a tiny hole through which he breathed. They did all they could to restore him, but it was days before he could tell who he was or whence he came. He had been caught out and had wandered miles and miles, and said after a while he fancied he was going up and down the streets of a large city, and through windows and glass doors he could see bright, glowing fires, but try as he would, he could not open the door, and thus he went, in his agony, only to find himself barred out. O, isn't it terrible? But that was in the Dakotas, not in Washington, though it was bad enough here, but the snow is now fast disappearing and soon summer, with her floral wealth, will come and come to stay, for we do not have the oft-repeated rainy spells.

Some of my friends will remember this as the beginning of a New Year for me; yes, the day came just the same and we had the customary birth-day cake and tried to be "like home," and was happy in the thought the mother's heart was with us although so far away. And it was amusing to see the train come in all decked in evergreens and the train men wearing the shamrock, and men coming home at night with tufts of green in their hats—and encouraging, too, for a loyal heart must have some true inspiration.

PROMOTION.

(BY MALINDA CLEAVER FAVILLE.)

Promotion should mean advancement in rank because of meritorious service. It frequently does mean preferment because of outside influence. Ideally, officials with appointing power should respect, not personal influence, but special ability; practically, the reverse was more than sometimes been the case. All development is a growth toward the ideal; when shall we begin to develop a correct system of official promotion? The merchant does not put long dresses on an overgrown cash-girl and send her to New York to select the season's millinery. The superintendent of the ship yards does not promote a rivet-holder at once to the charge of a shop. The cash girl and the rivet-holder may rise to the top of the ladder, but they rise round by round; no "pull" can snatch them to the top. The man with dollars in his business knows that round by round is the only safe way.

The President who set out as he said "to manage the business of the people in a business-like way" was the great-

EDITORIAL.

The RECORDER extends its thanks for the tastefully prepared pamphlet containing the memorial sketch of the late Thomas Branch. The sketch was prepared and read by Dr. Brown, and has now been printed and bound into a small pamphlet, together with a photograph of the widow and a fine likeness of Mr. Branch.

The papers report one or two amusing incidents in connection with the reported death of Mr. Sherman. One of the New York papers described in full the death-bed scene, and quoted the dying sate-man's last words! And to cap the climax, some spiritualists in Washington had conversations with Mr. Sherman's ghost, and found out from the ghost how Mr. Sherman liked the other world, and also received messages from him for his friends. There is no doubt that the newspaper men were knaves, and the spiritualists were either fools or knaves, or perhaps somewhat of both.

There has been some conjecture as to why the Emperor of China, who was reported as "sick," did not die. A recent Government report states that Sir Claude McDonald, the English Minister at Peking, told those in charge of affairs that the death of the Emperor, under existing conditions, would so displease Western nations that it would be disastrous to China and those in power.

A COREAN THANK-OFFERING.

Dr. Reed writes from Seoul, Corea, that Gen. Yun, father of our T. H. Yun, has just handed him $1,000 for the proposed Industrial School at Songdo, and that Hon. T. H. Yun, just appointed by the Emperor to be Taotai of Gen-san, before leaving for his responsible post, had given valuable property in Seoul worth $1,000 to $1,200 for the same purpose. This Mr. Yun did, aided by his noble christian wife, saying: "In token of our gratitude to the Church we do this."

This Offering in heathen lands to build up christian schools should be a call to Virginia Methodists to show that their gratitude to God is as great as that of the Corean christians.

It has been announced that Mr. Samuel Cupples is the gentleman in St. Louis who gave the $25,000 to Central College, Missouri.

The Methodist Times of March 16, just received, states that £533,140 have now been promised on the Wesleyan Twentieth Century Fund. Over one-half in three months.

EPWORTH LEAGUE CONVENTION

The joint Epworth League Conference of the two districts of Petersburg and Farmville, which was to have convened in January last, will meet in Blackstone, April 28-30. The program, which has already been published in this paper, will be followed with slight alteration, and will be given in full hereafter. Prominent workers and distinguished speakers, both lay and clerical, will be present to give interest to the occasion. The opening exercises will take place on Friday evening at 8 o'clock, in Blackstone Methodist Church.

CONFERENCE.

Revival services began at Centenary Church Sunday and will continue for some time. The pastor, Rev. Asbury Christian, is being assisted by the Rev. W. B. Beauchamp, of St. James' M. E. Church, Richmond. Mr. Beauchamp is a talented young man and a most effective preacher. He is a graduate of Randolph-Macon College and of Vanderbilt University. He is serving with great acceptability his fourth year at St. James. Mr. Beauchamp is president of the State Epworth League, and is in close touch with the young people of the State.—News.

The official board of Keller circuit met Wednesday and decided that the camp-meeting at Turlington ground should be held this year beginning Aug 11.

The next Eastern Shore District Conference will be held at Accomac C. H. in July.

Brother Whitmore has been holding protracted services at Belle Haven for two weeks.

On Sunday last Rev. J. E. Potts held a memorial service for Dr. J. E. Broadwater, deceased, in the presence of a large gathering of his old friends.

The death of Mr. Richard W. Ames, of Locustville, will be received with sincere sorrow by many friends in every part of the Eastern Shore. No one could know the man without admiring him for his high christian character and his exalted worth as a man and citizen. He so impressed everyone with his sincere desire to do right and be just, that no one ever questioned his motives, however much they may have differed with him. He died as he lived—a christian.—Enterprise.

The service at Centenary church Sunday morning was especially interesting, including excellent singing, a sermon by Bishop Granberry, and the consecration anew of the Church, which has been lately renovated and improved. The improvements have given much added beauty to the sacred structure. The sermon of Bishop Granberry was able and soul stirring. He took his text from the last chapter of the Epistle of Jude, the subject was "character building." The Bishop's allusion to his former pastorate, twenty-seven years ago, and to his parishioners who had built up their christian character and gone to their reward, was touching.

Dr. Royall is assisting Bro. Beckham in a meeting at Asbury Church, Richmond.

Rev. A. Coke Smith, has been called to Columbia, S. C. by the critical illness of his sister, Mrs. Rice, wife of Dr. John A. Rice, president of the Columbia Female College. Dr. Smith left Lynchburg Friday night. On account of his absence there were no Easter morning services at Court Street church, but Dr. Paul Whitehead, the presiding elder, preached at night. The Sunday school had most interesting exercises, and made the largest Easter offering it has ever made.

The official board of Monumental Church, Portsmouth, have decided to take down the present parsonage and build a new one on the same site.

At Epworth Church Rev. W. J. Young, D. D., took up the Conference collection and raised the amount required.

Rev. R. H. Bennett at McKendree Church received one member by certificate, and the Sunday-school gave the largest missionary contribution in its history.

Rev. Daniel T. Merritt, at Huntersville Church, received one member and preached to the Odd Fellows at night.

Rev. J. F. Carey reported eight additions to the Sunday-school at Port Norfolk, and received three members into the Church.

Rev. W. R. Proctor had five additions to the Sunday-school, took up his Conference collection and received one member at Park View, Portsmouth.

Rev. Dr. Johnson, at Cumberland-Street, raised $1,000 to pay off the debt of the Church, received two new members and five requests for prayer at night.

Rev. Lloyd T. Williams reported one new member at Trinity; Rev. C. W. Pettit preached and administered the communion at night.

Rev. G. H. Spooner, at Lambert's Point, had six additions to the Church.

Rev. R. F. Beadles, at Central Church, reported ten additions to the Sunday-school and received two in the Church on profession of faith. Revival services will be held during the week.

At East Norfolk Rev. W. R. Crowder reported large increase in the congregations since his last report, and better collections.

Rev. W. H. Edwards, at Centenary, received eight into the Church. The revival meeting closed on Sunday. There were thirteen conversions and accessions.

Rev. W. T. Williams, at LeKies Memorial Church, raised $1166 on the Church debt.

Rev. R. T. Waterfield, at Owen's Memorial, Portsmouth, had two accessions to membership.

At Queen-Street Rev. S. C. Hatcher received three members.

Bishop Wilson will preside at a grand rally of Epworth Leaguers at Monumental Church, Portsmouth, Friday night, April 21.

Mrs. Susie Lloyd (nee Wade), of Philadelphia, made Laurel-Street church an Easter present in the shape of a carved communion table with the words engraved on it, "In remembrance of the."

It is a handsome piece of furniture, and the church highly appreciates the gift.

Protracted services were begun at Laurel-Street Sunday night and will continue during the week. Rev. R. Stanley Gayle, the pastor, will preach very often during the meeting.

The board of stewards of Centenary church, Norfolk, have decided to make extensive improvements on the church building. These will consist of artistic frescoing of the walls, renovating the pews and pulpit, and new and improved lights in the place of those in use now. The edifice will also be painted on the exterior. When finished it will be one of the handsomest in the city. Between $500 and $1,000 will be expended on these repairs.

GENERAL.

Rev. James Needham died at his home near Pilot Mountain this morning. He would have been 100 years old on May 2nd next. THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON III, SECOND QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, APRIL 16.

Text of the Lesson, John xiii, 1-17.
Memory Verses, 14-17—Golden Text,
John xiii, 15—Commentary Prepared
by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

1. "Having loved His own which were in the world, He loved them unto the end." How good it is that He never ceases to love us! He never finds out anything new about us, but before ever He told us of His love He knew us thoroughly, and He loves us with an everlasting love (Jer. xxxi, 3). He came from the Father into the world. He is now about to return to the Father, and He has some last words and lessons for His disciples, many of which are full of assurances of His love, such as chapter xv, 9.

2. At one time the devil used the serpent, but since Eve listened to him the devil has always been able to find men and women enough for his purposes. He puts before us evil thoughts, and if we receive an evil thought then he will show us how to carry it into an evil deed, and he will come into us himself and consummate it. In this verse he puts the thought into Judas' heart, and in verse 27 he comes in himself.

3. Jesus was conscious that all power and all things were His; that He came from God and was going to God, and because of what He was He did what He did. He did not try to make Himself equal with God, for He was equal with God, one with the Father. If we have received Him, we are children of God by faith in Him, heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ (Rom. viii, 16, 17), and as we believe this we will be enabled to do or bear cheerfully whatever He sends us.

4. Laying aside His garments is suggestive of the glory which He laid aside when He came to earth for us, and girding Himself with a towel makes us think of Him as our great high priest, ever ministering to and serving us. He is still girt about the breast with a golden girdle (Rev. i, 13) and is at God's right hand for us as well as in the midst of the churches.

5. Washing and wiping the disciples' feet—how dumb with astonishment they must have been, and what an opportunity for blessed service some one lost! How slow we are to see the opportunities until they have passed. He never lost one.

6. "Lord, dost Thou wash my feet?" With amazement Simon has watched Him passing from one to another, but now that his own turn has come he cannot stand it and thus cries out, adding, "Thou shalt never wash my feet" (verse 8). To see our Lord Jesus taking the place of the most menial servant was too much for Peter and perhaps made him wish that he had been quick enough to do this instead of this Lord and Master.

7. "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." The hereafter does not necessarily refer to heaven and the life to come, but to a later period in this present life. We often have some light as the years pass on upon God's dealings with us, but doubtless the full light will not come till the morning, and many things may remain dark till then.

8. "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with Me." As to this washing see chapter iii, 5; I Cor. vi, 11; Titus iii, 5; Rev. i, 5; Eph. v, 26. We cannot have part with Christ till He has made us meet, but it is His work, and His alone, that can give us this necessary cleansing.

9. Simon, not understanding, now asks for more than our Lord was doing. Possibly he had some thought in mentioning hands and head as well as feet of the blood and oil upon the ear and hand and foot in the consecration of the priests and the cleansing of the leper (Lev. viii, 24; xiv, 25, 28).

10. "Clean every whit." What a word concerning such as Peter and John and the others! Yet it is true of every sincere believer. Sanctified as well as justified by the one offering of Jesus Christ once for all—yes, perfected forever and complete in Him (Heb. x, 10, 14; Col. ii, 10). This is our standing in Christ through His finished work. As to our daily life we need constant cleansing. The feet suggest our contact with the world.

11. "Ye are not all clean." Judas never had been a true disciple. He was only of the number of the twelve, not of the twelve. Those who go out from the number of Christ's followers never to return make it manifest that they never were true followers (I John ii, 19). Those who are true disciples can never perish (John x, 27, 28). The Lord knoweth them that are His.

12. "Know ye what I have done to you?" They certainly knew that He had washed and wiped their feet, but that was only the outward act. Did they understand its meaning? He made known His ways unto Moses, His acts unto the children of Israel (Ps. ciii, 7).

13. "Ye call Me Master and Lord, and ye say well, for so I am." Paul loved to say, "God, whose I am and whom I serve" (Acts xvii, 23). Elijah said, "The Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand" (I Kings xvii, 1). On another occasion our Lord said, "One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren."

14-16. "I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." We cannot be saved by trying to imitate Christ, for there is no salvation except by His blood. "The life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls, for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul" (Lev. xvii, 11). But He saves us by His blood that we may follow Him as our example and manifest His life in these mortal bodies. Not saved by any doing of ours, but saved that we may do. "We are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before prepared that we should walk in them" (Eph. ii, 10). Nothing will make us more apt to see quickly these good works which He has for us to do than a study of the life of our Lord in the four gospels, always supposing that we are filled with the Spirit both to study and to act. Many are willing to do some great thing, but to lay aside our official robes and stoop to serve those whom we consider beneath us—this requires more grace than most of us seem to have.

17. "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." Elsewhere He said, "Not every one that saith unto Me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of My Father which is in heaven" (Math. vii, 21). "Be ye doers of the word and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves" (Jas. i, 22). "Therefore to him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin" (Jas. iv, 17). "This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly that they which have believed be careful to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men" (Titus iii, 8).

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning April 16, "The Eternal Morning and Modern Missions"—Text, Isa. lx, 1-12.

"Arise, shine; for thy light is come and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee!"

Other ages have seen marvelous religious revivals and reformations, but no age has seen such vast changes wrought by a single religious system in such widely separated parts of the world and over such multitudes as has been effected by Christianity during this present century. Not to speak of the Old Testament revivals, which were national, the most strikingly aggressive religions have been Buddhism and Mohammedanism. The first may be called the Protestantism of the orient, as it was a reformation of Brahmanism and the previous heathen systems of the east, which had grown corrupt. Mohammedanism was a reform movement of vast importance and a wondrous advance upon the old material religions which it supplanted. At one time it threatened to overrun all Europe and divide the world with Buddhism. But neither of these systems has lifted any nation into advanced civilization and neither fulfills the requirement of a universal religion for all men.

The advance of Christianity for the first 300 years was marvelous. From obscurity and contempt it came to the seat of power in the Roman empire. Its conquest of the barbarians who overturned the empire is one of the marvels of history. Most fascinating is the story of the conversion of the northern nations of Europe and the subsequent development of the Greek, the Roman and the Protestant churches.

The deepest interest, however, centers around the work of the church during the present century. This is the era of missionary societies, Bible and tract societies. Since this century began more Bibles have been made and distributed than in all previous ages.

To see clearly the advance of the gospel one should take the map as it was in 1800 and compare it with the world now. All the Pacific islands, Japan, Korea, China, India, Africa, South America, Mexico and the Indians of America have been reached with the Bible and pure religion, and whole nations lifted from vilest barbarism and heathenism into peaceful, progressive civilization and religious purity.

Surely the light has come. Earth sees her Redeemer as never before.

Arousing Interest.

Some years since a pastor of a New England city church announced a missionary meeting for Sunday evening on a new plan. He selected two laymen to speak on some phase of missions. One of those selected for this work was a young man who had never made an address before so large a company. His timidity and objections were overcome, and he selected "The Evangelization of

THE PARSON'S VACATION.

WRITTEN FOR THE RAM'S HORN BY THE PARSON HIMSELF.

THEY were singing the doxology when the prospect shimmered about me—no more sermons for two Sundays—and I sang on more lustily and pronounced the apostolic benediction with more than the usual fervor.

"Now, Elder," says Deacon Brown, as I stepped from the pulpit, "take a good rest and do not sleep on a chair and eat bologna sausage and crackers on the train"—and I felt him press something soft into the palm of my hand.

After pulling down all the blinds in my study, I sneakishly drew the Deacon's bill from my vest pocket to examine its quantity. I had not seen a fifty dollar bill since the war—I was born a few days after Appomattox—and my hand trembled as I pinned the bank note to the inside of my vest. "Every good gift is from above," said Paul, and though Deacon Brown makes his money by betting what wheat will be next August, I could almost imagine him sailing through the fleecy clouds with out-stretched wings, dropping that fifty dollar note on me "from above."

"Now, wife, bring me out a dozen collars, half a dozen pairs of cuffs—for I can turn the cuffs end-for-end in a pinch—as many shirts, a couple of changes of underwear, my tooth brush, a razor and the old suit in the clothes-press; I will need that to go fishing in. Other times it might be wrong to pack a grip Sunday night, but when you are going on a vacation it is quite right, for to enjoy things properly, the valise must be filled the night before you start. Half the fun of going on a trip is in getting ready. For days and weeks beforehand, the railway ticket offices must be ransacked for time tables. The ticket agents must trace out the routes for you, and mark columns so that you are sure of your bearings. Even if you bother them a dozen times with small talk about the train, you have a right to be posted.

"THE VALISE MUST BE FILLED THE NIGHT BEFORE YOU START."

I had asked all about the various trains, whether the sleepers were of the ordinary pattern, or of the apartment make; whether I could buy meals on the train for twenty-five cents—that was before the Deacon gave me that bill—whether every car had an ice water reservoir on board, and whether it really was a fact that one should sleep with his head toward the engine, and his toes pointed toward the last station. The whole family ought to be induced to join in these preliminaries of the trip. Time tables with red-lined maps are great educators, even if Lake Erie is yanked down nearly to Cincinnati on one of them just so as to get an air line between St. Louis and New York, with Cleveland as one of the stations on the beveled edge, or Lake Michigan is telescoped into Hudson Bay on another, to facilitate a bee line between Detroit, Chicago and St. Paul.

Every evening to the last should be spent in these studies. For the sake of variety, deep-laid schemes to surprise friends, and the trip itself might be discussed with well-arranged plots to get off on the wrong side of the train, so as to make the waiting cousins think you have not come. All these enjoyments culminate in the packing of the canvas bag. It is surprising to see just how many things you should take along. I thought I ought to put in my dressing gown; and my wife insisted on my plush slippers going too. Then we thought of comb and brush, drinking cup, some apples, my hymn-book and Bible, writing paper, tooth powder, an almanac, a spare pair of shoes, a hunting cap, neckties bromo seltzer and a box of pills. To stow them all away would need the sample case of a drummer for a New York clothing factory. Then we decided that a weeding-out process was necessary. When you reach that stage of the trip, it is surprising to see just how few things you really must carry with you. So we pruned off the pile until the grip closed without the use of a blacksmith's vice. Then the alarm clock was set for three hours before train time, and the whole family, wife, babies, and hired girl, were sleeping at last.

To walk circumspectly is always a Biblical virtue, but it is a crowning grace to possess as you are entering a railway train. Of course, you may be a bit flustered, for your wife and sister are tapping on the window pane outside, and holding up the baby to have him see how it goes to kiss his papa with an eighth of an inch of window glass between mouths. Then they expect you to smile and nod and throw up the sash, and carry on a loud conversation until the train, as if tired of the babble, moves on. Even then, you must make a flag out of your handkerchief, and keep on waving it until you have passed the first mile post.

But don't let these last domestic duties hinder you from choosing the right seat. Indeed, there is only about one seat that you can use with comfort. It is the one farthest away from the worn-looking little woman with the three children in the double seat. It is well enough to pity her, but you had best do your pitying at a distance. The youngest of the three will be sure to dangle her butter-besmeared fingers across the back of the passenger in the next chair; the second, will scream out a question for every telegraph pole passed, while the oldest will vary her trips to the water faucet by a run to the door at each station. But the ideal seat is also as far as possible from the severe-looking firm-lipped, middle-aged lady, with eye glasses and the smelling bottle. She is on every train. I sat in front of her the whole of Monday forenoon, all because I had not walked into the car circumspectly. I avoided the woman with the three bairns; I escaped the rural gentleman who is always wanting to converse on the cars, but I stumbled right into this old maid's arms, simply because other observations had thrown me a little off my guard.

Her first "feeler" brought me to my senses. Of course, that was to ask me to put down the window eleven seats in front of her. My eye made haste to discover that here was going to be trouble.

"These brakemen are always throwing draughts over the heads of nervous people," she snapped. "They ought to be reported." She grew worse when she noticed I did not volunteer a sympathizing reply, and fairly hissed as she said, "You preachers are the ones to guard defenseless young ladies making journeys alone, and see that they are not the victims of the carelessness of these horrid men." Now, the first two words of her sentence bothered me. "You preachers!" How in

FIVE-MINUTE SERMONS.

"A STROKE OF A BROOM DEMOLISHED THE WHOLE STRUCTURE."

XII. SPIDER'S WEBS.

It was during the "heated term" a few years since. I had retreated from the stifling air of my study and the blistering heat of the turnpike to the shade of a grape arbor. I was not doing anything particularly except trying to keep cool, though I am willing to confess that the most unphilosophical way of escaping the suffering of the heat is to do nothing.

Still, that day was too hot for philosophy. It was not long till I noticed a little movement among the leaves and I discovered a huge spider who was more industrious than myself. He was just completing a web for his business. I became interested in him at once, and after he had climbed about on his curious web for some time he disappeared and all was quiet. Only a few minutes passed when a luckless fly came past and was caught in the web. He began to buzz and struggle when Mr. Spider was at once on the scene to tie him up with his silken cords as the preliminary step to an afternoon's meal. Just then my good wife came out of the kitchen to enjoy a little of the shade and heard the sound of buzzing wings. She saw the struggling fly and with a stroke of a broom demolished the whole structure with some very uncomplimentary remarks about the nasty spider. She hated flies herself but she hated more the treacherous schemes of the spider. Ah, Mr. Spider, you spread your handsome net to catch the buzzing beauty, but you are only despised for it. But, did not the old prophet talk along that line when he said, "They weave spiders' webs. . . . Their webs shall not become garments." They weave curious webs to catch men, but their methods, however cunning, shall only bring them into disrepute. Their ingenious schemes will afford them no shelter.

I passed one of these spider's last week as I drove through a neighboring town. He was standing on the curbstone chatting jovially with a half dozen young men. They seemed to be roaring very heartily when I first noticed them. Then Mr. Spider turned and pushed back a screen door about as high as his head and stepped inside and a procession of foolish youth after him. There he went with his flies after him and they were caught probably for time and eternity. But that screen and the sign over his door, "Refreshments for man and beast," does not screen him from the opprobrium of the whole community. Many a good wife would love to be able to take her broom and sweep the whole detestable web away. He has a license from the government and from the state to catch all the human flies he can, but all that his "legitimate traffic," does not cover him.

I went over to see brother Cortley at Teilsburg a couple of weeks since. A very pretty little building stands opposite his home on the principal street of the place. I sat by the front window as the sun went down, I noticed that the young men seemed to be calling there in twos or in parties. My curiosity was aroused and I said, "Brother Cortley, have you a Young Men's Christian Association in that pretty house across the way?" Sunshine and shadow crossed his face in waves as he answered, "Not at all, a very fascinating young fellow has brought in a slot machine and some other devices of the kind and is capturing all the young men of the community. We are looking up all the laws there are on the subject and are determined to get him out of here." A little later I heard that the officers had captured his whole outfit and burned it and fined him more than he was able to pay. He had a handsome spider's web but it did not cover him.

When the Smithers' homestead in our town was vacant, five years ago, it was rented by a very prepossessing couple from the Pacific coast. The wife was a most admirable hostess and delighted to throw her home open for gatherings of the young people. She ingratiated herself into the hearts of the young girls and they loved nothing better than to spend a couple of hours at her house. She had so many romantic things to tell them of her own brilliant and daring girlhood, of what she had seen and learned in different places where her home had been in her wandering life. It was not very long until our neighbor, Mr. Brown, discovered that his daughter, who was sought by the profligate young Jim Sands, was encouraged to meet him at this delightful home.

Then, in a very short time, one after another, parents began to discover that clandestine meetings of young couples were urged by this romantic woman and the best care of watchful parents were thwarted by her gracious insinuations. They learned that her young friends had imbibed from her ideas of life and romance of love and matrimony which has worked evil in our little community. She had woven her spider's web very delightfully but it did not protect her when an outraged community ostracized her and quarantined against her house as they would against the yellow fever. You may do your wickedness in the most handsome way and with the most beautiful disguise but the disguise will not save you from RETRIBUTION.

the Sandwich Islands" as his theme. The public library furnished several volumes which were read and noted and a short speech prepared covering the prominent points in the story of its missions. It was a simple incident and probably passed from the mind of the pastor soon after. Its effect on the young man was permanent. His interest was aroused. He was led from business into the ministry, and the mission fields of the church became matter of special study. Personal acquaintance with leading missionaries in each mission field has led to the collection of photographs, which in the form of slides for the stereopticon are widely in use among the Leagues to illustrate the work of our church among the heathen. Set the young people at work searching and talking, and they will acquire an interest which will last life long.

Power of the Word.

Some fifteen hundred years since at Milan, Italy, there was a noted teacher of rhetoric who had never become a Christian, but held to the belief of the Manicheans. His mother, a devout Christian, had never ceased to pray for his conversion. Ambrose, the eloquent bishop, was interested in the young man. But all arguments had failed to convince him and all persuasion failed to move him. One day a copy of the epistle of Paul to the Romans came under his notice and the passage "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ and make not provision for the flesh to fulfill the lusts thereof" caught his eye and arrested his attention. He could not get away from it. It fastened conviction until he saw the truth and decided to become a follower of Jesus the Christ. He became known as Augustine and was made bishop of Hippo in Africa. Few men have been more influential in shaping the course of thought in the Christian church than he. Still the word proves itself powerful to convince and to convert, and demonstrates that it is the word of God.

The class meeting is not dead or dying. Spiritual culture will ever need expression and will seek companionship. The confessional is not adapted to an advanced condition of piety. Social communion and friendly interchange of thought are a necessity. In some form the class meeting must live wherever vital piety is not extinct. The devotional meetings of the League can do much to perpetuate this helpful means of grace. Personal testimony is a great help to a live Christian.

Twenty millions of dollars is a large sum of money, but that is what the Methodist Episcopal church proposes to raise to mark the opening of the twentieth century. It means debts paid, schools endowed, hospitals erected, missions re-enforced and advance made on every line.

Bishop Foss is writing a book on missions in India for the use of the League. He visited our work there last year, and with Dr. Goucher of Baltimore saw more than any previous official visitor had ever seen.

THE SERPENT'S BITE.

ITS VENOM NOT SO TERRIBLE AS ALCOHOL'S POISON.

Few things are so much dreaded as serpents. They are so stealthy and, except the rattlesnake, so silent, and some of them, at least, are so deadly. There is no cure known for the bite of some snakes; the only chance is to cut out the piece of flesh which has been bitten or to burn it out with a red-hot iron, and even this will be of no use unless it is done directly after the bite is received. Now, this is very like what alcohol does to the drinker, who has only a very faint chance of getting rid of his thirst for drink when that thirst has once been formed in him. His only chance is to get the drink out and keep it out of his body. He cannot cut it out or burn it out; he has patiently to abstain from it until he has ceased to long for it. Sometimes it is many years before this can be done, and sometimes the thirst comes back time after time for the whole of a man's life and keeps him in danger and anxiety. What good reason we have to avoid being bitten by this serpent of strong drink!

The mischief comes at last like many other bad things. The drink comes to us with a smiling face. It is pretty to look at as it sparkles in the glass. We see some of our friends taking it. We know that many good people not only take it, but even praise it. If we were to take some, very likely at first it would seem to be doing us good, and we might think it a useful thing to take. But it would all be a mistake. Every kind of strong drink is "a mocker," and soon after we had got into the habit of taking it we should find that we had more or less difficulty in leaving it off.

The first prick of the serpent's tooth would be felt, and if we had wisdom enough left we should cast the habit away from us in fear and horror. If we did not, the tooth would enter more deeply and the poison would flow through our veins. We should become the prey of the serpent. Wise men look well ahead, and so do wise boys and girls. They do not ask whether a thing is pleasant or unpleasant just now. They want to know how it will be in the end. They know better than to buy an ounce of present pleasure with a pound of future pain. It is because the worst of drink comes at the last instead of at the first that we so hate and fear it.

It must be terrible to feel the poison spreading through one's body after the bite of a snake. In some cases in about a quarter of an hour it is all over, and death has come. But it is worse still to live the living death of a drunkard; to feel one good thing after another going out of you; that you love those about you less and have less of their love; that your good name is going; that you are in every way getting worse and worse, farther and farther from God and goodness and everything that is beautiful and pleasant; that you are surely dying not only in your body, but your soul as well. Better by far be killed by a serpent than endure such a fate as this. But if you neglect the warning of the motto, if you break your pledge, such a fate may be yours. —Father Mathew Herald.

EQUALITY OF SEXES.

A Fragment From a Matter of Fact Romance.

She had been working through the livelong night. Her husband had been asleep while she was sweeping the floor, washing up and mending the clothes. Every now and again he would awake, and, with the reverse of a blessing, command her to labor with greater vigor. But these interruptions were few and far between. Beer had closed his eyelids and tobacco had made him drowsy. Now and again she would look at the clock anxiously.

"Just 5," she murmured, "and the act fixes the hour for 6." And once more she would plod on, knowing that it would be death, or, to speak by the card, a thrashing, if her lord and master found her loitering.

At length the hour of deliverance struck and she knew herself to be free.

"My breakfast," grumbled the man. "You will find it on the table. And now the law lets me rest."

"Let's you rest? What do you mean?" "Why, lets me work!"

And she disappeared to enjoy in the factory employment infinitely less arduous than the squalid duties of a drunkard's home. —London Punch.

Drunkards Should Be Controlled.

A notable paper was recently read before the British Medical society, in which the author maintained that insanity can be largely traced to the intemperate use of intoxicating drinks. He held that "the public is responsible for allowing men and women to continue in the intemperate indulgence of alcohol to such an extent as to become burdens to the state. He took the ground that the habitual inebriate has forfeited the right of personal liberty, and he intimated that the freedom of the will as a natural right is dependent on the ability to control the will. When any man or woman reaches the point where the desire for alcoholic liquors is not controlled, he should be treated as a public nuisance."

An Unmixed Evil.

It is far too favorable a view to treat the money spent on alcoholics as if it were cast into the sea. It would have been better if the corn had mildewed in the ear. No way so rapid to increase the wealth of nations and the morality of society as the utter annihilation of the manufacture of ardent spirits, constituting as they do an infinite waste and an unmixed evil. —London Times.

President C. F. Gates of Harpoot has sent word that the Sultan of Turkey has consented to pay for the destruction of the property of the American Board in Asia Minor during the Armenian massacres.

The number of Christian Endeavor Societies in existence, on Christian Endeavor Day, February 2, 1899, was 54,934 with a total membership of 3,296,040. Of these 9,649 societies are in foreign lands, and 3,467 others are in Canada.

No name was better known in Chautauquan circles, unless it was Bishop Vincent's, than that of Lewis Miller, who died in New York City, whither he had gone for treatment, on February 17. Mr. Miller began life as a poor boy, and his first occupation was that of a plasterer. He steadily rose from one position of eminence and place to another. He became famous as a Sunday school superintendent, and his school at Akron, O., is known about all over the Christian world. Humble workers need not be ashamed of their place in the Sunday school when such men as Lewis Miller and John Wanamaker are content to work by their side.

At the approaching commencement of Vanderbilt University the sermon will be preached by the Rev. Dr. J. W. Lee of St. Louis and the literary address will be delivered by Hon. J. P. Dilliver, Member of Congress from Iowa. Mr. Dilliver is a Methodist and a son of a heroic old Methodist preacher, the Rev. J. J. Dilliver, of West Virginia. Influence of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The son was the fraternal delegate to the late General Conference of the M. E. Church South, and his address was a most brilliant one. He will have a cordial welcome at Vanderbilt.

MISS BAKER'S WILL.

Miss Melissa Baker, of Baltimore, made the following bequests to institutions belonging to our Church:

- $2,000 to the Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.
- $1,000 to the Scarritt Bible and Training School, of Kansas City, Mo., with the request that the money be used in educating persons from Baltimore for mission work.
- $800 to the Woman's College of Lynchburg, Va., for the education of one or more worthy girls.
- $4,200 to the trustees of Randolph-Macon College of Virginia, to educate women at Randolph-Macon Woman's College, at Lynchburg, Va., especially for mission work.
- $3,500 to Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Baltimore, to be applied to the support of the pastor and other purposes.
- $2,000 to the same Church to aid in the redemption of the ground rent on the property.

OBITUARY.

Died, at the parsonage, located at Rustburg, Campbell county, Va., March 1, 1899, Mary S. Traynham, the beloved and devoted wife of our dear brother, Rev. D. J. Traynham.

She was born in Halifax county, Va., Oct. 11th, 1846. She was the daughter of William H. and Sarah J. Wade. Her mother had preceded her several years to her Heavenly home. Her aged and afflicted father still lives to feel and mourn the irreparable loss of his dearly beloved daughter. She was united in marriage to Brother Traynham April 26, 1865. Four sons survive her. The only daughter was translated to Heaven in the unsullied purity of infancy, being only fifteen months old when she died.

Sister Traynham made profession of faith in Christ in her eleventh year, at old Bailey's Church, on Person circuit, North Carolina Conference, and immediately joined the Church at which she was converted, in which she retained her membership until the conversion of her husband, who joined Cedar Grove, now belonging to the South of Dan circuit, Halifax county, Va., when she transferred her membership to this Church, that husband and wife might be together "in the fellowship of the saints." She never swerved in her allegiance and devotion to her saviour from her first espousal to Him in the morning of her life to its final sunset. Her path was "as the shining light, growing brighter and brighter to the perfect day." Her Christian character was manifolded in every relation of life. She was an affectionate daughter, a devoted and self-sacrificing wife, a fond and tender mother, a true and abiding friend. On every charge served by her husband, she won many warm and loving friends, and thus contributed greatly to his success in his pastoral work. It was my pleasure to know her the three last years of Bro. Traynham's ministry on the N. Mecklenburg circuit. She always welcomed and entertained me, as her presiding elder, with grace, sisterly courtesy and kindness. In her home she always made me feel at home. I was much comforted recently to read from a letter recently received from her deeply afflicted husband, the following words: "My wife thought so much of you, and appreciated your interest in her spiritual welfare. I believe, through you, she was led to a higher plane of Christian experience." The parting scene at the margin of the dark river, as described by her husband to me in the same letter, was most tender and affecting. "All of the boys got to her bedside before she died. Her vocal organs became somewhat paralyzed a day or two before she died; while conscious, she was unable to talk, but could make signs for what she needed. A few hours before she died I asked her if she was afraid to die. She shook her head very decidedly. I put other questions to her about death, to all of which she showed that all was well. I told her that these questions were not asked so much for my satisfaction as for that of others, for I knew that for thirty-four years, as my wife, she had led a life that was consistent with a high Christian character, and that I did not believe that her blessed Savior would now forsake her." She deserved this true and beautiful tribute from him who, for thirty-four years of varied experiences and trials incident to wedded life, had constantly observed her fidelity and devotion to her Saviour, her husband, and her children. No wonder she was not afraid to die. Her daily life was one of sweet communion with her Heavenly Father and she knew that death would only introduce her into the fuller, sweeter, unobstructed, and eternal communion and companionship of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Shortly before she passed away her husband requested that all might have the privilege of praying together before her spirit left the body. The Rev. Earnest Peerman, pastor of Floyd-street Church, Danville, being present, led in a sweet and appropriate prayer.

Shortly afterward she went home.

"Though dead, she yet speaketh." She cannot return to her earthly home again, but husband and children can all meet her in her Heavenly home "in the sweet by and by," in the land fairer than day.

"What a world were this, how unbearable its weight, if they whom death had sundered did not meet again."

"We weep not as those who have no hope; for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also who sleep in Jesus shall God bring with Him. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words."

GROWN WITH "HARD CASH" GUANO

On the Farm of Joseph M. Hurt, by J. P. Pettus.---Average Length of Leaf, FORTY INCHES.

MARCH 1st, 1899.

TESTIMONIALS:

MARCH 1st, 1899.

TEST MADE BY WALKER CLUB the Bellefonte Guano was applied.

TINKLING, Lunenburg Co., Va.
To the Blackstone Guano Co.,
Blackstone, Va.

Gentlemen:—A committee of the Walker Club, composed of John O. Bragg and F. S. Manson, Jorgenson, and Theo. Orgain, Tinkling, Va., have examined the results of the fertilizer test made for the club on my farm with ten of the best brands of guanos. On plot No. 1, old lot land, ten brands of fertilizers were applied, each at the rate of 800 pounds per acre, the ten sections carefully marked and treated alike. The committee picked out the section on which your Bellefonte Guano was used as the one showing the best results. On plot No. 2, four acres of new ground from old field fine land, four brands were used. Here the committee also found the best results, very decidedly in the acre on which

Yours truly,

L. A. HARDY.

I have sold the tobacco made on the four acres mentioned above. The tobacco made on the acre on which the Bellefonte was used brought thirty-four dollars and fourteen cents ($34.14) more than the tobacco made on either of the other acres. This acre, as far as I know, had no advantage over the other three acres, either in cultivation or natural fertility, or any other way. I know the tobacco did not get mixed in cutting, curing or shipping.

L. A. HARDY,
Committee for W. A. C.

I have used the several brands of guano made by the Blackstone Guano Company, for ten years and have tested them by brands of other makes on the same field and truthfully say that I think the Bellefonte and Hard Cash are unsurpassed for tobacco. It gives me pleasure to recommend the Blackstone Guano Co.'s Guano to the farmers of Southside Virginia.

JOS. M. HURT.

Nottoway County.

Gentlemen:—I used your Bellefonte Guano last year along with another brand and sold the tobacco from the Bellefonte at an average of $19 per hundred, and the tobacco grown with the other brand at an average of less than $12, showing a difference of $7 per hundred in favor of Bellefonte Guano. This ought to be enough to show what I think of Bellefonte Guano.

V. C. LOVE,
Danville, Va.

Gentlemen:—I have used your Guanos for the past ten years, and they have given me perfect satisfaction. I consider the Bellefonte the best I ever used, and shall use it the present year.

FRANK WHITE.

Nottoway Co.

Gentlemen:—I used your Bellefonte Guano last season along with other brands and am thoroughly convinced that it is the best I ever used. I have sold one barn of tobacco raised with the Bellefonte at an average of $15 around, lugs and all, which is a high average for shipping tobacco.

V. O. ANDREWS.

Dinwiddie, Co.

Blackstone Guano Co.—Gentlemen:—I bought of your agent, Mr. J. J. Mason, and used your Bellefonte Guano last season and am well pleased with the results. I have used a great many brands and think I can truly say it is the best I ever used, especially in the last ten years. Will say to my farmer friends that I think it a great mistake to use a low grade guano to save a few dollars in the ton at the expense of a larger difference in each hundred pounds of tobacco grown.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

Religion is a matter between yourself and God.—Rev. G. W. Stone, Unitarian, Kansas City.

The Supreme Interpreter.

The church will hold Christ as the supreme interpreter. In him is the interpretation of nature, of man, of God.—Dr. G. H. Combs, Kansas City

The Mind.

The mind has no conception of what it is to be tired or impaired, but it knows when its instrument is.—T. B. Wilson, Theosophist, Kansas City

The Friend of Most Value.

The most valuable friend is the noble man or woman who inspires us to be something better than ourselves.—Rev. D. N. McLaughlin, Presbyterian, Chester, S. C.

Human Glories.

How fleeting human glories are and how short is the duration of earthly happiness! The true happiness is founded on Christ in devotion to his religion.—Cardinal Gibbons, Roman Catholic, Baltimore Christianity.

Christianity has three C's—creed, code and cult. We do not want Christianity to be mere emotionalism. Neither do we want it to be mere intellectualism.—Rev. Dr. Patton, Presbyterian, Princeton, N. J.

Woman.

Woman is the most devoted creature on earth. Her devotion is not to an ideal, but to a person. Her devotion is steadfast, and in its expression she will hesitate at nothing.—Rev. William Radcliffe, Presbyterian, New York.

The Christian Faith.

It is perilous to dwell too fixedly upon any one article of the Christian faith alone, however holy. In thinking of Christ so ceaselessly as God, the Christian world forgot he was a man.—Bishop Satterlee, Episcopal, Washington.

The Church.

The church by the preaching and practice and inculcation of love has it in her power to become a tremendous factor in removing the ills and wrongs so widely and loudly complained of.—Rev. F. R. Coyle, Presbyterian, Oakland, Cal.

A New Duty.

We must boldly face the new duty that confronts us and give to those distant islands religious liberty, the open Bible, self government, Anglo-Saxon law and the separation of church and state.—Rev. W. J. Chichester, Presbyterian, Chicago.

John Baptist.

The character of John Baptist stands out, like that of Savonarola in Florence, a light in dense darkness. John was a patriot moved by the dire needs of his country, who called to the support of a decaying government the brightest and best of the nation's youth.—Rev. Mr. Rollins, San Bernardino, Cal.

The Painted Woman.

The woman who resorts to cosmetics is simply trying to pass a counterfeit bill and will sooner or later be found out, but she who trusts to her good will for all, her sympathy for suffering, her general kindness, has her hand full of gold coins which everybody wants and appreciates.—George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

Protestantism.

The essentials of Protestantism are moral unity and love. If you want God, God wants you. Any man who wants God is a priest. If God speaks to my soul, I need not get anybody to tell me what he says. The way is open between God and the human soul. True Protestantism is the joining of hands and walking with God.—Rev. Dr. Abbott, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.

Manliness.

Manliness is that which one weighs intellectually and morally. It is the substance of life with the chaff blown away. It is devotion to right in a larger way and on a generous scale. Manliness is more than titles or position. It is of intrinsic worth, and it abides in the world's memory and the world's love.—Rev. Dr. Kerr Boyce Tupper, Baptist, Philadelphia.

Faith Cures.

All cures are faith cures—there are no others—only faith in God is not folding your arms, but asking, "What can I do?" The man who goes to Havana and takes his life in his hand to ferret out and destroy disease is the man who has faith—Colonel Waring, not Harold Frederic. If you have the wish and behind it the expectation, all things are possible.—Rev. Dr. Abbott, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.

Church and Sunday School.

Our Protestant churches are too apt to let the Sunday school take the place of the church in the lives of the children, and this is a deplorable mistake. Let the church take precedence always. The Sunday school is a most excellent and blessed institution, but the child should be taught to regard it as secondary to the church, and the habit of church attendance should be deeply implanted in earliest youth in order that good fruit may be borne in later days.—Rev. John Hemphill, Presbyterian, San Francisco.

Contentment Necessary to Spiritual Growth.

In the spirit of contentment with one's lot in life and in the faithful discharge of the duties of one's station lies the way of inward and healthful growth in body, mind and spiritual grace. Heaven is use. Not in the variety of our earthly experiences, but in the use that we make of them; not in the amassing of knowledge, not in the mere acquirement of wealth, not in intellectual culture, but in a loving faith, trust in God, leading a wise and loving use of what we possess for human uplifting, lies the path of growth in those genuine human graces which fit mankind for the angelhood which is God's one grand design in the creation of men.—Rev. John Goddard, Church of New Jerusalem, Cincinnati.

EDITORIAL.

ATTENTION! ATTENTION!

If a person is to be profited by going to Church he must pay attention to the service. And to be sure that one pays attention to the service the safest plan is to pay attention to the minister. Roving eyes always bring roving thoughts. The short time of service, from one to three hours at the most, on the Sabbath day should be entirely given up to spiritual exercises, singing, praying, and meditation upon God's word. Dr. Cox, speaking of Mr. Gladstone, in the London Daily News, says:

"No matter who was the clergyman, or whether the homily were short or long, the greatest intellect of the day listened continuously. As years went on, and some degree of deafness came to Mr. Gladstone, it was his custom to leave his place in the chancel during the hymn before the sermon, and take a chair close to the south of the low pulpit.

"I can see him now—somewhat embarrassing to the nervous preacher—with Inverness cape hung back, with right elbow resting on the left hand, and right hand held behind his ear, looking earnestly and heedfully with dark, speaking eyes, up to the surpliced minister."

What an example to many persons, who gaze all over the Church, and appear to feel that the opening of the door is a special blessing, even if nothing comes in but a dog. The secret of Mr. Gladstone's attention was that when he went to Church, he did not go to criticize the preacher, or to see how the neighbors were dressed, but he went to worship God. If any one who reads this is troubled with wandering thoughts in God's house, let him control his eyes first of all, and fix his gaze on the minister, as a messenger of God.

PREACHERS' CHILDREN.

The "Household" says that Dr. Can-doole, the French scientist, builds a strong argument against the celibacy of the Roman Catholic priesthood, on the ground that clerical households are the very best places in which to raise children. He gives a list of some of the great men who have been the sons of ministers, from which we append a few:

Agassiz, Berzelius, Boerhaave, Encke,

Enler, Linnaeus, Olbers, Hallam, Hobbes, Emerson, Sismondi, Henry Clay, Aaron Burr, the Everetts, Cleveland, Arthur; Swift, Lockhart, Macaulay, Sterne, Hazlitt, Thackeray, Bancroft, Holmes, Kingsley, Mathew, Arnold, Sir Christopher Wren, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Lord Nelson, Young, Cowper, Thomson, Coleridge, Heber, Tennyson, Lowell, Dugald Stewart, Cudworth, Reid, Brown, Boyle, Bentham, Hallam, Hobbes, Jonathan, Edwards, Archbishop Lightfoot, John Wesley, Charles Wesley, the Spurgeons, the Beechers, Stillingneet, and a host of others.

The saying that preachers' children are the worst children arises more from the unconscious demand of people that they shall not be real children at all, but grown people or small angels. Then, too, when preachers' children go wrong much prominence is given to the fact that they are preachers' children, and a few black sheep give color to the whole flock. That the saying is false can be shown by taking any given number of families of preachers and an equal number of families of doctors, lawyers, farmers, etc., and comparing results.

PARTIAL JUSTICE.

J. Castleman, of Winchester, was found guilty of criminal assault upon his step-daughter, and sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary.—The Times.

The girl was but a child, only twelve years old, and the man had attempted to assault her several times but failed, but in January succeeded. His wife and the child were the witnesses and he threatened to kill them if they told.

Such a verdict is a disgrace to our State. No negro who assaults a woman on the public highway deserves hanging any more than this man does. The jury found him guilty. If they believed him guilty they should have sentenced him to death, for such a man is worse than a negro beast. Nothing would have kept a negro from the gallows had he assaulted a twelve-year-old white child. The man's color spoke of higher privileges and opportunities and should have brought as severe punishment. All such men, white or black, should be hung!

OUR STATISTICS FOR 1898.

Some weeks ago the RECORDER published the statistics of our Church for 1898, taken from the Independent's yearly review of the Churches. This review had been published in the RECORDER every year since its establishment as a paper, and it had always been found to be approximately correct. This report showed a decided decrease in our membership, and it was stated that if this be the case, it was cause for great humiliation to us as a Church, and the opinion was expressed that the Publishing House scandal was responsible for it in large measure. By this it was meant that the ministry and leading laymen had been so much disturbed by the scandal that they had not been able to work with their accustomed power and earnestness, and the call to sinners to give up worldly ways and living was greatly weakened by the knowledge of this sin in our own camp. One of the Publishing House organs attacked the RECORDER very fiercely, saying, virtually, that there was no foundation for such statements, and that they ought to be withdrawn, denying that there would be any decrease, etc. To this partisan paper the RECORDER made no reply, waiting until the official reports were given out by Dr. Tigert. Below is given the statement of Dr. Tigert. From this it appears that there is a decrease of about 8,000 members, and that our average yearly increase has been 37,000, so that the results for 1898 are 15,000 less than our yearly average. The Publishing House folks and their organs and friends say that this is nothing but a COINCIDENCE, that it would have been the same way if there had been no "War Claim." This, however, can be believed by very few. There are other reasons operating to bring about this sad and humiliating result, but the conduct of our Book Committee, Book Agents, many Conference organs, and many leading preachers, and some laymen has struck the Church a staggering blow, has weakened the faith of many in the power of the Church to resist temptation and has given to our adversaries occasion to blaspheme.

Some other reasons operating to bring about this decrease will be given later on. Dr. Tigert's article follows:

"The returns from forty-six of the forty-seven Annual Conferences as now tabulated in the Book Editor's office lead to the conclusion that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has sustained a net loss of about eight thousand (8,000) members during the year 1898. Twenty-one Annual Conferences—namely: Baltimore, Brazil Mission, China Mission, Columbia, Denver, Holston, Japan Mission, New Mexico, North Alabama, North Carolina, North Georgia, North Mississippi, South Carolina, St. Louis, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, Western North Carolina, and Western Virginia—show a net increase in their membership. The total of this net increase is 9,240. Twenty-five Annual Conferences—namely: Alabama, Arkansas, Central Mexico Mission, Illinois, East Columbia, Florida, German Mission, Indian Mission, Kentucky, Little Rock, Louisiana, Louisville, Memphis, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, North Texas, Northwest Mexican Mission, Northwest Texas, Pacific, South Georgia, Southwest Missouri, West Texas, Western, and White River—show a net decrease in their membership. The total of this net decrease is 17,300. Subtracting the increase of 9,240 from the decrease of 17,300, the remainder is 8,060, which presents approximately the net loss of our membership for 1898.

"No returns have yet been received from the East Texas Conference. The only revision of the figures furnished by the Secretaries of the Annual Conferences made in the Book Editor's office is the verification of the additions. Both in the copy and in the proof, every column of figures is freshly added and the true total set down. Comparison for determining increase or decrease is then made with the General Minutes of the preceeding year.

"The only check upon the accuracy of the preceeding figures at present applicable is as follows: The total membership of the Church for 1898, taking the figures of 1897 for the East Texas Conference, is 1,158,554. The total membership for 1897 is 1,166,757. These totals include in both instances white members, colored members, and Indians, but exclude the ministry, traveling and local. The net decrease as shown by these totals is 8,203. The figures of a few Annual Conferences await verification before passing into the plates.

"Except as it may be affected by the returns from the East Texas Conference, the statement that our net loss of membership for the year is about 8,000 may be accepted as substantially accurate.

"In round numbers the net increase in the membership of the Church during the last ten years have been as follows: For 1897, 16,000; for 1896, 37,000; for 1895, 25,000; for 1894, 55,000; for 1893, 40,000; for 1892, 39,000; for 1891, 48,000; for 1890, 41,000; for 1889, 37,000; for 1888, 32,000. The average annual increase in the membership of the Church during the decade, as shown by these figures, is 37,000. The year 1898 with its decrease of 8,000 is thus seen to fall 15,000 behind the average annual record of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the last ten years."

ENGLISH RITUALISTS.

LONDON, April 11.—After a long debate upon the alleged lawlessness of the ritualistic practices by the English Church Union, comprising more than 4,000 clergymen, the House of Commons this evening unanimously adopted a resolution proposed by Samuel Hoare, conservative member for Norwich, and accepted by Arthur J. Belfour, first lord of the treasury and government leader.

This resolution declares that the House "deplores the spirit of lawlessness shown by certain members of the Church of England and confidently hopes that the ministers of the crown will not recommend any clergyman for preferment unless satisfied that he will obey the bishops and the prayer-book." —Baltimore Sun.

This action of the House of Commons shows that the English nation does not propose to allow the High-Church clergyman of the Church of England to carry on Roman Catholic practices and yet be supported by the treasury of the nation. For many years the Romanist proselyters have been working in the Church of England, and at last they held a convention, representing 4,000 clergymen, which convention declared its independence of the authority of the Bishops and said these clergymen would hold mass and have the confessional and any other practice they pleased which was not prohibited by the prayer-book. This open defiance of the Church authorities has stirred up the English nation, and the Roman Catholics have found out that Protestantism is a very real thing in the Church of England. This subject is a political one in England, for the Church is a State Church, and is supported from the national treasury, and the Bishops are members of the House of Lords, and vote on political questions. The people have been holding mass-meetings and demanding that the government shall denounce the conduct of the Ritualists. The resolution passed above is the result. It will not settle the question permanently, however. The question will never be settled till there is an entire separation of Church and State, as there is in this country, and the Church pays its own expenses by the free-will offerings of the people. These Romanizing priests would leave the Church of England were it not for the fact the State pays their salaries, and they are not sufficiently brave in their faith to take the risk of getting a support from their followers. They are thorough Romanists in this, for Rome always puts her fingers in the public treasury if possible.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BROTHERHOOD.

(BY MALINDA CLEAVER FAVILLE.)

Six months ago our mouths were full of speech about our new-found national brotherhood. Everybody talked about it, but almost everybody forgot that the relationship had always existed, and the new feature was reconciliation, more or less perfect. The sweetness of the occasion was marred by the fact that the New England press was inclined to receive the Southern brother as a returned prodigal to whom much had been forgiven. Now love does not say, "behold the concessions I make," it simply forgives and loves. To one who does not think in terms of Quincy granite, or express the emotions after the fashion of sunny Virginia, the effort of the two extremes to understand each other was an interesting study. The curious phenomena in the case were due to the fact that there was apparent an effort at mutual understanding instead of a natural growth into it. The demonstration which was made had the effect of clearing away much of the wreckage of a generation ago, which kept the two extremes of our country from meeting. The bond that will hold us will not be like the single hawser, which lets all go when it snaps, but rather like the crossing back and forth of nerve fibres in the upper spinal cord, bind the two sides of the body so intimately that they work together to accomplish one purpose. They make a bridge upon which any impression may cross over, but which it is almost impossible to separate into its ultimate fibres, each one of which has its part in the whole. The slender ties are coming one by one, their individual growth only apparent to keen observers.

Whatever may have provoked the race war in North Carolina, one of its results is this remarkable expression of opinion by a Boston religious weekly: "We doubt exceedingly whether, if the North had it to do over again, it would force upon the South much of the legislation of the reconstruction period. To our minds the giving of MANHOOD suffrage to the slaves was as unjust to them as it was to the whites of the South. It has done little more than to bring law into contempt in a section of the country where respect for the law was originally very strong." In a review of Mr. Pages "Red Roth," the New York Outlook says: "Northerners will make here and there notes of protest as they read, but if they know anything at first hand of the situation with which Mr. Page is dealing, they will not deny his candor and, on the whole, his dispassionateness." These are little threads. Men like Gen. Wheeler, who say the old blue "feels well" when they put it on, and who are not afraid to wear it through Santiago mud and rain, or through the mud at Monatuk Point, strengthen the bond. Every Southerner who gets a conception of things from the Northern point of view, every Northerner who comes South and learns to understand the conditions of Southern life is helping to make the tie perfect.

We shall begin to forget that an awful gap has yawned between us and swallowed up the beloved of both sides, when we stop looking back at it all the time. The difference was; we shall not see it if we look forward, for in the time to come we look for no fraternal quarrels. The brotherhood has always been, but brotherhood is not a term synonymous with union between either nations or individuals. The perfect union is to come, as it will. Dewey and Wheeler, Lee and Roosevelt, belong to the nation; the new trust of the many isles of the sea demands the best of both North and South. In common service we shall soonest find perfect union.

REV. J. K. CLAYTON.

The following, taken from the Lynchburg News, gives the facts in reference to the death of Bro. Clayton. His death is another surprise. He was the picture of health a few weeks ago. He was an earnest, faithful man, with a big, loving heart, and was doing a good work. This is our fifth death in less than one-half of the Conference year.

"Rev. James K. Clayton, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, on Cleveland avenue, South Lynchburg, died at 9:15 this morning at the Home and Retreat.

"Mr. Clayton had an attack of pneumonia in January, and a few weeks ago was stricken with typhoid fever. He was taken to the Home and Retreat about a week ago.

"Deceased was a native of Brunswick county, thirty-five years of age, single, and joined the Virginia Conference about two years ago, when he was sent here to his first charge.

"Besides the church in South Lynchburg, he had another at Dearington and one some eight or nine miles in the county. No more faithful minister has ever visited this section than this consecrated young man, who has often walked to his church in the county, preached and returned on foot to conduct two more services the same day. He was faithful to the last and even when attack by fever he insisted upon holding the usual prayer meeting. Mr. Clayton's relatives have been notified by telegraph of his death, and in their reply they will probably designate where he is to be buried.

"It is said that he was a Master Mason of a lodge in the neighborhood of his old home.

"The remains of Mr. Clayton, will be temporarily placed in a vault at the Spring Hill Cemetery pending the decision of his family as to where he will be finally interred. Funeral was conducted Sunday afternoon from the church near the Cotton Mill, of which he was pastor, by Rev. Asbury Christian, assisted by Rev. W. R. Evans and Rev. G. H. Lambeth.

DEATH OF A PREACHER'S SON.

The Times reports the death of Dr. W. B. Lafferty, a practicing physician, of Crozet, and the son of Dr. J. J. Lafferty. He was found in a mangled and unconscious condition on the C. & O. Railroad track, on last Sunday, and died in a few hours without recovering consciousness. He was evidently run over by a passing train. He was married and leaves a wife and two small children. Dr. Lafferty will have the sympathy and prayers of the brethren in this sudden and sore bereavement.

KIPLING ON CHILD DEATH.

The following letter of Rudyard Kipling to an author who had lost his little son, gains a special interest from the sorrow which has come, since the letter was written, to Mr. Kipling himself:

"People say that kind of wound heals. It doesn't. It only skins over; but there is at least some black consolation to be got from the old and bitter thought that the boy is safe from the chances of the after years. I don't know that that helps, unless you happen to know some man who is under deeper sorrow than yours—a man, say, who has watched the child of his begetting go body and soul to the devil, and feels that he is responsible. But it is the mother that bore him who suffers most when the young life goes out.—Rochester Express."

TWENTIETH CENTURY FUND NOTES.

The Maryland Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church has adopted resolutions calling upon the various Conferences of their denomination to unite in a general movement to raise $200,000 and to bring 50,000 souls into the experience of saving grace. The double work will go well together.

From the London Methodist Times we learn that the English Congregationalists have accepted the proposal of their venerable leader, Dr. Guinness Rogers, that they should raise at least one-half a million guineas (over $2,500,000) as a Twentieth Century Thank-Offering.

And so the movement spreads, and it is possible that not only world-wide Methodism, but world-wide Christianity, will bring up to the Lord a great Thank-Offering. May it be so!

BALTIMORE CONFERENCE.

This Conference has been in session the past week at Washington. As there is no other Conference in session at this season, there is always a full attendance of connectional officers. On Saturday the Conference discussed the methods used by the representatives of the Church in obtaining the passage of the bill through Congress appropriating $288,000 to pay the claim of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Publishing House. The following resolution was adopted by a vote of 110 to 48 after an exciting debate:

"RESOLVED: That the Committee on Publishing Interests be, and they are hereby, instructed to consider what action, if any, is necessary to be taken by the Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, touching the methods used by our representatives in their efforts to secure the passage of the bill by Congress granting the claim of $288,000 for the use and damage of our publishing house by the army of the United States during the civil war."

The Washington Church, although it entertained the Conference this year, insisted on having it again next year, and it was so decided. The Conference had quite a discussion on the time of meeting, but they put it the first week in April. A resolution was passed expressing sympathy toward Dr. Lafferty in his affliction. Dr. John A. Kern was re-elected to preach the sermon next year.

INTERNATIONAL EPWORTH LEAGUE CONVENTION.

The International Convention of Epworth Leaguers will be held in Indianapolis, July 20-23. The local authorities report there is every indication that there will be 50,000 regular Epworth League delegates present, and they are advising that persons who are certainly expecting to attend, engage accommodations at once. Indianapolis is a beautiful city, with a population in 1890 of 105,436. This was divided in the Church preferences of its people as follows: Methodists, 27,587; Presbyterians, 13,321; Baptists, 5,599; Roman Catholics, 9,871, other bodies, 36,274. It is pre-eminently, therefore, a Methodist city, and is centrally located. From Virginia the expense of travel ought not to exceed $12 to $15 round trip, and with a good delegation ought to be even less.

THE EPWORTH LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

Our Epworth League Conference, to meet here 28-30 inst., ought to be an occasion of interest and profit to the two Presiding Elders' Districts concerned. There will be a program of live subjects, discussed by capable men, who are both interested and experienced on these topics. Dr. A. Coke Smith, a man of national reputation, and attractive on any platform, is expected to speak on Friday evening. All the ministers of the two entire districts are expected. Also the most prominent laymen, if we can get them. Female workers will aid in song and essays, on appropriate themes. Good music may be expected, notably that furnished by the young ladies of the Blackstone Female Institute, who will give a concert in honor of the convention. Blackstone hospitality will be in evidence, and the Church here will be on her mettle, and especially will our home Leaguers be in requisition. For the Committee on Homes, we request that the delegates elect and ex officio, let us hear from them just rapidly as possible.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

CONFERENCE.

Bro. Wallace has begun a series of meetings at Fifth-Street.

Bro. Crawley has gone to West Point to assist Bro. Bullard in a meeting.

The Easter offering of Main-Street, Suffolk, was considerably over $300.

There were several professions of faith at the meeting at Central, Manchester.

An Epworth League has been organized at Courtland, with sixteen members.

Revival services are in progress at Cumberland-Street and Huntersville churches.

Rev. S. C. Hatcher preached for his old congregation at Barton Heights on Sunday night.

Revival services are being held at Trinity, Norfolk. Much interest has already been manifested.

The Annual meeting of the Woman's Home Missionary Society will be held in Farmville next month.

It is rumored that Bro. Amiss will probably make his home at Whealton, while traveling the district.

Bro. Vaden announces the Portsmouth District Conference for Franklin, Southampton county, August 1st to 3d.

Bro. J. W. S. Robins is projecting a new Church at Reedville, a stirring community within the bounds of his charge.

The Rappahannock District Conference will meet on King George Circuit in July. It is said that Bishop Wilson has been requested to attend.

Rev. L. P. Bransford is now in the second week of the Broad-Street meeting. There is much interest and a number have professed faith.

The Orphanage Committee ordered by the last session of the Virginia Conference, will meet at Epworth Church, Norfolk, Thursday, April 13.

The revival at Centenary Church, Lynchburg, is growing in power. There have been several professions. Brother Beauchamp is still with the pastor.

Dr. W. J. Young will deliver the annual sermon before the Monumental Auxiliary of the Woman's Missionary Society on the second Sunday in May.

There is a growing interest in the meeting at Ashbury, Richmond, and the unconverted of the congregation are being deeply moved.

Owing to the continued illness of his sister, Mrs. Rice, Dr. Coke Smith is still in South Carolina. Dr. Smith's pulpit was filled Sunday by Dr. R. M. Saunders.

The papers state that Brother R. G. James has been operated on for appendicitis at the Retreat for the Sick in Richmond. At this writing he is said to be doing well.

A Book Social is to be given by the Epworth League and Sunday-School of Epworth, Norfolk. There will be an entertaining program and the admission fee will be a good book for the library.

The Richmond Sunday-School Union met last Sunday at Broad-Street. The address was made by Rev. R. F. Gayle, on the "Duty of Parents to Their Children in Connection with the Sunday-School and Methods of Teaching."

Central Sunday school, Portsmouth had the largest percentage of members in attendance Sunday morning within the history of the church. Out of a total membership of 280 there were 275 members present—a percentage of 98 3-14ths.—Landmark.

There were fifteen professions as the result of the meeting at Louisa C. H., at which the pastor was assisted by Bro. Bransford. Ten joined the Methodist Church and the rest other Churches in the place.

Rev. E. M. Jordan, of Ashland, is the guest of Rev. W. T. Green. Mr. Jordan conducted services at the Main-Street Methodist Church last Wednesday night, and delivered a sermon which created a very profound impression on his hearers.—Suffolk Herald.

Our plucky little band at Whealton have built a new Church to replace the one destroyed by fire. It is nearly ready for painting, and it has been decided to dedicate it the first Sunday in May. Our brethren are greatly to be commended for their push and consecration, but they ought to insure it this time.

The Norfolk Sunday-School Union met at Centenary Church. Rev. L. T. Williams spoke on "The Origin and History of the Sunday-School, Its Relation to the Church, and What Constitutes an Efficient Superintendent and Teacher." The question, "What are the best methods of securing and retaining attendance upon the Sunday-School," was discussed by Messrs. Geo. W. Roper, M. C. Keeling, W. W. Vicar, and W. M. Jones.

The official board of Denny-Street, Richmond, is seriously considering the question of building a new Church. Brother Routten has been working for it, and plans have been prepared for a Church of Gothic design, dimensions 100x70 feet with a seating capacity of 900. Bro. Routten has the hearty support of his people in this movement. He has had some experience in such matters, having been very successful in the building of the LeKies Memorial Church, at Norfolk, which cost $14,000.

The Methodist ministers, of Accomac and Northampton counties have formed an association and will hold monthly meetings. The first of these meetings was held Tuesday, the 28th of March, at the Keller parsonage. Owing to the rain in the morning the attendance was not as large as otherwise it would have been, but the day was one of unusual interest and pleasure to all present. The next meeting will be held at the Pungoteague parsonage Tuesday, April 11.—Enterprise.

At a business meeting of the stewards of Chestnut-Street M. E. Church, Berkeley, Wednesday night, interesting and encouraging reports were read, showing the Church to be in a better financial condition than at any previous time in its history. The stewards recommended that a handsome Sunday-school and lecture-room be erected in the rear of the Church, and that extensive improvements be made on the front. A tower and a three chime bell will be added. The cost of these improvements contemplated is estimated at $7,000.—Virginia-Pilot.

The congregation of Central M. E. Church has had in view the erection of a mission chapel in Cottage Place. Their plans are now about consummated, as the building committee has purchased two lots on the northwest corner of Virginia avenue and Queen streets, and awarded the contract for the erection of the chapel to Mr. L. W. Hodges, he being the lowest bidder. Work on the building will be begun at once. When the chapel is ready for occupancy it is proposed to hold an afternoon Sunday-school, and the Rev. R. F. Beadles, pastor of Central Church, will preach every Sunday afternoon. The cost of lots and chapel will be between $1200 and $1300.—Landmark.

THE JUNIOR RECORDER.

RICHMOND AND BLACKSTONE, VA., APRIL 13, 1899.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON IV, SECOND QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, APRIL 23.

Text of the Lesson, John xiv, 1-14.
Memory Verses, 2-6—Golden Text, John xiv, 6—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

1. "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me." It is the last night before His great agony, and one would think that He would need some one to comfort Him, but with entire self renunciation He comforts these weak ones and us through them. He teaches us that in the world we shall have tribulation (xvi, 33), but we need not have our hearts troubled. In Math. xxiv, 6, He says: "Ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars. See that ye be not troubled." In Isa. xxvi, 3, the secret of perfect peace is shown to be a mind staid on Him.

2. "I go to prepare a place for you." When on earth, He lived for us and died for us and rose again. Now in heaven He ever liveth to make intercession for us and, as He said, is preparing a place for us. We may not understand these many mansions now and just what they mean, but it should suffice to know that He who loved us enough to give Himself for us and bear our sins in His own body on the cross is preparing a place for us in glory. It will be worthy of Him who prepares it.

3. "I will come again and receive you unto Myself." He wants us with Him to see and share His glory (chapter xvii, 22, 24). Concerning His coming again see Acts i, 11; 1 Thess. iv, 16; Heb. ix, 28; Titus ii, 13; Rev. i, 7-12. Do not think of His coming as death or the coming of the Spirit at Pentecost or any other event, but always as His literal personal return, first to the air for His saints and later to the earth with His saints to set up His kingdom here on the earth with Israel as a center.

4. "And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know." He had often told them that He had come from the Father and would return to the Father. He had also told them that He would die and rise again the third day. So had they believed His words they might have known much more than they did. To Him the going to the Father was very real, for with the Father He had been from all eternity.

5. "Lord, we know not." Thus said Thomas, who also after the resurrection said, "Except I shall see, I will not believe" (chapter xx, 25). He knew not because he believed not. Some want to see, and some want to understand before they will believe. Such not only grieve the Spirit, but lose much personal joy. To them the Lord says: "Be not faithless, but believing. Blessed are they that have not seen, yet have believed" (chapter xx, 27-29).

6. "Jesus saith unto him, I am the way and the truth and the life." He is the new and living way (Heb. x, 20), in contrast to all the forms of the ceremonial law, and as the antitype of all types and substance of all shadows. He is the way for God is the God of truth (Isa. lvi, 10), and His word is truth (John xvii, 17). In Him is life, and He is our life. He that hath the Son hath life (John i, 4; Col. iii, 4; 1 John v, 11, 12). There is no other way to heaven or to the Father (Acts iv, 12).

7. "If ye had known Me, ye should have known My Father also, and ye have seen Him." To know God is life indeed and peace and joy and a foretaste of heaven. It is more than all the riches or wisdom or might of this world (John xvii, 3; John xxi, 21; Jer. ix, 23, 24). How wise are they who give themselves up to know our Lord Jesus Christ as revealed to us in the Scriptures, and thus to know the Father!

8. "Philip saith unto him, Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us." He had said many such words—as "The Father sent Me," "The Father is with Me," "I and My Father are one," "I do always those things that please Him," and from such sayings they might have gathered that to know Him was to know the Father.

9. "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." He is the image of the invisible God, the brightness of His glory, and the express image of His person (Col. i, 15; Heb. i, 3). Shall we ever see the Father? We shall expect to and yet be satisfied if in the glory we see only, as John saw, on the throne one like the appearance of a jasper and a sardine stone (Rev. iv, 3). Whom no man hath seen, nor can see (1 Tim. vi, 16) may mean no mortal man.

10. "Believest thou not that I am in the Father and the Father in Me?" Then He adds that all His words and works were not His, but the Father's. He takes no credit to Himself for anything. As to His words He says elsewhere that the Father gave Him a commandment what He should say and speak (xii, 49). It was the same with prophets and apostles; they were given by God the words which they should speak (Ex. iv, 12; Jer. i, 7, 9; Ezek. ii, 7; iii, 4; Math. x, 20).

11. "Believe Me for the very works' sake." In the previous verse He asks if they do not believe that He is in the Father and the Father in Him, but now He commands them to believe it and calls upon the works as evidence. In chapter v, 26-29, He says that the Father and His word and works all bear witness that He is what He says He is—one with the Father, the Lord God of the holy prophets, the Messiah of Israel, the Son of God. He is the Wonderful, Counselor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace (Isa. ix, 6).

12. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on Me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do, because I go unto My Father." Thus will be manifest the union of the believer with Christ, as His union with the Father was made manifest. It is God who worketh in us both to will and to do of His good pleasure, and He will work in us those things which are pleasing in His sight (Phil. ii, 13; Heb. xiii, 21).

13. "And whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son." We are supposed to ask only for those things which will glorify God. When the lame man at the gate of the temple or Aeneas or others were healed in the name of the Lord Jesus, then God was glorified in Him. When souls are saved, God is glorified in Christ. When saved ones are wholly set apart for God, then He is glorified. When by His grace we manifest a meek and quiet spirit under trials, He is glorified.

14. "If he shall ask anything in My name, I will do it." I believe that the key to these two verses with their seemingly unlimited possibilities is in the words "in My name," which, as I understand it, means just what He would ask if He was here. In His name suggests that we are about His business, seeking only His glory as He ever sought the Father's glory.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning April 23, "The Man With the Pitcher."
Text, Mark xiv, 12-16.

Women are the water carriers in the east, and for a man to be bearing a pitcher of water would be so unusual a circumstance as to attract attention and serve as a guide for the disciples. That Jesus should know those whom He was sending to Jerusalem to prepare the Passover feast would meet such a man seems a remarkable evidence of supernatural knowledge on His part. The lesson for the thought of the League lies, however, in a different direction. The occupation of the man with the pitcher seemed undoubtedly to him and those who saw him menial if not worse. He may have felt sensitive at being compelled by force of circumstances to appear publicly doing a woman's ordinary work, but the very fact of its unusual nature served as a mark by which he became guide to the disciples and the Master.

No one knows what simple act of daily life may at any moment serve to point one out as special messenger for divine service. No honest act is ignoble. No occupation is shameful if it be morally pure. False shame and mock modesty should never prevent the faithful discharge of plain duty, however irksome that duty may be.

Not long since three men were candidates for the presidency of one of our state universities. Their qualifications were so evenly balanced that the trustees had much difficulty in choosing. The question turned on personal peculiarities at length. It was noted that one of the candidates in sitting did not cross his legs. It was a simple thing, but it marked the gentleman, and that little item turned the balance in his favor. He had been unconscious of any peculiarity in his action, but had acted naturally to himself.

Each person should so cultivate the right spirit that all acts flow spontaneously in right channels. Then they will become guides at all times safely to be followed by the messengers of the Master. Carry your pitcher faithfully and leave the rest to God.

General Superintendence.

We occasionally hear the desire expressed that our bishops may be restricted and given charge over a specified diocese so as to become better known to the people and more efficient in caring for the work. To such wishers we commend a study of the map of our church territory and the movements of our bishops in supervising our worldwide work. Bishop Warren is in South America. He visits the western coast, crosses the Andes to Buenos Ayres and the eastern stations, and goes thence to Europe. He surveys the continental field of South America. Bishop McCabe has been carefully superintending and inspecting our missions in Mexico. Bishop Walden returns to Europe for a second

LIFE IN LITTLE NUTSHELLS.

"LORDY! HOW THAT FISH AM SHRUNK?"

XIII. EXPANSION VERSUS CONTRACTION.

DO you ever notice the difference in the impression made upon your mind by seeing things expand or contract?

The one produces terror, and the other mirth. There is nothing funnier than shrinkage. A large proportion of the world's humor turns upon it.

An old Texan told me that some twelve-foot cotton-wood rails lying in the sun, had shrunk thirteen feet! Isn't that funny?

A recent series of illustrations in a comic paper, exhibits a hunter starting proudly forth in a buck-skin suit. A heavy rain came on, and the clothes shrunk and shrunk until there was nothing left but a little trunk around the loins! That is funny too.

And then there is that old yarn about the hunter who crawled into a hollow log to escape a storm. As soon as the log was thoroughly soaked it began to contract upon him, and finally held him as in a vise. After vainly trying every means of escape he began to repent and pray. Suddenly, upon remembering that on the previous Sabbath he had surreptitiously dropped a button into a contribution box, he was so withered up with shame, and felt so small that he easily crawled out.

My favorite story is that of the old negro, who had caught an enormous catfish, and then in excess of triumph had fallen asleep. While he slept (like the man in whose field the devil sowed the tares) a little pickaninny came by with a very small bullhead. The temptation was too great! He substituted the little bullhead for the great catfish, and stole away rejoicing. At last the old negro awoke, rubbed his eyes, turned the little minnow over and over and exclaimed in astonishment, "Lordy! How that fish am shrunk!"

Other things besides fishes shrink—men for example!

There was "Theudas, who, boasting himself to be somebody, to whom a number of men, about four hundred, joined themselves; who was slain, and all, as many as obeyed him, were scattered and brought to naught."

One moment, the Young Pretender was a king with an army and banners—and the next, a fugitive in a row boat.

But not to depend too much upon history for our examples—there is old Gradgrind.

When I first met him, twenty years ago, he was full of the milk of human kindness—a buoyant, cheerful, generous, ardent, expansive man. Now, he is selfish, mean and stingy. The milk is all dried up. The sap is all vanished. He hangs to the tree of life like a withered persimmon.

Somehow, there is nothing funny in that. There is another kind of shrinkage.

It is in the external elements of the man's life—his outward trappings and adornments, and it has been going on at a great pace in these last four or five years.

My friend Heartsease, has been caught in the pinch! Almost every thing he had in the world has gone—horses, carriages, houses and lands. He has scarcely as much left to cover him as the buckskin hunter. But mind you—it was like the withering and dying of the husk of the seed!

There was shrinkage enough in his business; but none in Heartsease himself.

He has fairly sprouted, and his growing into a new beauty like a great oak tree emerging from the perishable shell of an acorn.

the world did she know I was a preacher? I was inside of the disguise of a gray suit. I had left my silk hat at home, where the servant girl might brush its fur the wrong way, and had donned a brown derby and tan shoes. But, alas; I recollected that I still carried a white cravat at my throat. I would change it at the first furnishing store, I thought. Then I remembered that I had often been told that preachers could be picked out anywhere by the very swing of their gait, and I wondered if it was true. I aroused myself from this reverie to remember that she said something about my defending some defenseless young lady on the train. After scanning the car, I said, "Madam, I fail to see any defenseless young lady on board." That remark was the match that lit the fuse.

"How dare you insult me, sir, by insinuating that I am not a single young woman, even if my hairs are a little gray from the sick headaches I had when a child. As if you didn't realize that I was pleading my own case. I didn't expect the usual harshness of the male sex from a clergyman, but even ministers have changed in the last quarter of a century, at least, so my uncle Cyrus says. They don't seem to realize that the young and inexperienced need protection."

"THE RURAL COUPLE ACROSS THE AISLE."

I knew that silence was golden, but I was talked at the whole morning and tasted choice doses that she fixed up to suit my case whenever she spoke. The poor newsboy, who sinned in no other way than by working for his company, was vigorously denounced for charging a dime apiece for his oranges, when she had bought them at Farmersburg for 15 cents a dozen. The brakeman received a Mary Ellen Lease lecture for opening the door at a flag station. The conductor was snarled at for telling her that she would have to lay over four hours at the junction. Strong sniffs at her smelling-bottle had to be resorted to occasionally to help her out when she came to a hard place, and I felt like singing "Blow ye the trumpet, blow," when the junction was reached.

The rural couple across the aisle are a type of a large class of travelers. They have been munching doughnuts, apples and sandwiches for two hours. They started soon after they boarded the train, and their jaws will have to keep time to the tingling of their excited nerves until they reach their station. Even if they only go across one township, these folks must always take along a basketful of lunch. Sandwiches and a train-ride are to them as inseparable as pork and beans are to a country Ladies' Aid Society meeting. Every depot and passenger train has its quota of these voracious travelers. They never guage their eating arrangements by the clock. The bare thought that they are on a train is sufficient warrant for compressing five meals in one stomach within an hour's ride. Then they tell each other how the motion of the cars always makes their heads ache, and how the sudden stop of the train invariably unsettles their digestive machinery.

I confess, however, to slipping into the dining car the minute the proverbial announcement about dinner was given. I thought of the bank note held in reserve by a safety pin and my vest lining, and the Deacon's advice about eschewing sausage and crackers. There is a pleasant sensation connected with eating in a hotel that is flying through farms and villages at a mile a minute. No vacation is complete without the luxury, even if sermons must be written on the inside of grocers' bags for the next year, to square the account. The manners of a dining car waiter are a combined study in elocution, gymnastics and table etiquette, especially when you press a shining quarter to the palm of his hand. It is interesting to watch the lady ahead, who is ordering too much to be consistent with good breeding. For her benefit I shouted out my order, which was the whole bill of fare in reality, and I was pleased to note that she ordered an additional dish or two on the strength of my enormous trayful.

No, the waxed-moustached, snug-fitting gentleman who stands with such dignity at the end of the car, is not the general superintendent of the road. He is merely the steward, and takes your dollar as if you had eaten ninety-nine cents' worth.

"What," cries the old lady with the quaker bonnet, "A dollar for a cup of coffee and a bun? It's scan'lous. I thought it 'ud be not more'n ten cents."

By the time she reaches her seat, the facts in the case dawn upon her, and she says to her companion

"I've a good mind to go back and eat the rest of that dollar's wu'th. Yo' always get takin' in travelin'."

"Now I lay me down to sleep," is not the prayer to say when you are about to roll into a sleeping car for the first time. The sentiment of the first line is, for once, false to the core. "No sleep till morn," is far more appropriate, even if it was written concerning a tavern dance given for Wellington's pretty red-coated cavalrymen over in Belgium. By the way, while it is quite proper, and even a duty to say your prayers in a sleeper, all the traditions of youth regarding bedside prayers must be temporarily suspended. Mother used to teach us boys that prayers repeated lazily lying in bed, or kneeling on the bed, didn't count. She said that children must kneel beside the bed each time, even if the cold floor did curl up the little toes and chill the marrow bones. But in a sleeping car, it's different. You say your prayers somewhere behind the curtain. But if a fellow really enters into the sentiment of his devotions, he's apt to forget that he is not at home, and when he is finished he rises to crack his skull against the ceiling that forms the ground-work of the upper berth. I did that very thing, but, fortunately, I did not say anything worse than "Ouch."

"HE IS MERELY THE STEWARD."

After you have been lying there exactly two minutes, you begin to wonder how your neighbors are getting on. So you peep out from behind your curtain. Nothing but drapery is visible, excepting, perhaps, a row or two of toes between the draperies' edge and the floor, and nothing is heard except the snoring of some experienced old traveler who seems to be in competition with the panting of the locomotive.

Then time hangs heavy. Perhaps you might raise the blind and look out of the window a while. There's a light in that farm house. Perhaps the farmer's daughter is entertaining her beau. Perhaps the man and his wife are talking about the mortgage on the place. Perhaps the boys are melting lead to put on their fishing lines, and getting their hooks ready to go fishing on Saturday.

There is some one walking along with a lantern. Has he been to singing school, or prayer meeting? Or has he just finished doing his chores? Maybe he's going to a neighbor's house to borrow something.

After a great deal of tossing and dozing, you look out again, and the early morning has come. You're on the wide prairie, and the train is whirling through great fields of green. You're out of doors for sure, for everything is spacious and nothing is crowded but yourself in your little six-by-four bunk. An hour more and the porter is brushing you off, guaging the operation by the size of the change in his hand. Here's the depot, and the happiest part of the short vacation is spent.

You wonder why I say that? It is because prospect is always more than realization. The visit soon gets monotonous and the trip home is not so pleasant as the journey week-before-last. But enough of the Deacon's bank note is left to enjoy the same conveniences as then. And, after all, it's easier to preach and to visit than before. Now, I enjoy that vacation in memory.

When its recollections get threadbare, it will be time to plan for next spring's trip. I pray that the wheat market will be on the Deacon's side till that time comes.

A Christian Captain.

Battles do not more clearly reveal cowards than they display the men of courage. One of the most gratifying features of our recent war with Spain has been the prominence given to Christian courage. It is undeniable that the victory of our arms at sea was more due to the moral caliber of our men than to the superiority of our armament. Captain Philip of the Texas was not better prepared for his duties by thorough naval training than by his Christian faith and practice. He believed deeply and implicitly in God. It was a magnificent act and grander because unpremeditated in form, the calling of his men to return thanks to God for the victory while their guns were still hot from the battle.

One of the strongest safeguards of any nation must ever be found in the godliness of her armed defenders. Corrupt officials will never be wholly absent from government circles, but we need to thank God that Christian captains on sea and land are not lacking yet.

The League is fully committed to the forward missionary movement. Great results should be reached if our chapters use the means at hand to know more of our missions and their work in saving the people and consecrate their money to the work.

The Epworth League, Christian Endeavor and Baptist Young People's Union are all now using the same topics. This began with Jan. 1, 1899.

General conference in May, 1900, is to meet in Chicago. The Auditorium, the finest assembly room in America, has been secured for its use.

Indianapolis Epworth League convention is set for July 20-24. It will be a great time and a big crowd.

SALOONS IN NORWAY.

How Liquor Is Dispensed in the City of Bergen.

Bergen is a city of 54,000 inhabitants, with a great fishing business and a considerable foreign trade. If to the commerce of Portland, Me., we should add the fisheries of Gloucester, Mass., the social conditions along the rocks of Bergen would be about represented. In an American town of this character we should have either licensed saloons up to the legal limit of number, with every possible solicitation to drink and every kind of disorder, or else we should have an attempt at prohibition, with the brazen defiance of law and the fiery adulterations of liquor which are to be found along the wharfs of Portland, says The Forum.

In Bergen there are nine saloons and four wholesale depots. The company has a capital of $20,000, in 400 shares, held by 237 stockholders. Among these are many of the leading citizens, bankers, consuls, teachers, a member of parliament and ten women. It is not only a part of public spirit to take stock in the company, but the shareholder has also some part in determining to what form of charity the profits shall go.

The Bergen company happens to be among the most limited in its scope of operations. It deals with the distilled liquor business only, and it makes no attempt to provide in its saloons any element of sociability or agreeableness. When one enters a company retail shop in Bergen he finds it a place of the most cheerless and repellent character. There are no tables or chairs or encouragement for idlers, but simply counters provided with the small glasses of the company, measured, like an apothecary's, for the exact dose. A customer enters, drinks his thimbleful, as if of medicine, and at once withdraws. Instead of solicitation there is the barest permission.

The business is conducted, as it were, under protest, and nothing but the most resolute determination to drink—a determination which no prohibitory law would be able to frustrate—seems likely to draw one into these inhospitable dispensaries. On the walls are various deterrent notices, like the following: "No Credit," "No Loafing," "No Disorderly Conduct," "No Sale to an Intoxicated Person." The regulations set forth that it is a duty of the superintendent not to encourage, but to check, excessive drinking. No liquor can be sold to minors.

The saloons are open from 8 to 12 in the morning and from 1:30 to 7 in the afternoon. On Sundays and holidays they close at 1 p. m. That is to say, the sale stops just when an American bar begins its best business, and the prohibition which could not be obtained outright is obtained for every evening and every nonworking day. Except at these stores it is practically impossible to buy a drink of spirits in Bergen. A traveler staying at the leading hotel and wishing to fill his flask for the exigencies of a long journey must go half a mile to the company's wholesale depot and must then buy not less than a half bottle of brandy.

TO CURE INEBRIATES.

Remarkable Law Which Germany Will Enforce After 1900.

Germany's inebriates, after one more year of such carefully mitigated liberty as the dear kaiser's subjects are permitted to enjoy, will enter upon a period of restraint calculated to fill them with mingled horror and indignation. With the beginning of 1900 there will go into effect a truly remarkable law—a law which places every habitual drunkard under an interdict involving complete submission to the will of a duly appointed "curator." This person will be empowered to put the person whom he regards as a dipsomaniac anywhere he pleases, there to undergo treatment for the malady as long as the "curator" pleases.

And the new law formulates a fine, broad definition in telling what a habitual drunkard is. It says that the term includes everybody "who, in consequence of inebriety, cannot provide for his affairs, or endangers the safety of others." This measure was first advocated in Germany 35 years ago, but hitherto its enactment has been prevented by influences not difficult to understand. How the regulation will work remains to be seen. That it may effect good results is obvious, and equally evident is the possibility that it may lead to tyranny such as would be utterly unendurable—anywhere out of Prussia.—New York Times.

Disguise the Whisky.

The following circular letter has been issued by Glasgow city parish council to each of the outdoor medical officers and to the various dispensers: "Prescribing of Alcoholic Stimulants to the Sick Poor.—The medical committee desires that when medical officers find it proper to prescribe alcoholic stimulants for the sick poor they shall endeavor to do so in such a manner as to cause what they prescribe to be recognized as medicines and not as popular stimulants. The committee considers these should in all cases be dispensed in the usual way, in medicine bottles, labeled with directions as to dosage, etc., and that it would be preferable to prescribe them in combination with other preparations, so as to disguise their well known characters."—Union Signal.

Cause of Lunacy and Vice.

Mr. Bramwell Booth, in his pamphlet descriptive of the work of the Salvation Army, says in regard to the "drink laws" of England: "There is no denying that the present system of forcing public houses on the people, whether they want them or not, is a fruitful cause of cruelty, of lunacy, of squalor, of vice, of crime. The temptation to drink is put down at every street corner. The mantrap, with its billiards and its beer, is there at every turn."—Exchange.

Within six years recently, there have been upward of 32,000 whiskey homicides in the United States; within ten years, between 1886 and 1896, upward of 53,000.

Dr. S. A. Steel has sold his residence near Nashville, and his address for the present is Union City, Tenn. He is now lecturing in Virginia and delighting large audiences.

The Rev. J. B. Funsten, rector of Trinity Episcopal church, Portsmouth, Va., announced that, with the approval of the church authorities, he will accept the bishopric of Boise.

Gen. John B. Gordon, of Georgia, former Governor and United States Senator, has been secured for an address at the International Epworth League Conference at Indianapolis in July.

There are 400,000 teachers employed in the public schools of the United States, and they are paid about $166,000,000 yearly. There are 1,200,000 bar-keepers and saloon-keepers, and the people pay to them over $1,000,000,000 a year.

Eli Blake, a Baptist deacon and postmaster at Tongowa, Oklahoma Territory, who began the agitation against the saloons, and had led the fight, was waylaid on his road home from the office, and beaten to death by a gang acting at the suggestion of the saloon men.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie is now ready to give $1,000,000 to the Carnegie Library in Pittsburgh as an endowment fund, with $500,000 more for improvements, and is waiting only for the expected appropriation of $3,500,000 by the city for the improvement of Schenly Park. Carnegie has already given more than $5,000,000 for libraries and institutes in the cities of Western Pennsylvania.

In view of the present vitality of the Zionistic movement, the following item from the report of the United States consul at Bairent is of interest: "Out of a total population in Palestine of some 290,000 souls, about 40,000 are Jews, against 14,000 twenty years ago. In Jerusalem there are 22,000 Jews half of whom have immigrated from Europe and America and are called Ashkenazim to distinguish them from the Oriental Israelites, the Sephardists."

It is said that Mrs. Phoebe A. Hearst, widow of the late Senator from California, has given $2,000,000 during the last five years for the promotion of education or in charity. Her gifts include several for the benefit of the University of California and endowments for the support of fourteen training schools for kindergarten work in California and Oregon. It is now reported that she recently placed in the hands of Bishop Satterlee $200,000 to be used in founding a school for girls in Washington.

A careful study of the statistics of mission work in Japan for the year 1898, recently compiled by Rev. H. Loon is, of Yokohama, reveals some interesting and instructive facts. The total figures at the close of the year are 49,982 Protestants, 55,421 Roman Catholics, and 25,531 Greek Catholics. During the year the Protestant bodies baptized 4,400 persons, the Roman Catholics 4,482, and the Greek Catholics 970. There were heavy losses by death and excommunication in all three bodies, so that the net gains of the year are not very great—Protestants, 404; Roman Catholics, 631; Greek Catholics, 675.

The calendar of the Moravian brethren for 1898 shows the increase in membership, 1896 to 1897, to have been from 128,392 to 129,617, or only 225. In Germany, there was really a decrease from 8,752 to 8,723. There are 5,597 members in Britain, and 22,345 in America. But in heathen lands the church has been wonderfully blessed. The Moravian has always been a missionary church, and its devotion to the cause is proved by its victories in many lands. Its expenditure in missions for the year amounted to $413,913.

The material progress made by Japan in recent years has been extraordinary. The steam factories have grown since 1883 from 84 to 2,758. In 1872 it had 96 steamships, with a tonnage of 23,364; in 1895 it had 827, with a tonnage of 213,221. The mileage of its railways also, which in 1872 was 18, is now 2,637. If its spiritual development were anything like on so great a scale, what a future would be before that country. While China is decaying, and its partition between the European powers seem to be regarded in many quarters as only a question of time, Japan is youthful, vigorous, and ambitious, and is evidently destined to play a leading part in the rearrangement of the distant East.

The census of the principal cities of Japan at the end of last year was as follows: Tokyo 1,368,070; Osaka, 505,657; Kyoto, 342,724; Kobe, 183,065; Yokohama, 179,868; Nagoya, 235,706; Hiroshima, 101,094; Nagasaki, 71,906.

RESOLUTIONS OF SYMPATHY.

Your committee, appointed to draft resolutions on the death of sister M. L. Traynham, respectfully submit the following:

Whereas, we have learned that sister Traynham departed this life on the 1st instant, therefore be it

RESOLVED: That in the death of sister Traynham our order has lost a worthy and consistent member, and an earnest worker; and this Lodge has lost one whose memory is dear to us as one of our charter members.

RESOLVED: That the sympathy of this Lodge is hereby lovingly tendered to Brother Traynham and his children, who have lost a faithful wife and a fond and devoted mother, and that we pray that this sad dispensation of Providence may be sanctified to their eternal good.

RESOLVED: That these resolutions be spread on our minutes, and published in the SOUTHERN METHODIST RECORDER and Good Templar News, and a copy sent to Brother Traynham.

BEE LORE.

Points Worth Noting About Winter and Spring Care.

Mr. C. P. Dadant, the well known authority in beekeeping, has been giving a series of interesting articles in American Bee Journal from one of which, in regard to the care of bees for wintering, the following is selected:

A number of amateurs say that they pay no attention to the spot occupied by the bees when removed, and that when they take the hives out in the spring it does not matter much where they are placed, whether on the exact spot they occupied before winter or in the place of one another. Once or twice we had considerable trouble from changing the location of hives, and have positively ascertained that many of the bees remember their former location, after three months of wintering, so we take particular pains to mark each hive's stand. To do this without trouble, we leave the cap or cover with the roof over it in the exact spot occupied by the hive and remove only the brood chamber to the cellar. In this manner the hives occupy a much smaller space, and it is easier to give them good ventilation, which is absolutely necessary to keep the combs from molding, if the cellar is at all damp.

We pile the hives in the cellar, two or three or even four tiers high, usually putting the lower tier on timbers raised a foot or so from the ground. We have always noticed that the colonies nearest the ground were the ones that suffered, if any did.

After the hives are in, darkness, quietness, a proper temperature and a sufficient amount of ventilation are all that are necessary. For these hives, as well as for those that are out in cold days, it is a great point to have everything perfectly quiet. The man who will disturb his bees every other day, just to see whether they are still alive, will be unsuccessful, if the circumstances are at all unfavorable, for it is very easy to kill the bees with too much kindness of this sort.

To give air without light to our beehive cellar we have devised a sort of blind, a picture of which is here shown, taken from "Langstroth Revised."

The time of removal of the bees in the spring is of utmost importance to consider. If they are taken out too early, they may not have occasion to fly much, and their power of endurance during a late cold seems to have been taken away from them by their prolonged stay in the cellar. They are very much like a horse that is kept in a warm barn. It is more apt to be fretful of the cold and to suffer than one that stays all winter in a cold stable. Yet our sympathies are all in the direction of the softer treatment. With the bees there was on our part, as in the fall, a tendency to be too much afraid of a long confinement. I believe it was Dr. Miller who said the best time to remove the bees from the cellar was in March or April, at the opening of the first buds of soft maple bloom. This is a very good criterion.

But, above all things, a warm day must be selected to remove the bees from their confinement. If you take them out on a cold day, their anxious desire to take a flight will induce them to venture when the temperature is too low for their safety, and many of them will perish. If the day is warm and pleasant, they will take a cleansing flight within a very few minutes after they have been brought out, and are thereafter ready for their habitual duties.

I have often been asked whether it advisable to take the bees out on a warm day during the winter for a good flight and put them back again. I have never tried this, but from all that I ever heard I do not believe such a course is successful. The bees after their flight begin to rear some brood and remain less quiet than if they had been kept indoors all winter.

American Versus English Statistics.

In reply to Sir William Crookes' statement that practically no uncultivated prairie land remains in the United States suitable for wheat culture, Edward Atkinson has been thus quoted: "In fact, there are now fully 100,000 square miles of land in the United States, fully suited to the production of wheat at 15 bushels to the acre, practically unoccupied in any branch of agriculture, which would be devoted to wheat on an assured price of $1 per bushel in Mark lane (London) yielding 360,000,000 bushels."

HE WANTED IT TESTED.

A Scotchman went to London for a holiday. Walking along one of the streets, he noticed a bald-headed chemist standing at his shop door, and inquired if he had any hair restorer.

"Yes, sir," said the chemist; "step in, please. There is an article I can recommend. Testimonials from great men who have used it. It makes the hair grow in twenty-four hours."

"Aweel," said the Scot, "ye can gie the top o' yer head a bit rub wi't, and I will look back the morn and see if ye're tellin' the truth."

The chemist returned the bottle to the shelf and kicked the errand boy for laughing.

GROWN WITH "HARD CASH" GUANO

On the Farm of Joseph M. Hurt, by J. P. Pettus.---Average Length of Leaf, FORTY INCHES.

MARCH 1st, 1899.

TESTIMONIALS:

MARCH 1st, 1899.

TEST MADE BY WALKER CLUB. the Bellefonte Guano was applied.
TINKLING, Lunenburg Co., Va.
To the Blackstone Guano Co.,
Blackstone, Va.

Gentlemen:—A committee of the Walker Club, composed of John O. Bragg and F. S. Manson, Jorgenson, and Theo. Orgain, Tinkling, Va., have examined the results of the fertilizer test made for the club on my farm with ten of the best brands of guanos. On plot No. 1, old lot land, ten brands of fertilizers were applied, each at the rate of 800 pounds per acre, the ten sections carefully marked and treated alike. The committee picked out the section on which your Bellefonte Guano was used as the one showing the best results. On plot No. 2, four acres of new ground from old field fine land, four brands were used. Here the committee also found the best results, very decidedly, in the acre on which

I have sold the tobacco made on the four acres mentioned above. The tobacco made on the acre on which the Bellefonte was used brought thirty-four dollars and fourteen cents ($34.14) more than the tobacco made on either of the other acres. This acre, as far as I know, had no advantage over the other three acres, either in cultivation or natural fertility, or any other way. I know the tobacco did not get mixed in cutting, curing or shipping.

L. A. HARDY,
Committee for W. A. C.

I have used the several brands of guano made by the Blackstone Guano Company, for ten years and have tested them by brands of other makes on the same field and truthfully say that I think the Bellefonte and Hard Cash are unsurpassed for tobacco. It gives me pleasure to recommend the Blackstone Guano Co.'s Guano to the farmers of Southside Virginia.

JOS. M. HURT.

Nottoway County.

Gentlemen:—I used your Bellefonte Guano last year along with another brand and sold the tobacco from the Bellefonte at an average of $19 per hundred, and the tobacco grown with the other brand at an average of less than $12, showing a difference of $7 per hundred in favor of Bellefontaine Guano. This ought to be enough to show what I think of Bellefonte Guano.

V. C. LOVE.

Danville, Va.

Gentlemen:—I have used your Guanos for the past ten years, and they have given me perfect satisfaction. I consider the Bellefonte the best I ever used, and shall use it the present year.

FRANK WHITE.

Nottoway Co.

Gentlemen:—I used your Bellefonte Guano last season along with other brands and am thoroughly convinced that it is the best I ever used. I have sold one barn of tobacco raised with the Bellefonte at an average of $15 around, lugs and all, which is a high average for shipping tobacco.

V. O. ANDREWS.

Dinwiddie, Co.

Blackstone Guano Co.—Gentlemen:—I bought of your agent, Mr. J. J. Mason, and used your Bellefonte Guano last season and am well pleased with the results. I have used a great many brands and think I can truly say it is the best I ever used, especially in the last ten years. Will say to my farmer friends that I think it a great mistake to use a low grade guano to save a few dollars in the ton at the expense of a larger difference in each hundred pounds of tobacco grown.

The Real God.

To the Greeks God was beauty to the orientals mystery, to the Romans power, to our civilization happiness. But the real God is all of these and more.—Rev. Dr. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago.

Earthly Glories.

Take some of the greatest men the world has ever known, and we see readily how little they benefited in the long run by earthly glories.—Cardinal Gibbons, Roman Catholic, Baltimore.

Man.

The thought is the man, and his character and religion are what he believes and not what others may believe or say of him.—Rev. F. M. Bristol, Methodist, Washington.

Why They Won.

The old Continentals fought the battles of the state with Bibles in their knapsacks. They studied the military genius of Moses by the light of their campfires. The pilgrim fathers feared none but God, so all their foes feared them.—Rev. Howard Duffield, Presbyterian, New York.

Gifts.

Give your little gifts to the rich and your large gifts to the poor. Give your small presents to those whose need is the least and your large presents to those whose need is greatest.—Rev. J. A. Milburn, Presbyterian, Indianapolis.

Correspondence.

The ancient people who thought and wrote by what is called "correspondence"—the relation which exists between natural and spiritual things—compared love and charity to the heart.—Rev. D. V. Bowen, Swedenborgian, San Jose, Cal.

Faith.

Faith points up to a living Christ; faith promises victory; faith leads the despairing one back to God, and when he feels the encircling arm, then he knows that God is a father and is abundantly able to save. Faith is the spring of all action. With faith Paul sees the New Jerusalem. We cannot spend hours in suspense, saying the last words have not yet been spoken on this doctrine. While we are waiting opportunity is slipping away. Life is all too short. The muscles are stiffening while we are waiting.—Rev. George L. Richmond, Presbyterian, Rutherford, N. J.

Peace.

Peace is the blessed result of enlightenment, freedom, knowledge, equality before the law. When Jesus said to the storm-tossed sea, "Peace, be still," suddenly there was a great calm. But it is not by such a miracle that the tumult of the people and the conflicts of nations are to be stilled. The Prince of Peace has stretched forth his hand over the discordant world saying, "Peace," but he has set great truths, great principles, great spiritual forces to work among men to bring about this peace.—Rev. Frank M. Bristol, Methodist, Washington.

The Mind an Impelling Force.

It is a characteristic of the mind that it cannot be entirely indifferent to what it deems to be true. There always is a desire to cherish it. This desire is active even when to all appearances it does not seem to exist. The inmost convictions of Nicodemus were not known to the public and he took great pains to conceal them, yet at the same time they impelled him to seek out the Master that he might sit at his feet as a learner. Moved by this desire, this proud spirited man shunned the daylight and under the cover of darkness made a clandestine visit to Christ. When a man is secretly cherishing truths which he fears to make known to the public, it seems as though everything conspired to place him in embarrassing positions. He is among friends who laugh at or denounce that which he believes. He must seem to approve all this and must not even by so much as a blush or an unguarded word betray what is in his mind; otherwise his real attitude will be discovered and he will lose what he desires to retain. Such men are frequently reduced to the painful dilemma of either giving up their assumed position or of joining in abuse of the cause which in their heart they secretly revere.—Rev. Richard E. Sykes, Universalist, Denver.

PUNSHON'S HYMN.

Listen! the Master beseecheth,
Calling each one by his name;
His voice to each loving heart reacheth;
Its cheerfulest service to claim.
Go where the vineyard demandeth
Vine dressers' nurture and care;
Or go where the white harvest standeth,
The joy of the reaper to share.

CHORUS:

Then work, brothers, work, let us slumber
no longer,
For God's call to labor grows stronger and stronger;
The light of this life shall be darkened full soon,
But the light of the better life resteth at noon.

Seek those of evil behavior,
Bid them their lives to amend;
Go, point the lost world to the Saviour,
And be to the friendless a friend;
Still be the lone heart of anguish,
Soothed by the pity of thine;
By wayside, if wounded ones languish,
Go pour in the oil and the wine.

Work for the good that is highest,
Dream not of greatness afar;
That glory is ever the highest
Which shines up nearest as they are
Work, though the world may defeat you,
Heed not its slander and scorn;
Nor weary till angels shall greet you
With smiles through the gates of the morn.

Offer thy life on the altar,
In the high purpose be strong,
And if the tired spirit should falter,
Then sweeten thy labor with song.
What if the poor heart complaineth,
Soon shall its waiting be o'er;
For there, in the rest that remaineth,
It shall grieve and be weary no more.

(The above hymn is said to have been written by the great English preacher, Rev. William Morley Punshon, and is a favorite hymn with the Canadian Epworth Leaguers.)

EDITORIAL.

ACCIDENT.

An accident happened to the JUNIOR RECORDER this week, and so we have to send the paper out without it.

FORTY YEARS' SERVICE.

A card received from Bro. J. Carson Watson brings the sad news that owing to advanced years and an attack of sickness the past winter he has felt obliged to retire from active work at once, without waiting till Conference, as in his judgment the cause of Christ requires that a vigorous man be put in charge to prosecute the work as he did not feel able to do. Rev. W. G. Hammond has been transferred from the Baltimore Conference to take the circuit. Bro. Watson has gone to Onancock, of which charge he was at one time the beloved pastor. In his retirement from active service the Conference loses one of the most faithful and systematic workers we have ever had. He is a Christian gentleman of the highest character and deepest piety. He is specially beloved in the South-side and on the Eastern Shore. All his old charges will unite with his ministerial brethren in the prayer that God may grant him a peaceful and useful old age among the people with whom he has elected to settle. He has been in active service 40 years.

THE TOMBS OF ESTHER AND MORDECAI.

While the infidels and critics are exerting their puny intellects to throw doubt upon the Bible narratives, God is also working, and in His own good time He is bringing forth His proofs, which upset and demolish all the fine-spun and concealed opinions of the enemies of the supernatural element in the Bible. The following, taken from the St. Louis "Christian Advocate," will be read with interest by all:

"Hamadan is the ancient Ecbatana, situated about one hundred miles to the South-west of Teheran on the great caravan route from the capital to Palestine. It is mentioned in the Book of Ezra as the place where the decree of Cyrus, permitting the rebuilding of the temple, was signed and was known to have been the summer residence of the Persian monarchs. For a long time a certain mound in the vicinity of the city was pointed out by Jewish tradition as covering the tomb of Queen Esther, but no attention was paid to the story by travelers or archaeologists who deemed it improbable that after such a length of time the tomb should be identified. The mound has recently been explored and found to contain two tombs separated from each other by a small corridor, and in each was found a sarcophagus of dark wood covered with Hebrew inscriptions. These have been deciphered and translated, and, to the astonishment of the investigators, it was found that one sarcophagus was that of Mordecai and the other of Esther. On the sarcophagus of the former were found the following inscriptions:

"Here is the holy ark of Mordecai, the Righteous. May his merits protect us! Amen."

"The same inscription is repeated on each side of the coffin, besides these verses from the Bible:

"Now, in Shushan, the palace, there was a certain Jew, whose name was Mordecai, the son of Shimei, the son of Kish, a Benjamite, son of—

"Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thine health shall spring forth speedily; and thy righteousness shall go before thee; the glory of the Lord shall be thy reward."

"On the great coffin of Esther the inscriptions were numerous and only a portion of them has as yet been deciphered. Among them, however, occurring the following sentences. "Therefore, my heart is glad and my glory rejoices; my flesh also shall rest in hope. For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. Thou wilt show me the path of life; in thy presence of fullness of joy, and thy right hand there are pleasures forever more." Facsimiles of the inscriptions have been made and are now in possession of Dr. Zadoc Kahn, chief Rabbi of France. The discovery of a tomb twenty-four hundred years old is sufficiently curious to enlist the interest of anyone, but when the discovery explains the history and emphasizes the importance of a disputed book in the Old Testament canon, it assumes an interest to the Christian world."

CORRESPONDENCE.

A GOOD PLACE TO BEGIN.

All over our Church today the various Boards of Education are making plans for success in the Twentieth Century Thank-Offering movement and, in many cases, no doubt the feeling is that the important thing to do is to make a start. If some one can be found to make a good start, interest and enthusiasm will be aroused, confidence will be inspired, and it will be an easier matter to carry on the work to a successful ending.

In any great movement there are natural starting points places more appropriate than others for the special purpose in view. The Twentieth Century Thank-Offering movement seems to me to have natural starting points, where enthusiasm should naturally arise, and from which, as centres, influences should radiate to make the movement successful. These starting points, in my judgment, are found in our Church schools and colleges. The best places in any Conference to begin the movement are the Church schools.

I mention four reasons why our institutions of learning are good starting points:

(1.) Those who have had opportunities for physical, intellectual, and spiritual training, such as is given at our Church schools, have unusual reasons to be thankful to God for giving them the advantages to be found in Christian institutions of learning. If Christian education is as important as we declare that it is, how thankful should those be who enjoy such privileges. Certainly if any have cause to thank God, the teachers and scholars of such institutions have. He has given to them many and great blessings, and they should not only praise Him with joyful lips, but should be among the first to bring their Thank-Offering.

(2.) The authorities of the Church have determined to use the money given by our people as a Thank-Offering "to strengthen the educational institutions belonging to the Church." Our educators are all deeply thankful for this recognition by the Church of the great importance of the work of our Christian schools. But is that enough? Ought not our schools and colleges to show their appreciation of this action of the Church by taking some suitable action themselves? Can they expect others to show interest in this great cause, if they who themselves have been personally benefitted and know the value of education from experience, are not sufficiently interested to show it by deeds? Is there not special appropriateness in beginning this movement in the places which are to receive the material fruits of the Thank-Offering? "Heaven helps those who help themselves," and men are inclined to do the same thing. The great thought underlying all this movement is gratitude to our Heavenly Father for the wondrous tokens of His love towards us, and this alone should move men to give. But, if the object for which the Offerings are to be used has any effect upon the givers, surely they will be more easily shown the need and the merit of the object when the schools and colleges themselves show their own valuation of the object by starting out themselves and giving all they can to help the cause for which they are asking the gifts of others. A genuine Thank-Offering from our schools and colleges, such as they are capable of making, will prove to be a most tremendous lever in the hands of our pastors.

(3.) Our schools and colleges are the natural starting points of the movement because of the nature of educational institutions. They are peculiar communities. Every teacher and scholar can be reached at any time and the purpose and character of the Thank-Offering movement can be explained and enforced. And not only so, but the school life is, in large measure, apart to itself, and if a thought takes hold upon it, it has the best possible conditions for growth. The persons do not scatter as in the case of ordinary congregations, but they can be brought together time after time until action is secured. It is necessary in this Thank-Offering movement to sow the seed, to give information, to explain, to exhort, etc. This requires time, especially in our country charges. But in our schools and colleges all conditions are favorable and the reaping can speedily follow the sowing. The fruits ought to come from our educational centres.

(4.) Finally, our schools and colleges are good starting points because they WILL START. If the matter is brought before the faculty and students, and they are given time to think about it and talk it over, and plans and ways of raising money are suggested to them, the response will be highly gratifying, I am sure.

Up to this point I have been giving some thoughts upon this matter, that came to me one day on the train. I had been attending the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Virginia Conference Board of Education. The committee had looked over the field very carefully, had counted up the work done, the results therefrom, and had concluded that the time for reaping was not yet, but that more sowing was necessary. There had also been discussion of the recent Offering of Mr. Samuel Cupples, of St. Louis, of $25,000 and we wished that we could have a similar start in our Conference. But wishing would not bring the money, and on my way home I tried to think of all the rich men I knew, who ought to make a Thank-Offering to God, and who could give $5,000, $10,000, $25,000 or more, and yet live well all the rest of their days. But these thoughts did not help the matter, and after a while I began to think of the different charges of our Conference, and tried to decide which of them would be the best for the Board to start with. This was also too hard for me to decide. Finally, by a natural process of elimination, having been unable to settle upon a rich man or a rich charge, the thought came that the very best starting point was in our schools and colleges. The more I thought of it the more convinced I became that they OUGHT to be the best places in which to start, whether they were or not. So I determined to try right in our own school and see what we could do. First, there was a general discussion among the teachers, and the general line of reasoning given above was presented, and other motives in addition. As a result of our conference the teaching force of our school, composed, with one exception, of young ladies, dependent upon small salaries for a living, pledged $1575.

A talk was then had with the Senior class, composed of eighteen young ladies, and they took the matter under consideration, and at a second meeting the class pledged $600, to be the foundation of a Loan Fund, to be used to lend to girls needing help to pay their necessary expenses through the Institute.

The subject was then brought upon the students outside the Senior class, who had been at the Institute for a longer time than one year. The same general line of thought was used, and they took the matter under consideration. At the second meeting of this section, of fifty girls, $750 was pledged.

The next division of the school, consisting of the girls entering in September, 1898, was then seen, and the matter thoroughly discussed with them, and time given them for consideration.

At a second meeting, this section, of sixty girls, pledged $560.

On the Saturday night before Easter Sunday a general Thanks-Giving meeting was held and all the pledges handed in, and the pledges at that time, from the faculty and the boarding pupils amounted to $3500. The day scholars, about fifty in number, have not been seen at this writing. The pledges of the whole school will amount to about $4,000.

In this movement no effort was made to persuade any individual girl to give any special amount. The appeal was general and the students were told to think the matter over carefully and to pledge themselves for no more than they thought they could do in safety. The students are not wealthy, and will not simply call upon their parents to pay their pledges, but, in nearly every case, they will earn the money. I requested them to write out the plans they had to raise the money, and if there were space, I should be glad to give a number of them.

This statement will explain why I say above, in the fourth place, that the schools and colleges WILL START. We have no school which is not able to do fully as much in proportion as our school at Blackstone has done, and many of them can, and doubtless will, far exceed the amount pledged by our school.

I firmly believe that our Church schools and colleges can give as a Thank-Offering three or four, or even five, hundred thousand dollars, for the male colleges can give much more than the female. Every college can appeal to its present students and to its alumni, and can show such a spirit of gratitude for great advantages that the Church will rise up and second the efforts of the schools and raise the $1,500,000 and more.

IMPERIALISM.

Many people and journals worth listening to are crying out against national expansion. Their theories are plausible, but they do not in any way notice one important fact: We have already expanded. When Dewey brought his victorious fleet to anchor in Manila bay, national expansion was born. When Cervera's fleet was burned and sank off the Cuban coast, the infant doctrine was baptized with fire and blood. Since then it has rapidly increased in strength, and the ability to create a disturbance in certain quarters.

Expansion need not mean imperialism, although a well-known American has rid himself of "military lockjaw" in order to say that he might say it does, without being in danger of the judgment of court-martial. No doubt many historical instances of an expansion which did mean imperialism might be cited. Heretofore it could have no other meaning, because until this time only imperial governments have conquered territory and controlled colonies. The rule of the conquering nation, an outgrowth of the home government, could be nothing else than imperial. Ours is a government of another sort. Its rule of dependent colonies cannot be fairly prejudged by what has been any more than we can prophesy the shape of the new woman's hat after a study of the old woman's bonnet.

Until Manila and Santiago, war meant the gratification of evil passions. Since then it may mean a generous effort of the strong to rid the weak of unrighteous rule. Conquering the Spanish armies was only the beginning. The feeble, undeveloped peoples we would save from destruction must now be protected from their own ignorance. It is not worth while to club a vicious dog away from a helpless child if one means to turn his back upon the little one and leave it at the mercy of the brute's augmented anger. If the child is protected until his strength develops he can defend himself from ugly dogs, and in all probability the canine foe of his infant life will in the interval have lost its teeth.

The teaching of the fathers does not signify, if it is too narrow for to-day. If a housewife finds a baby on her doorstep some cold night when she puts out the cat, she does not let it lie there and cry until she is fully persuaded what her grandmother would have done under like circumstances. She takes the little one to the fire and warms its hands and feet and feeds it. Can this nation of generous men and women do less for the unfortunate peoples which now have a right to look to it for help? When war with Spain was declared the people of the United States shouted their approval of the act. Along with our easy victories we won great responsibilities. They are the direct results of our efforts to help, and they must be met more quietly and bravely than we met the earlier events of the war. If we cast off the colonies now at our disposal, we shall leave a great work merely begun.

It is too late to raise the question of expansion. In the past half-year we have bounded forward to a point where we can look out upon limitless opportunity to help others and strengthen our ourselves. This great land between the two oceans is too small for us. It will not hold us now, even as the shell will not hold the chick just escaped from it.

We can only go on in the untried war, as Dewey went safely into Manila bay, sounding carefully and swinging in ever widening circles. It is not a question of what Washington would do, but of righteousness. Colonial possessions need not mean imperialism for the United States. They may be made schools of free government. We do not follow the red planet of empire, but the white star of liberty, and it is moving West, even across the Pacific.

RELATION OF BAPTIZED CHILDREN TO THE CHURCH.

(BY BISHOP O. P. FITZGERALD.)

DEAR BRETHREN: Circumstances forbid an attempt here and now to present a full statement of my views on the question of the relation of baptized children to the Church of Christ. Besides, I am not in a controversial mood, and am more and more looking for points of agreement with all who truly love our Lord, and hold to him as the head of the Church. We must come closer together, and the signs point that way. Movement is rapid in this our day. I may not live to see it, but the knowledge that the practical unification of the Church had come would add to my joy even in Heaven. Millions of believers in many names and many lands feel as I do in this matter. Here and now I must content myself with the presentation of a few conclusions which may be taken for what they are worth by this brotherly company. You will excuse brevity and informality.

1. Under our New Testament dispensation the children of the Church hold a relation to it not inferior to that held by them under the Old Testament dispensation.

2. Rejecting the dogma of baptismal regeneration for either adults or infants, we hold that the saving grace of God meets every child at the line of moral accountability, and helps to the making of that choice of Christ as a Saviour which is the essence of saving faith. In other words, as soon as a child can sin knowingly, it can believe savingly.

3. There is no necessity that our children should give the bloom and sweetness of their young lives to sin, going farther and farther from God, becoming more and more deeply stained and scarred and maimed. The promise is to us and our children. If we had stronger faith and set before them better examples of holy living, our Churches and our homes would bloom in heavenly life and beauty as the garden of the Lord.

4. When, in revivals in our Churches, our children feel and respond to the power of the Gospel, let nobody become alarmed. It would be cause for alarm and astonishment were it to be otherwise.

5. Do not wait for revivals, so-called in that specific sense of the word. There ought to be a stream of young life continually flowing into the Church. This ought to be expected and prayed for. The revival fires should never die out. There is always new material to be enkindled. Like the burning bush seen by Moses in the desert, the mature believer may always be ablaze with holy zeal, yet never consumed. The doctrine of Methodism concerning this matter seems to us to be scriptural. Let there be an awakening and return to right practice. Then will the new century begin with a new glory and blessedness throughout all our borders. Amen.

GEORGE MULLER AND HIS BIBLE.

George Muller said: The vigor of our spiritual life will be in exact proportion to the place held by the word in our life and thoughts. I can solemnly state this from the experience of fifty four years. Though engaged in the ministry of the word, I neglected for four years the consecutive reading of the Bible. I was a babe in knowledge and in grace. I made no progress because I neglected God's own appointed means for nourishing the divine life, but I was led to see that the Holy Spirit is the instructor and the word the medium by which He teaches. Spending three hours on my knees I made such progress that I learned more in those three hours than in years before. In July, 1829, I began this plan of reading from the Old and New Testaments. I have read since then the Bible through one hundred times, and each time with increasing delight. When I begin it afresh it always seems like a new book. I cannot tell how great has been the blessing from consecutive, diligent, daily study. I look upon it as a lost day when I have not had a good time over the word of God. Friends often say to me, "Oh, I have so much to do, so many people to see, I cannot find time for Scripture study." There are not many who have had more to do than I have had. For more than half a century I have never known one day when I had not more business than I could get through. For forty years I have had annually about thirty thousand letters, and most of them have passed through my own hand. I have nine assistants always at work, corresponding in German, French, English, Italian, Russian and other languages. As pastor of a Church with 1,200 believers, great has been my care; and, besides these, the charge of five immense orphanages, a vast work; and also my publishing depot, the printing and circulating of millions of books; but I have always made it a rule never to begin work till I have had a good season with God, and then I throw myself with all my heart into His work for the day, with only a few minutes interval for prayer.—"The Way of Faith."

EDITORIAL.

BALTIMORE CONFERENCE.

In the last issue some of the proceedings of this body were given. They were all taken from the Baltimore "Sun," universally admitted to be one of the most accurate papers in the country. The action on the Publishing House matter seemed to the editor to be incomplete, and so he wrote to Dr. J. A. Kern to know what was the result. A letter from him states that the resolution was not adopted, but was laid on the table. It will be, however, a source of much gratification to our Virginia Methodists, many of whom send their sons to be under the care of Dr. Kern, that Dr. Kern was one of the signers of the resolution in question. Our Virginia educators, President W. W. Smith, Prof. F. H. Smith, Dr. J. A. Kern, and Prof. C. E. Vawter (a noble company) stand shoulder to shoulder with President James H. Carlisle, of South Carolina, in their opinion of the "War Claim." It is greatly to be regretted that the report of the "Sun" was incorrect.

ANOTHER GIFT.

Mr. William K. Vanderbilt has given $100,000 to Vanderbilt University to be used for the erection of a dormitory building on the campus. This gift should but stimulate our own people to give more liberally to our schools and colleges. This makes over $1,500,000 given by the Vanderbilts to an institution of our Church. For all this the Church is primarily indebted to the labors of Bishop H. N. McTyeire, who showed the need of such an institution as Vanderbilt University to Cornell; Vanderbilt, the head of the house. His children have given since his death, largely no doubt, because of the fact that he founded the school, and it has the Vanderbilt name, but they would probably give more liberally if the Southern Methodist Church at large would show its appreciation of the work of the University by giving largely themselves.

AN IMPORTANT TRANSACTION.

The phenomenal city in Virginia is Newport News. No other city has greater opportunities for work for the Master. The work of our Church has been hampered for some time by inadequate accommodations, and yet it seemed impossible to build the kind of a Church needed. The solution of the problem was the sale of the present property, the most valuable per front foot in the city. This has at last been done, the lot 75x100 feet, and the present Church building, having been sold for $25,000. The Church bought at the same time three lots on 29th street, between Washington and LaFayette avenues, for which $7,700 was paid. As the old property had a debt on it of about $2,500, this leaves our people about $15,000 with which to build a new Church. It is a fortunate thing that we have at this juncture such a man as Rev. B. F. Lipscomb as pastor. His brethren know that the enterprise will be ably managed, and while there will be built a Church fully adapted to our needs, yet there will be no needless extravagance and heavy debt. This transaction is a very important one to the interests of Methodism in this growing young city, and will give us a strong central Church, and two tasteful and substantial chapels, one in the North and one in the East end of the city, all, comparatively speaking, free from debt. If a man is looking for a field for usefulness in the Master's great vineyard he will surely find it at any of these three young Churches. In this connection it is interesting to note that about ten years ago the Church secured an option on the four lots, corner of LaFayette avenue and Twenty-ninth street, for $2,100 for the four lots, and held it for a year, at the expiration of which time it surrendered it. About the same time one of the three lots, which was one-third of the present $25,000 sale, was bought for $600, thus in ten years increasing at least ten-fold in value. May the cause of Christ prosper in the same proportion in that stirring young city.

THE ORPHANAGE.

The Orphanage Committee of the Virginia Conference held a meeting at Epworth Church, Norfolk, last Thursday morning. There were present Dr. W. J. Young, and Messrs. S. S. Lambeth, Jr., S. Q. Collins, P. T. Barrow, and W. H. Vincent.

The question of selecting a site for the orphanage was considered. Lynchburg, Bedford City, Gordonsville, and Warrenton were mentioned. Dr. J. W. Bledsoe was instructed to visit these points and gather whatever information he could as to the advantages of each place. Dr. Bledsoe was also authorized to act as agent in soliciting contributions for the building.

A sub-committee, consisting of Dr. A. Coke Smith, and Messrs. P. T. Barrow, and E. G. Moseley, was appointed to select the site, after Dr. Bledsoe reports.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

CONFERENCE.

Rev. B. M. Beckham is helping Dr. Royall in a meeting.

The Richmond District Conference will be held at Gloucester Point.

Drs. Denny and Hoss have recently preached at the University of Virginia Chapel.

Rev. H. M. Hope delivered an address on Missions at Fairmount Avenue Church, Richmond, on Sunday night.

The revival meeting at Laurel Street, Richmond, continues, there having been a number of professions and conversions.

Work on the new Church being built at Virginia, Halifax county, which had been discontinued, will shortly be resumed.

Rev. J. C. Rosser is assisting the pastor of Park-Place, Richmond, in a meeting. There were several professions on Sunday.

Bro. Rawlings attended the North Carolina Epworth League Conference, and the "Epworth Era" says he did fine work.

The friends of Rev. G. W. Dyer will be pleased to know that he was awarded the prize at the University of Chicago for the best debater.

Farmville has arranged for a Young Men's Christian Association, and with convenient and well arranged rooms and a regular Secretary.

West Richmond District Conference will be held at Centenary Church, beginning May 30th, Rev. M. L. Williams is to preach the opening sermon.

Marvin Grove Camp Meeting will begin Friday Aug. 4th. Dr. W. J. Young and Rev. H. M. Hope have been invited to assist the preachers of the vicinity.

Bro. C. S. Wamsley, who has been living at Ashland for some time, has decided to move to Waynesboro. This step has been taken in hope of benefiting the health of himself and his wife. Both have been invalids for some time.

Special meetings have been held in the First Church, Hampton, for the past two weeks, and will probably continue through next week. Nightly meetings will commence in the West-End Methodist Church Sunday night.—"Dispatch."

The new Church near Creeds, Princess Anne county, which has recently been completed, will be dedicated on Friday, April 21st. The name of the Church will be Bethel. Revs. T. H. Campbell and D. G. C. Butts will conduct the dedication services.

Dr. W. J. Young, of Epworth Church, Norfolk, has been invited to deliver an address at the International Convention of Epworth Leaguers, to be held at Indianapolis, July 20-23. The subject upon which he has been requested to speak is "The Elements of Christian Manliness."

There was a glorious revival service at the Cumberland-Street M. E. Church last night. At the close of a powerful and pathetic discourse by the pastor, Dr. Johnson, the invitation was extended and many went forward to the altar, and many requests were made for prayer. Four professed conversion. The pastor was assisted by Rev. C. W. Pettit. Mr. J. Grandy leads the singing.

The papers report that the wife and two of the children of Rev. W. G. Boggs are quite sick.

On Monday night there were thirty professions, and on Tuesday night twenty-seven, at the meeting at Central Church.

There is quite an interest manifested in the revival begun in Queen Street Methodist Church, Norfolk, Sunday night. Last night the Rev. S. C. Hatcher preached to a large audience from Heb. 7:25: "He is able to save unto the utmost all who come unto God by him." After the sermon two men came forward and professed conversion, and a deep seriousness was manifested by the entire audience. The revival hymns are being used in these services, and are very much enjoyed by those present. Last night, in the absence of the regular chorister, Mr. W. W. Vicar, the singing was led by Mr. Fortune Odendhal.—"Lanmark."

One of the most interesting meetings held in Lynchburg closed at Centenary Church Tuesday night. Mr. Beauchamp preached with great earnestness and power, and the preaching produced a profound impression upon the congregations. There have been fifty or more professions, and the Church has been greatly revived. The closing scene was very impressive. Many wept as they bade Mr. Beauchamp farewell. The people of Centenary and of Lynchburg will not soon forget the faithful work of Rev. Mr. Beauchamp.—"News."

One of the most remarkable revivals of religion in the history of Trinity M. E. Church is now in progress there. The meetings have entered upon their second week with a wonderful degree of spiritual power. Sunday morning there were twelve conversions at the 11 o'clock service and at night, after a powerful sermon by the pastor, Rev. Lloyd L. Williams, fourteen adult penitents bowed at the altar, eight of whom found peace in believing. Last night the Church was again filled with an attentive congregation that listened to a powerful sermon by Rev. A. H. Edwards, of Centenary. When the invitation was extended ten persons responded, eight of whom found the "peace of God at once." A large number in the congregation requested prayer.

At the session of the Methodist Preachers' Meeting, held at Centenary Church, Monday morning, resolutions of sympathy and sorrow at the death of Dr. Walter B. Lafferty, son of Rev. J. J. Lafferty, of the Virginia Conference, were adopted and spread upon the minutes of the meeting. Rev. Dr. W. G. Starr presided over the meeting and the members discussed in an interesting manner the coming centennial of Methodism in Richmond and Manchester. A resolution was adopted expressing the pleasure of the meeting at hearing of the purpose of the Centennial Committee to publish in book form a history of the centennial, heartily endorsing the movement, and also assuring their co-operation in the circulation of the book.—"Leader."

A scene the like of which is almost unprecedented in the history of the Church was enacted in Central M. E. Church Sunday night. For two weeks the pastor, the Rev. R. F. Beadles, has been holding a series of revival meetings, which have been productive of very good results. Sunday night he preached a remarkably brilliant and interesting sermon, basing his discourse upon the text: "Prepare to meet thy God." The sermon had a wonderful effect. At its conclusion, when the invitation was extended, crowds of people went forward, penitent, to the altar. An effort to secure the names of all the penitents resulted in getting those of sixty-five persons, but there were many who left the Church before the canvass was completed. It is estimated that fully one hundred persons went forward. It was a remarkable meeting—one that will be long remembered by all present.—"Norfolk Landmark."

The congregation of Union Station, Richmond, was asked to make an offering toward reducing the principal of the Church debt. It was announced to the congregation last Sunday that fifteen hundred dollars had been secured and paid on the debt. This Church has paid three thousand dollars within the last six months on the principal of its debt. There were four additions to the Church last Sunday.—Richmond "Leader."

The services at Centenary Sunday were of great interest. There were fifteen or more professions. Rev. Mr. Beauchamp preached with great power, and the congregation at each service was much affected. Seventeen joined the Church. The meeting Monday night was one that did much good. One came forward. Tonight (Tuesday) Rev. Mr. Beauchamp will preach, after which there will be a farewell service. One of those who have made a profession are especially invited to be present.—Lynchburg "News."

The meetings at Broad-Street, Richmond, which closed on Sunday, were productive of much good, there being a number of professions and much interest among the Church.

Rev. L. P. Bransford will assist Bro. Lankership in a meeting at Wright's Memorial the latter part of the month.

There have been thirty professions in the revival meeting conducted at the Huntersville M. E. Church by its pastor, Rev. Daniel F. Merritt.

The following reports were given at the Norfolk Preachers' Meeting by the pastors:

"Rev. W. J. Young, Epworth, one profession to membership, one professional faith and one conversion.

"Rev. R. F. Beadles, Central, Portsmouth, 75 conversions Sunday night, 85 during the week.

"Rev. Charles I. Stengle, Union Mission, one conversion Sunday night.

"Rev. W. T. Williams, LeKies' Memorial, received five on profession and one by letter.

"Rev. H. E. Johnson twenty-five conversions since he began revival meetings; no accessions to membership Sunday night.

"Rev. Daniel T. Merritt, Huntersville, 30 conversions, meeting still in progress.

"Rev. R. T. Waterfield, Owens' Memorial, Portsmouth, one conversion, six additions to the Church.

"Rev. R. H. Bennett, McKendree, no additions to membership."—"Virginia-Pilot."

Dr. S. A. Steel preached at Main-Street, Suffolk, on Sunday morning.

DEATH OF MRS. RICE.

Dr. Coke Smith's sister, Mrs. Rice, who has been so ill for several weeks, died at her home in Columbia, South Carolina, yesterday afternoon at 3:20. She was thirty-seven years of age and was married to Dr. John A. Rice thirteen years ago. She was a woman of strong character and a bright, well-trained mind. She leaves three boys, the youngest being five years old. Since the death of her sister, Mrs. Koger, two years ago, she has had the care of her two nieces, and these children are, as it were, a second time orphaned. This is the third bereavement that has come to Dr. Smith in the past two years, and Mrs. Rice was his last remaining sister.—Lynchburg "News."

PEACE CONFERENCE.

The Peace Conference called by the Czar of Russia is to meet at the Hague on May 18th. It has been suggested that the day be made a Day of Prayer for Peace. The President has appointed as the American representatives, Hon. Andrew W. White, our present Ambassador to Germany; Hon. Stanford Newell, our present Minister to the Netherlands; President Seth Low, of Columbia University; Capt. William Crozier, of the Army, and Capt. A. T. Mahan, of the Navy.

GENERAL.

The May meetings begin the first week in May. The "Wesleyan Advocate" but voices the wishes of the whole Church when it says that it is hoped the Bishops may take some action to relieve the present situation.

Cardinal Vaughn says that the Romanists will celebrate the last year of this century and the first of the next in acts of homage. These are to be common prayers, pilgrimages to Jerusalem and Rome, religious solemnities, the erection of crosses and the building of bon fires on the lofty eminences of the world.

Bishop Granbery dedicated anew the Church at Winchester, which has been entirely remodeled under the pastorate of Dr. S. K. Cox.

Dr. Timothy Dwight, during his presidency of Yale, has given to the University over $100,000; more than twice the salary received by him.

UNION CITY

THE SOUTHERN

METHODIST RECORDER

Dr. Lewis Banks, now stationed at Cleveland, preached every night except Sunday night during January, and received 213 new members into his Church.

The present Cornelia Vanderbilt, a man in his old days has now given up the use of wine at his meals and drinks nothing but water.

President J. Dean recently said: "The time is coming when a politics will be the only business open to the intemperate man. Railroads, steamships, and business men won't have him. Only the town-squall rag people will employ him."

A new hospital to cost $200,000 is to be built by the Methodists of Chicago. The late Mrs. E. C. F. and William have contributed $150,000 of the money needed, and the rest will be subscription in the Churches. The hospital will be a six-story building and will have accommodations for two hundred and fifty patients.

Several deserving institutions receive bequests under the will of the late Mr. John Quincy Adams, of Wheaton, Ill. The public bequests, which amount to $158,000, include: $20,000 to the American Sunday School Union, $10,000 to the Chicago Theological Seminary, $10,000 to the Illinois Home Missionary Society, $10,000 to the American Bible Society, $10,000 to the Y. M. C. A. of Chicago, and $50,000 to Rockford College.

At the World's Sunday-School Convention, held in London, July 11-15, 1898, the following world totals were reported: Sunday-schools, 246,558; teachers, 2,378,921; scholars, 22,540,392. Our country furnishes one-half of the schools and teachers and nearly half of the scholars.

Virginia has 47 Young Men's Christian associations located at city, college, railroad, mining and other points, with 6,775 members. Gospel meetings, Bible classes, socials, lectures, night schools, reading rooms, and gymnasiums are some of the features of the work done by the associations.

At the late session of the Baltimore Conference Rev. J. S. Hutchinson resigned as editor of the Baltimore "Christian Advocate," and Rev. J. O. Knot was elected as editor-in-chief, with Revs. F. J. Prettyman, J. H. Light, and W. S. Hammond as associate editors. These are all bright young men and will doubtless make the paper a power for usefulness.

The Baltimore Conference reported a membership of 51,124, being a decrease of 242. Such figures are saddening to every heart.

The late Lord Herschell, though holding the exalted office of Lord Chancellor, served as a Sunday-School teacher. He taught in the Sunday-School connected with the Church of which his father was minister, not far from Edgeware road, London.

EMPEROR WILLIAM TO PRESIDENT MCKINLEY.

WASHINGTON, April 18.—President McKinley has received the following from Emperor William, of Germany:

GREAT AND GOOD FRIEND:—In commemoration of the consecration of the Church of the Saviour at Jerusalem, which took place on the 31st, of October last, which was so an important an event for the evangelical portion of Christendom, and in which, to my joy, a representative of the evangelical synod of North America took part, I have caused a number of copies of the artistically executed memorial to be prepared, and take the liberty herewith to send you a copy of this memorial, with the request that you will kindly accept it.

"Accept the assurance of my distinguished consideration."

"WILLIAM II.
Berlin, Castle, February 12th, 1899."

The memorial is beautifully engrossed and bears the autographs of Emperor William and Empress Augusta Victoria. The memorial is a condensed history of Christianity from the birth of Christ.

The President has forwarded a suitable answer.

HURRY A NECESSITY.

Two Irishmen were going over a bridge and saw the following notice: "Any person saving a life will get 20s., and for a dead body 10s." Said Pat to Mick:

"We ought to make some money out of this. You fall in and I will pull you out."

"All right," said Mick, as he dropped over the bridge.

Pat, after trying three or four times to get Mick out, was arrested by a voice from the water calling out:—

"Bedad, if you don't look sharp we shall only get 10s."

GROWN WITH "HARD CASH" GUANO

On the Farm of Joseph M. Hurt, by J. P. Pettus.---Average Length of Leaf, FORTY INCHES.

TESTIMONIALS:

MARCH 1st, 1899.

TEST MADE BY WALKER CLUB.

TINKLING, Lunenburg Co., Va.
To the Blackstone Guano Co.,
Blackstone, Va.

Gentlemen:—A committee of the Walker Club, composed of John O. Bragg and F. S. Manson, Jorgenson, and Theo. O. gain, Tinkling, Va., have examined the results of the fertilizer test made for the club on my farm with ten of the best brands of guanos. On plot No. 1, old lot land, ten brands of fertilizers were applied, each at the rate of 800 pounds per acre, the ten sections carefully marked and treated alike. The committee picked out the section on which your Bellefonte Guano was used as the one showing the best results. On plot No. 2, four acres of new ground from old field fine land, four brands were used. Here the committee also found the best results, very decidedly, in the acre on which the Bellefonte Guano was applied.

Yours truly,
L. A. HARDY.

I have sold the tobacco made on the four acres mentioned above. The tobacco made on the acre on which the Bellefonte was used brought thirty-four dollars and fourteen cents ($34.14) more than the tobacco made on either of the other acres. This acre, as far as I know, had no advantage over the other three acres, either in cultivation or natural fertility, or any other way. I know the tobacco did not get mixed in cutting, curing or shipping.

L. A. HARDY,
Committee for W. A. C.

I have used the several brands of guano made by the Blackstone Guano Company, for ten years and have tested them by brands of other makes on the same field and truthfully say that I think the Bellefonte and Hard Cash are unsurpassed for tobacco. It gives me pleasure to recommend the Blackstone Guano Co.'s Guano to the farmers of Southside Virginia.

JOS. M. HURT.

Nottoway County.

Gentlemen:—I used your Bellefonte Guano last year along with another brand and sold the tobacco from the Bellefonte at an average of $19 per hundred, and the tobacco grown with the other brand at an average of less than $12, showing a difference of $7 per hundred in favor of Bellefontaine Guano. This ought to be enough to show what I think of Bellefonte Guano.

V. C. LOVE.

Gentlemen:—I have used your Guanos for the past ten years, and they have given me perfect satisfaction. I consider the Bellefonte the best I ever used, and shall use it the present year.

FRANK WHITE.

Nottoway Co.

Gentlemen:—I used your Bellefonte Guano last season along with other brands and am thoroughly convinced that it is the best I ever used. I have sold one barn of tobacco raised with the Bellefonte at an average of $15 around, lugs and all, which is a high average for shipping tobacco.

V. O. ANDREWS.

Dinwiddie, Co.

Blackstone Guano Co.—Gentlemen:—I bought of your agent, Mr. J. J. Mason, and used your Bellefonte Guano last season and am well pleased with the results. I have used a great many brands and think I can truly say it is the best I ever used, especially in the last ten years. Will say to my farmer friends that I think it a great mistake to use a low grade guano to save a few dollars in the ton at the expense of a larger difference in each hundred pounds of tobacco grown.

Theosophists.

Theosophists are as much fatalists as are Mohammedans. There is an iron law of remorseless necessity, of unchanging and unchangeable force. There is no possibility of setting fate aside. The only thing you can do is to submit.—Dr. Dillie, Methodist, Oakland, Cal.

A Character.

Three things will build up a character—the refusing to do wrong, the acceptance of the Divine Providence and the practicing of his will. These will make a character conforming to the will of God, and such a conformance is heaven, and abideth forever.—Rev. Wayland Hoyt, Baptist, Minneapolis

Detraction.

Some sins may be peculiar to certain professions, to certain times, to certain places. Detraction presents itself to all professions, in all ages and in all places. It is evil in itself and in its motives. Envy, jealousy, hatred, pure malice, these are the motives of detraction.—Father Duboise, Roman Catholic, San Francisco

Jesus.

Almost from the beginning his disciples discovered that there was something in this man Jesus entirely different from what they had been accustomed to, and their whole effort seemed to be to find that, to understand it. He was a mystery to them. He was a mystery to his own mother.—Rev. J. P. Egbert, Congregationalist, Minneapolis

A Child of God.

If man is a child of God and heir to the eternities, if the world, with all its brilliancies, passeth away with the desire thereof, then, as a practical business proposition brought down to the level of the ordinary calculations of everyday transactions, the question carries with it its own answer.—Rev. B. E. Howard, Congregationalist, Los Angeles

The Old, Old Past.

As we read the story of the sorrows of other days, we feel how like they are to our sorrows, we feel drawn nearer to the old, old past. 'Tis almost present; we almost touch their hands. Let us carry the past with us as we go forward, as Israel carried the bones of Joseph when they went from the land of Egypt.—Rabbi M. H. Harris, Hebrew, New York.

Backbone of All Character.

Veracity is the backbone and foundation of character; other good traits are the ribs. If I were permitted to do one thing for a man, and but one, I would make him absolutely sincere and unquestionably veracious. This maintained in its integrity makes everything else possible in character building without it a man's life is like a ship without a keel, a building without a foundation.—Rev. Dr. John A. B. Wilson, Methodist, San Francisco.

Charity.

The church is not a charitable institution. Charity is incidental, not fundamental, in the church. Its business is to help people to help themselves by developing in them the best, working out their salvation—i. e., their character—according to the laws of development and saving them and their world, not from anything necessarily, but to all that is good and true.—Rev. William Rader, Congregationalist, San Francisco.

The Face of Christ.

It would be impossible, for example, to picture the Christ as other than attractive in feature. To depict him with a countenance which indicated selfishness or cunning would be an insult to the law that never allows an ignoble expression to symbolize a noble heart and life. The face of Christ is the despair of artists because it is difficult to paint a portrait in which a child's gentleness is conjoined with a giant's strength.—George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

STAHLMAN'S "BANNER."

(The "Nashville Banner" is a paper owned by E. B. Stahlman, the lobbyist. Articles have recently appeared in it in reference to the "War Claim," favoring the action of Barbee & Smith. Copies of the paper containing these articles have been widely distributed to persons who subscribe to the publications of the "House." The question very properly arises, Who is furnishing the lists to Stahlman, and who is paying the expense of distribution? The following from the "St. Louis Advocate" is directly upon this point.—J. C. Jr.)

A Brother writes: "I had ordered Sunday-school literature from the house for one of my schools, and through mistake the "Sunday-School Visitor" was sent to me instead of the Superintendent. The same day I received the "Visitor," I received a copy of the "Nashville Banner," in the same kind of wrapper, and addressed in precisely the same handwriting. I received no less than three different copies of the "Banner," containing articles favoring the action of Stahlman and our agents, evidently sent out as campaign documents to change the tide of public opinion. I write to ask who is sending out this campaign literature? Is Mr. Stahlman or our agents personally bearing this expense? Or will it eventually come out of the pockets of our worn-out preachers, widows and orphans? Our Government certainly does not carry such matter free, and the printing, paper, wrapping and directing must cost something."

As to whether Mr. Stahlman is in possession of the mailing lists of our Sunday-school department and general connectional literature, or whether our publishing house is mailing the "Nashville Banner," we are not prepared to say. Neither can we answer our brother's question as to who is bearing the expense of the marked copies of the "Banner" now waving so triumphantly and gratuitously, not only about our central citadel, but over every State and Province reached by our Sunday-school and connectional literature, under which a modern Goliath is riding at the very head of the marching columns of Southern Methodism in a blinding sheen of burnished brass, with one Bishop, our Book Committee and Agents helpless and hopeless in the anaconda coil of his marvelous mesmeric power.

Keep cool, brother. Be patient. This is not the first Philistine giant that ever annoyed the armies of Israel. The seeming triumph of his "Banner," and his daring audacity is much like that of Cervera as he charged out of the harbor of Santiago. The "Wooden Horse" will yet be expelled from the walls of our Troy. The Lord still lives and righteousness will yet prevail. His promise to the Church that "the gates of Hell shall not prevail against it," has never been canceled nor recalled. The large majority of our Bishops are yet in the strength of their manhood. These have never been Stahlmanized nor overcome by the infirmities of age. It is not possible for either senility or sectional prejudice to blind them to the fact that the Ten Commandments are still the basis of all law and order in both Church and State. These Bishops will meet in a few days. Let us calmly await their final action. Even if it were possible for all our connectional officers to go wrong, our Church will still live and go marching on to its glorious destiny and triumph when all of these officers are under the sod and dew. Our laymen, on whose shoulders rests the large burden of financial support, may find it necessary to ask the courts to place the publishing house in the hands of a receiver. They will never feel safe so long as the house is in any way under the control of a man who has been denounced on the floor of the United States Senate as a "thief and a liar," who confessed to that body his shame with no sign of repentance or restitution. And in this confession proved to the civilized world that the sum of $288,000 had been obtained from our National Government through false pretenses.

RICHMOND CENTENNIAL.

Richmond Methodists have been carrying out this week the programme already given in the RECORDER. And they have not carried it out in a perfunctory way, but with energy and enthusiasm. Not only on Sunday were the Churches filled, but the unusual sight was witnessed of Broad-Street Church full to the doors on a week-day with interested listeners. The exercises opened with a Love-Feast at Trinity Church, which was a most enjoyable service. Some of the testimony was clear, convincing, uplifting. The close was somewhat marred by a hasty rush from the room to get seats up stairs for the sermon. This was preached by Bishop Wilson, on the text: "I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill." It was a scholarly exposition of the text. It was followed by an appeal from the

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE BEAUTY AND UTILITY OF FLOWERS.

While the little planet on which we live has been greatly disfigured by the effects of sin and the mutations of time, much yet remains to attract the eye and charm the ear. The heavens still declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth His handywork.

"He warms in the sun, represses in the breeze; glow in the stars and blossoms in the trees; lives through all life, extends through all extent; spreads undivided and operates unspont."

Having just passed through the storm and dreary mounds of another winter, we are now approaching the most lovely season of the year. The earth on which we live will soon be carpeted with green, every field decked with bloom, and every garden with odoriferous flowers. The birds will sing a rich renewed melody, while the sprightly lark will pour the air and see to say: "Come, gentle Spring! ethereal mildness come!" The man who is moved by such a scene may be considered a fit subject for "treasons, stratagems and spoils." We may reject other branches of science at our option, but Christ has commanded the study of many when He says: "Consider the lilies of the field." It gives this writer some pleasure to know that his good friend, Dr. Paul Whitehead, will be favored on his mountain district with a good opportunity to indulge his favorite study. It is said that the flowers of the field are the angels of the grass, and whisper messages of love to the children of men; and for this reason Martin Luther always kept a flower on his writing desk to drive dull care away and give beauty and love to his pen. And this old scribe is glad to say that his quiet room is perfumed both winter and summer with sweet flowers, prepared and sent by thoughtful and loving hands.

The flowers should be considered as objects of God's providential care. Hence said the Saviour: "Why take ye thought of raiment? For consider the lilies of the field, how they grow—they toil not, neither do they spin, and yet I can say unto you that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."

Flowers are considered as appropriate for the marriage day, and they are intended for congratulation and prophecies of good. Hence the bride must have them on her brow and have them in her hand. Flowers will help to relieve the sorrow and gloom of death, soothe the mourners at the grave and live as lovely reminders in the cemetery. This inscription was given by a loving and tender heart: "Oh, earth! lie softly upon her. She was my mother." "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Many of our loved ones have gone to their heavenly home, but if faithful we shall see them again, "where everlasting Spring abides, and never withering flowers." J. A. R. PETERSBURG, VA.

THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

In oriental countries the care of flocks and herds was a common industry. Sheep fields of the East are enclosures surrounded by a wall of loose stones with thorn bushes on the top, or a palisade, which was an effectual barrier against wolves—enemies of the flocks. These are usually built on the sunny side of a hill protected from the winter winds. The door of the sheep field was kept shut at night and kept guarded by the porter or door-keeper, who slept on the outside.

In the morning the porter opens the door for the shepherd to enter, who goes in to look after the sheep and put them out to feed in the pasture field near by. In oriental countries shepherds know well their flock and frequently give names to the sheep, who know their names well. The sheep learn to know the voice of their shepherd, and when they hear his voice they will follow; but the voice of a stranger they won't follow. In His beautiful allegory of the Good Shepherd, our Lord used these facts with regard to sheep and their shepherds to illustrate and impress important truths concerning His own mission into the world. He speaks of Himself as the Good Shepherd who came to save and lead in pastures green the sheep in whose behalf He laid down His life. How thoroughly, clearly does He set forth Himself as the Good Shepherd who gave His life for the sheep. "All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers." He compares Himself to the door through which the flock entered the place of safety at night, and through which the sheep went out in the morning to the green pastures. Our Lord came to give life, abundant life to the sheep, while thieves and robbers came to destroy the sheep. Different was His from the hiring who felt no interest in the sheep and when danger threatened or would flee. Not to get pay, nor to force, nor to destroy the flock did Jesus come, but to save them. He laid down His precious life on the Cross for His sheep and Jesus and the Good Shepherd.

Who could not see such a shepherd as Jesus when all the facts are studied? The beauty of nature that He goes before His sheep and says, "Follow me." The way may be rough and darkness may be upon us, but with such a Leader we need not falter. Pain, weariness, sorrow and sorrow may be our companions, but Jesus calls to us "to be of good cheer and follow on." Sometimes we can hear the howls and barks near by of the fierce wolves of temptation, but the enemies never reach us while we are following in Good Shepherd. Difficulties, dangers, trials which we so much dreaded vanish when we keep near to our blessed Leader. "Follow me," how faithfully along the pathway we find them as we press on!

The followers of Henry, of Navarre, were encouraged to follow their dauntless leader by the sight of his waving plume, ever in the forefront of the battle. Followers of the Good Shepherd may ever see their Leader in the front with the eye of faith.

"I know not when I am going, but well do I know my guide." Like the Good Shepherd who carries his flock from field to field to get pasturage, so our Lord will lead His people in "pastures green besides the still waters," and will renew and restore their expended strength. Till we come to the end of our journey let us listen for the voice of our matchless Leader, who will conduct us safely home. Amen.

E. P. PARHAM.

THE PREACHER'S FIRST SUNDAY

This seems to be "moving year." Every year seems to be that way. When I saw the preachers, grips in hand, moving in battalions toward the depot to-day, I thought of the next two weeks and what experiences are in store for the "new minister." First, there will come the packing-up days. Terrible days! Visions of boxes and barrels and bundles and dusty carpets and hammers and tacks and sore hands and a lame back and nerve destroying perplexities not a few rise up before me as I write. Not a bit more delightful are the experiences of unpacking at the journey's end. Does anyone suppose that it is easy for the parson and his wife to be properly complacent in the presence of broken china and splintered furniture, or to be angelic while the tearful farewells of former parishioners are still ringing in their ears? An application of arnica will heal some moving-year troubles, but not all of them.

Then come the introductions and critical inspections and the inevitable comparisons with the minister who has moved away. Sunday dawns. That first sermon! Do people come to the sanctuary to worship the Lord? Nay, nay. Most of them come to look at the new minister. Under the coats of the brethren and the cloaks of the sisters there are carefully concealed yardsticks to measure the man of God, and miniature scales to find out how much he weighs.

Is the new minister tall or short, fat or lean? Is his voice musical or harsh? And what about his gestures? Does he use or misuse his handkerchief? Does he wear a white or black tie? Does he read or extemporize? Is he rhetorical or severely practical? Does he quote more from Plato or Paul? Is he cold or warm? Will he wear? Does he stop when he reaches "In conclusion," or does he go on to say "Finally, my brethren," and ten minutes later announce that he has "just a word more?" That first sermon! How can it be a success? The new minister may use the best sermon in his capacious barrel, and try hard to forget that three hundred critical eyes are focused on him, but that pulpit will be a fiery furnace to a man of proper modesty—to anyone but a brazen egotist.

And the new minister's wife—God bless her! She rarely receives the sympathy she deserves. Everyone looks at the minister's pew on that first Sunday morning—they look with big interrogation points in their eyes. Is she pretty or plain? Is she graceful or awkward? Is she tasteful or tasteless? Will she be exclusive or sociable? Will she help or hinder the minister? Will the parsonage be as well kept as when the late lamented minister's wife had charge?

Then there are the new minister's girls and boys. How they have longed to escape the ordeal of this first Sunday morning! I know what I am writing about. If my father could have been bribed, bought, coaxed, or threatened into leaving me at home, how happy I would have been! But he did not see it that way. All the sensations of those first Sunday experiences come back to me to-day. I dressed for Church with protests both mental and oral. I walked thence with leaden feet, so to speak. I entered the sacred place with palpitating heart. The distance from the door to the minister's pew seemed a mile. As I walked up the aisle I was sure everyone in the building was looking straight at me. I blushed to the roots of my hair. Stumbled as I entered the pew. Instantly took a great interest in the pattern of the carpet, which I studied intently until the meeting was out. What the minister's boy said to the people to whom he was introduced I cannot now recall, but I have a distinct recollection that he did not linger in the sanctuary longer than was really necessary. We often read about the embarrassments of the minister and his wife in moving times. But not much is said about ministers' children. Upon them the shoe of itinerancy pinches most painfully. When the big wheel turns, school life is often broken into with disastrous results. Social ties are sundered, weeks of loneliness ensue until new friendships are formed, and sensations of utter homelessness fill the heart. And all this is often endured without the compensations which father and mother feel. Be good to the ministers' girls and boys! Be especially good if this is moving year!—Dr. J. F. Berry, in "Epworth Herald."

EDUCATION OF THE YOUNG PEOPLE ON MISSIONS.

MISS V. F. PENROSE, GERMANTOWN, PA.

The people of the United States spend annually for jewelry, $150,000,000; for tobacco, $300,000,000; for liquor, $1,000,000,000, and their capital is $80,000,000,000. And yet the funds being contributed by the Christian Church to foreign missions are utterly inadequate to meet the demands of a growing work. Why?

The reason is not only found in the increase of benevolent objects at home, hospitals, asylums, all sorts of charitable work, each claiming our supreme attention. Giving is not systematic. Worldliness has increased, "and the love of many has waxed cold." A personal interview with the living Christ is needed. The "unbelieving world," as has recently been said, is the Church at home. God's power has not changed. If we would lay hold on Christ we would realize at once the eternal truth of His words: "All power is given unto Me." Ignorance of the world-wide work of missions, and largely explains the situation.

A factor most neglected, a most important factor, is our Sunday-schools. True, they are for Bible study, but are they not first of all to make soul-winning their supreme object? Is not Christ to be shown as our head? Has He not commanded, "Go ye into all the world?" Are we faithful to Him if in our Sunday-schools we neglect to teach the need of obedience to this great command, His last?

Time does not permit? Then omit two hymns and in their place have some carefully prepared information. Tell the story of Blind Cha'ang from the February "Missionary Review of the World," or tell the story, "In the Tiger Jungle," or "God on the Rock," from "On the Indian Trail." These can be told in the primary, intermediate, the senior departments. They all interest, all show what Christ's power is among heathen people. The first could be used to illustrate medical missions, that crying need of mission work with only one doctor to twenty other missionaries, and each medical missionary with a clientele of two and a half million patients. "In the Tiger Jungle" would show a phase of missionary life, touring. "God on the Rock" illustrates the need of education, and how work must be begun.

Ten minutes, once a month, thus employed, systematically, carefully, prayerfully, has in one school interested many who were before uninterested, because they did not know the facts, had been brought up in ignorance of missions, had never read the missionary magazines; and the money in consequence increased remarkably. The desire now is for more information. ALWAYS IN VIEW IS THE MAP OF THE WORLD. (The A. B. C. F. M. has a fine map, on cloth, for $2.50. This was easily colored with water colors, after that beautiful little map of the world in "The New Acts of the Apostles.") ties," gold stars marking where all denominations are at work.) Colored to represent the progress of religion, it is a silent witness to "the petty done, the undone vast." It shows that "there remaineth very much land to be possessed." You cannot do the best work without a map of the world.

In the Sunday-school library have an annex for some of the new, delightful books like "Vikings of Today," by Wilfred T. Grenfel, M. D., "Korean Sketches," by Rev. James S. Gale, "In Lands Afar," "Khamil," "Behind the Purdah." Have the books accessible, and ask some one to read such a chapter as that on the Korean "Boy." One hundred and fifty missionary books, read by one small society, caused them to raise $1,500 for missions.

Let each class take, as a class, one missionary magazine, and have interesting bits marked. Believe me, if once our Sunday-schools as a whole begin to have information of the progress of the Kingdom as an integral part of their Christian education, much prayer being offered in the schools, as one need after another is shown, the whole Church will be better informed and interested. Many are in the schools who attend no other service, who do not belong to the Christian Endeavor Society (where perhaps quarterly they may hear of missions), nor to bands. It is a marvelous opportunity to begin at the beginning and make prominent the fact that our chief work is to make Christ known throughout the world.

POLLING THE CHURCHES FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS.

(BY LUTHER D. WISHARD, NEW YORK.)

The first year of experience in connection with the Presbyterian Forward Movement in Foreign Missions revealed certain facts which were fairly startling in their significance and encouragement. One strongly emphasized feature in the policy of the movement consisted in an appeal to a certain class of Churches to assume the full salaries of specific missionaries. This appeal was made to twenty-five Churches, and every one of them, without a single exception, either increased its annual contribution to the sum required or contributed a salary over and above its regular offering. The entire number of persons present when the appeals were made did not exceed seven thousand, or about two-thirds of the Church membership. Fully two thousand distinct pledges were made, which probably represented nearly one-half the families in the Churches. The total sum pledged was $21,000, an increase of $16,547 over the average contributions of the congregations for the preceding five years. The increase in several Churches varied from fifty to twenty-five hundred per cent. The two thousand contributors averaged over ten dollars, which means an average of at least three dollars for the entire membership.

These Churches were not selected with reference to any certainty or even strong probability of a salary being secured. As a matter of fact, leading members of almost every one of them entertained grave doubts as to their Church's willingness or ability to provide a salary. (The salaries averaged from $600 to $1,200, according to the country. One of the interesting features of the entire canvass was the great surprise of the people at their success. The audience in many cases was in a fair condition for a revival of religion at the close of the collection.

The foregoing facts indicate:

First—That the heart of the Church is sound on the missionary question. They are abundantly able and abundantly willing to furnish the money for the world's evangelization.

Second—A distinct appeal must be made and an immediate opportunity must be afforded the people to respond in terms as definite as the appeal.

Third—The people are strongly attracted by the proposition to support their own personal representative. They believe in the policy so ably advocated by the sainted Dr. Gordon, of projecting their influence as a congregation into the mission field, of extending the boundary lines of their own parish into the unevangelized world, and maintaining a pastor in the foreign section of their parish. There are doubtless enough congregations in every one of our leading denominations which are fully able to give $500 or more a year to missions to insure the salaries of all the missionaries needed for the world's evangelization. The majority of congregations which are not able to give this amount, can be looked to for the means of meeting all the other items in the foreign budget. In this way the mission boards may be provided with both special and general funds.

The Presbyterian Forward Movement has already demonstrated for the Churches in America what the Church Missionary Society has done for the British Churches, a method which, if pursued, will insure money enough to properly maintain all existing work and workers, and also send to the front an army of student volunteers many fold larger than the present force.

We are just on the eve of another census, which will require an army of men and a vast sum of money. The fundamental method of the census is the personal touch. Millions of men will be personally interviewed. Why may we not make an equally thorough attempt to poll the Churches for foreign missions?

RESOLUTIONS.

At a meeting of the Parsonage Aid Society of West Brunswick District the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, in the death of Mrs. Eliza Meade, which occurred January 29th, 1899, our society has lost a true friend, and the Church a pure and consistent member, therefore

RESOLVED: That while feeling deeply our bereavement we rejoice that "Heaven has gained what earth has lost," and we bow in humble submission to our Father's will.

RESOLVED 2: That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family, praying that they may follow her, as she followed Christ, and at last be reunited in the eternal home.

RESOLVED 3: That these resolutions be spread upon our minutes and copies sent to the "R. C. Advocate" and the SOUTHERN METHODIST RECORDER for publication.

WE HAVE ENTERED A COMBINATION

which is not prejudicial to any interests, but which, on the contrary, is directly in favor of every reader of this paper.

HERE IS THE PLAN A splendid illustrated MONTHLY, devoted to the cause of Methodism throughout this broad land and called THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE, is published in St. Louis, with offices in New York and Chicago. It is the peer of the best of the popular magazines in illustration, literature, and typographical excellence, and is designed to be to the Methodist membership of about six millions in America, what the popular secular magazine is to the general reading public. The Magazine is not a competitor of any of the other Church periodicals; it is general in its scope. It is the ONLY ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE PUBLISHED MONTHLY IN THE UNITED STATES, and occupies a field distinctly its own. Its aims and purposes are of the highest. Its ideals are: THE PUREST IN LITERATURE, THE HIGHEST IN ART, THE NOBLEST IN METHODISM. It is a worthy exponent of the great Church it so ably represents.

Some Opinions of Representative Methodists, North and South.

"The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine should be welcomed by the whole Methodist family. Many a number will contain articles worth ten times the subscription price." —Bishop Charles C. McCabe.

"Fair, sweet-toned, appetizing." —Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald.

"Our common Methodism is to be congratulated on this valuable accession to our periodical treasures. I hope every Christian will have this beautiful Magazine." —Bishop John F. Hurst.

"It takes rank with the best for its varied and rich table of contents. A valuable auxiliary to our Epworth League work." —Bishop E. R. Hendrix.

The Press, Denominational and Secular, Speak in Highest Terms.

"A future of gratifying success and large usefulness is assured it." —St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"The contributions compare well with those of any other Magazine of the day and its illustrations are excelled by none." —Pittsburg (Pa.) Daily News.

"Interesting and attractive, not only to Methodists but also to the general reading public, for the matter which fills the pages is of a character broader than the title would indicate." —Columbus (O.) Dispatch.

"The prospectus of the Magazine indicates that there is an abundant feast of good things in store for its readers; but the Magazine itself is better than any prospectus." —The Pittsburg (Pa.) Times.

"The scholarship of the Magazine is insured by the editorship of Revs. James W. Lee and Nathaniel Lucecock, who are known and loved in St. Louis and throughout the West." —St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

"It compares favorably with the best of them, and is a brilliant success from the beginning." —Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution.

To these might be added hundreds of testimonials from Church officials, pastors and laymen, North and South, all praising the Magazine for its intrinsic worth and its lofty purpose.

"THE ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF METHODISM," which is being published serially in the Magazine, is a feature of unusual interest, and is alone worth the subscription price; but the History is only one of the many interesting and artistic features of each number.

Every Methodist family should be a subscriber. Its price is so small all can afford it, but in combination with this paper an opportunity is offered to secure both publications for less than the cost of each one.

The subscription price of THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE is $1.00 a year. The subscription price of this paper is 1.00 a year. We will supply BOTH one year for 1.00.

This is our GREAT COMBINE—a plan of combined action in the interests of our readers, and which they are invited to join. Do not delay. Take advantage of this remarkable offer at once. It may not remain open long.

RICHMOND CENTENNIAL.

committee to raise $5,000 to be used for expenses and to aid in paying off some debt and for the further improvement of Trinity. About $3,000 was subscribed. In the afternoon there was a Sunday-School Re-union of scholars of Trinity from 1814 to 1899, and interesting addresses were made by Rev. J. C. Reed and Hon. A. Maupin. Gov. Tyler was called upon and responded in an appropriate and brotherly talk. At night there was preaching at several of the Churches. Dr. Hoss greatly pleased the congregations to which he preached during the day, and Bishop Wilson, in his sermon at night, on "Faith, Hope and Charity," is said to have preached with great clearness and unusual fervor. The Church was jammed and several hundred people were turned away.

Monday was given up to historical Methodism. The general paper on "The Sources of Power in Methodism" was read by Dr. Hoss. It was broad and comprehensive, giving a general sketch of the condition of affairs in the times of the Wesleys, and the special characteristics of the Methodist movement. It was highly spoken of by the large congregation which, although it was Monday morning, filled the ground floor and the galleries to the doors. In the afternoon a very interesting historical paper, which had been written by Dr. A. G. Brown, was read by Prof. R. E. Blackwell, Dr. Brown being too unwell to read it. Other addresses were made by Bishop Wilson, Dr. Lafferty, Dr. Johnson, Dr. Tudor, Dr. Whitehead, Dr. Young, Dr. Starr, and Bros. Reed, and Lear. Dr. Young's address on Tuesday night on "Methodism and City Evangelization" was thoughtful and instructive, and was delivered with an earnestness and intensity which greatly stirred the congregation. Addresses by Drs. Starr, James Atkins, and others have been delivered since the departure of this writer from the city. Dr. Starr was just swinging out when the time came to leave for the train, which I caught in Richmond, only to wait four hours for the N. & W. in Petersburg.

The special features of the meeting were the singing and testimony. The hymns used were printed on large cards which were generally distributed through the congregation. These hymns were sung to familiar tunes and the people were urged to join in. They did so with a will and the walls rang with a volume of such melody that the hearts of all were stirred. It was very evident that the Church has been shorn of much of its power by surrendering to a few the great privilege of praising God. Some music may be rendered as solos and quartettes and be blessed to the glory of God, but there should always be several pieces which can be sung without difficulty by all the people. Nothing develops the critical habit more than to be a non-participant in the service. Each person ought to feel that there is not simply A service, but that it is OUR service, and to join in the praise will develop the idea of partnership. Our people need an opportunity for an audible expression of their thoughts and feelings, and as we have no elaborate ritual, this opportunity should be given in the song service. We have surrendered too much to organ and choir and the result is seen in many Churches. Where the choir sings well, it too often wishes to do it all, and the people sit in the pews, not as worshippers, but as attendants upon a concert, and where it does not, as is often the case, the striving after the impossible turns the service of praise into a source of laughter or of mortification. Surely any one who heard the singing at Richmond by all the people cannot fail to realize that one of the great elements of Methodist power was the singing. May the lesson be deeply impressed and a reformation follow which shall spread to the Churches outside of Richmond.

The love-feasts, or class meetings, were greatly enjoyed by old and young. They called out expressions of deep feeling from many as recalling younger days. The value of such meetings is very great, especially where the participants are not strangers. The weight of testimony as to the work of God in the heart depends upon the life, and that is known only by neighbors and kindred. There is large gain in coming before one's intimates to make a statement as to growth in grace. The heart is searched by the words of one's lips and by the faces of our neighbors as we speak to them of our spiritual experiences. There has frequently been much hypocrisy in testimonies, but that is found in every form of worship, and the good greatly outweighed the bad in the old Methodist life.

There has been an apparent substitution of the class meeting in the devotional work of the Epworth League, but that is more in the nature of talks on topics than the giving of personal testimony. The blending of the two is doubtless productive of the best results. Testimony, without a topic to which to direct thought, is likely to become mere repetition of the same thing every time the speaker gets up, and the discussion of the topic without personal application and heart-searching is likely to dwindle into a mere display of one's intellectual gifts. The discussion of a given subject in the light and heat of one's personal experience will make the most helpful meetings both to the talkers and the listeners.

The Richmond meetings ought to do great good, and stimulate the Church to greater zeal to pluck the souls of their friends from the eternal burning.

It was a very great disappointment to all that Bishop Galloway was sick in bed and unable to attend. The condition of Dr. Brown was also a source of much anxiety to his friends. He has gone to Clifton Springs, New York, for treatment, and hopes to be speedily restored to health.

THE BALTIMORE CONFERENCE JOINS.

The Baltimore Conference, partner with the Virginia Conference in the Randolph-Macon system, closed its session in Washington City on Tuesday evening, April 11th. On the preceding Friday the Conference Board of Education reported in favor of a hearty endorsement of the Twentieth Century Thank-Offering movement, with a plan for its conduct in the Conference. After addresses by Dr. J. D. Hammond, Secretary of Education, and Chancellor W. W. Smith, the report was unanimously adopted.

Rev. I. W. Canter, Rev. J. W. Duffy, and Geo. R. Hill were appointed an executive committee to supervise the campaign, and Chancellor Smith was elected manager of the canvass.

The Conference voted that five per cent. of the funds raised and subject to the direction of the Conference, should be devoted to strengthen schools in the foreign field and the remainder to Randolph-Macon Academy at Front Royal and Randolph-Macon College at Ashland. The minimum sum to be raised is $62,000.

By this action the Baltimore and Virginia Conferences are united practically under the same plan and leadership to clear from debt and strengthen with endowment the entire Randolph-Macon system, besides rendering valuable help to build up our Theological department at Vanderbilt University and to aid our foreign educational work.

On Monday, the 10th, Bishop Galloway, the leader of the Twentieth Century movement, addressed the Conference in an earnest and eloquent presentation of the movement, creating much interest.

The spirit of the Conference is of set purpose to do this great thing, and there is a growing faith that in the doing of it the Church will receive a blessing in all departments which will start it with new life and energy upon the work of the twentieth century of unparalleled opportunity.

Bishop Galloway has engaged to speak at Staunton on June 9th and at Roanoke on the 12th on this subject. M. C.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON V, SECOND QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, APRIL 30.

Text of the Lesson, John xiv, 15-27.
Memory Verses, 25, 26—Golden Text,
John xiv, 16—Commentary Prepared
by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

15. "If ye love Me, keep My commandments." In verses 21, 23 also of this lesson, we, having the keeping of His word or commandments as the evidence of our love to Him, are taught the necessity of having His word dwelling richly in us (Col. iii, 16) if we would prove that we do love Him. We do not think it tiresome to read quite a long letter from one whom we truly love or to read it many times, but many Christians find it tiresome to read even a chapter from the word of God, and to read a whole book would be an unbearable task.

16. "And I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another comforter, that He may abide with you forever." In chapter xv, 26, He is called the Spirit of Truth, and as such He testifies of Christ. In chapter xvi, 7-15, He convicts of sin, righteousness and judgment, guides into all truth and glorifies Christ by showing unto us things to come, the things that are Christ's. He also makes intercession in us, while Christ at God's right hand makes intercession for us (Rom. viii, 26, 34).

17. "He dwelleth with you and shall be in you." Ye are the temple of God, and the Spirit of God dwelleth in you (I Cor. iii, 16). When once He comes to dwell in us, as He does when we are born again, He never leaves us, even though we often grieve Him. He loves to the end. But how much better we might know Him! How He would fill us and how much He would tell us if we would yield fully to Him and cease to grieve Him by our worldly ways and un-Christianlike conduct!

18. "I will not leave you comfortless [or orphans—margin]. I will come to you." He will surely come again, and every sorrow shall be forgotten in that bright morning of His return when we shall see and share His glory, and until He does come the comforter will prove Himself a real comforter to all who are willing to receive Him heartily. Our Father is the Father of mercies and the God of all comfort (II Cor. i, 3, 4).

19. "Yet a little while, and the world seeth Me no more, but ye see Me; because I live ye shall live also." His life is ours. He is able to save evermore because He ever liveth (Heb. vii, 25, margin). He is our life, and as the one who was dead, but is alive for evermore, having the keys of hades and of death, He says unto us

"Dear God" (Rev. i, 17, 18). As the moon reflects upon us the light of the sun after he has gone from our sight, because she still sees him, so we ever seeing Jesus by faith should ever reflect His light.

20. "At that day ye shall know that I am in My Father and ye in Me, and I in you." Beloved, now are we the children of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is, and this hope set on Him is very purifying (I John iii, 2, 3). Then our whole spirit, soul and body will be blameless at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ (I Thess. v, 23, R. V.). May Christ be more fully formed in us now to the glory of God (Gal. iv, 19).

21. "He that hath My commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me, and he that loveth Me shall be loved of My Father, and I will love him and will manifest Myself to him." A special love to Christ receives special love from the Father and special manifestations of Christ from Himself. The Lord always reveals Himself to His people by His word and Spirit, even as He did to Samuel (I Sam. iii, 21).

22. "Lord, how is it that Thou wilt manifest Thyself unto us and not unto the world?" This question is from the other Judas, not Iscariot. He seems to say, If we can see you, why cannot others? He thought only of the outward, like Nicodemus and the woman at the well. He did not understand as yet the spiritual things seen only by spiritual people, the revelation of the heart of God to the heart of man. See I Cor. ii, 13, R. V.

23. "Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love Me, he will keep My words, and My Father will love him, and We will come unto him and make Our abode with him." In verse 17 He said that the Spirit would dwell in us, but now He adds that both the Father and Himself would come, too, and make their abode in those who love and keep His word. The word "abode" in this verse is just the same as the word "mansion" in verse 2, a little Greek noun four letters and not used anywhere but in these two verses. How wonderful that these bodies of ours may become mansions in which the Father, Son and Holy Spirit will condescend to dwell!

24. "He that loveth Me not keepeth not My sayings, and the word which ye hear is not Mine, but the Father's which sent Me." How often He tells us that the words are not His, but the Father's! (Verse 10; chapter xii, 49.) From the age of 13, if not before, He was about His Father's business (Luke ii, 49), and in all His life He Father spoke and wrought through Him. He was a vessel wholly for God, and He asks us to prevent our bodies from being sacrifice (Rom. xii, 1).

25. "These things have I spoken unto you, being yet present with you." They were some of His very last words ere He left them, and His whole heart's desire must have gone out to them in these words. He longed to have them know Himself and His Father better, that they might be full of joy, even His own joy, and in Him have peace (xv, 11; xvi, 24, 3; xvii, 13). Yet He knew that only by the Spirit could they fully understand, and so He said that it was better for Him to go, that the Spirit might come and open their eyes and convince them (xvi, 8).

26. "He shall teach you all things and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." This He said of the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, and He said, "Whom the Father will send in My name." Therefore the Spirit is ever wholly on His business, and when we are willing to be wholly on His business the Spirit will surely fill us. As the disciples thought of the very many things He had said to them and probably longed to recall every word what a comfort this assurance must have been!

27. "Peace I leave with you. My peace I give unto you, not as the world giveth unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." We have nothing apart from Christ. This peace is in Him. He is our peace and in Him is perfect peace (chapter xvi, 3; Eph. ii, 14; Isa. xxvi, 3). The world gives a kind of peace by pleasant circumstances, and when they fail the peace is gone, but He gives peace within where no man can reach.

FIVE BOOKS That help make BETTER AND WISER.

BESIDE THE BONNIE BRIER BUSH. (182 pages.) Complete and Unabridged from original edition. By IAN MACLAREN.

A collection of beautiful stories, full of pathos and Christian spirit. One of the most helpful and successful books of the age.

BLACK BEAUTY. (245 pages.) Complete and Unabridged. By ANNA SEWELL.

The "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of the Horse. Adopted by the Boston Grammar Schools as supplementary reading, to instil into their pupils the principles of kindness and justice to our domestic animals, as well as to each other.

DRUMMOND'S ADDRESSES. (263 pages.) Complete and Unabridged. By HENRY DRUMMOND.

By far the loftiest expression of religious sentiment that has ever appeared in book form. Contains the celebrated essay entitled "The Greatest Thing in the World, Love."

TEN NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM. (196 pages.) Complete and Unabridged. By T. S. ARTHUR.

This is the masterpiece of T. S. Arthur, and has been one of the most effective means of temperance reform ever conceived. Graphic, pathetic, convincing. Every young person in the land ought to read this book.

AESOP'S FABLES. (192 pages, with 50 illustrations. Contains 300 of the choicest fables.) Translated by Rev. G. F. TOWNSEND.

For centuries this collection of fables has been the fountain of worldly wisdom. Its apt and terse comparisons are calculated to clear the mind of falsehood, vanity and folly.

All these books are printed in large, clear type, and bound in white and gold (paper covers). Size of book 4 1/4 x 6 1/4 inches, such as have been usually sold at 25 cents each.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning April 30, "How Shall We Divide Our Time?"—Text, Eccl. III. 15.

"That which hath been is now, and that which is to be hath already been, and God requireth that which is past."

No one truth is more pressed home upon us by the Bible than that of personal accountability for the use of personal power and opportunity. The world of things moves in regular lines of law, and a man can know assuredly what is to be in the future from what has been in the past. Circumstances may change, but the great fundamental principles of human nature and the rules which apply to conduct never shift ground. We are what we make ourselves. God has given the raw material of our lives, and we manufacture character. For this He holds us responsible, and offers rewards for right results and pronounces penalties for wrongdoing and evil. The only sober thing for every man is clearly to recognize his duty to God and then to set himself to work to use his time and talents and opportunities so as to bring the largest and best results to God and himself.

It is folly to devote one's time and energy so fully to securing business advancement that the other needs of life are neglected. Soul needs should be recognized and fully provided for. Social duties and wants are real issues of moment in every life. One must cultivate neighborliness for his own sake and the good of others. He must learn to give and take or be less the man than he should be. Knowledge of men and things at large, the world and its great movements and interests, also have a claim on our attention and time.

Above all, a man should take time to be alone with himself and his God. The "quiet hour" is needed daily in every life. It is needed to sober one from the intoxication and excitement of the world's mad rush around us. It is needed to cast the anchor of faith and hope deeper and more securely in the unseen but real things of existence. Time must be given to think of God, of heaven, of holiness and the real happiness.

Stint your sleep if necessary, cut short your pleasures, economize time in your business, be frugal in social exertions, but give yourself ample time to get acquainted with God. If you can't bear to talk a few minutes a day with Him now, how can you ever expect to enjoy an eternity with Him hereafter?

Our New Possessions.

Deeper than the interest we have in the political future of Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippines is the care we must have for their religious uplift. Already plans are maturing for our church to send its missionaries into the islands not before occupied by us. We have had a mission for some years in Honolulu, but none in the West Indies or the Philippines.

Magazines and illustrated papers have for months been filled with articles on these newly opened lands. It would be of much profit and awaken new life in the literary work of the League to spend an evening in a review of the religious condition and needs of these lands. Short papers or addresses by several members could without great labor be prepared and illustrated by maps and pictures cut from current periodicals. Even when one has read much there is a charm in having a condensation of facts gathered from many sources and placed in new language. The exercises

Open Thon Mine Eyes.

Not what one reads with the eyes but what one sees with the soul is the valuable thing in Bible study. The illumination needed is not on the text, but on the human understanding. Often one has read a passage so frequently that it has become memorized and stereotyped and almost meaningless. Suddenly under some new stress of circumstances, danger, sorrow, helplessness or new found joy, the passage beams out as the flash of some great lighthouse far over the sea. The word grows luminous, the soul is flooded with pure radiance, and the eyes see as never before beauties and glories which no tongue can describe, but which one's own spirit eyes must behold if he is ever to comprehend. The finger of God has touched the eyes before blind or held and has opened the vision.

New Magazine.

For years there has been talk of an up to date Methodist magazine. Now the announcement is made that such a one is to be published in St. Louis. It will have two editors, one from the Church South and one from the Methodist Episcopal church.

Such a venture ten years ago would have been sure of a cordial greeting and had good prospect of success. Now the field has been so filled with cheap magazines with fine articles and profuse illustrations in the highest style of art that the attempt is more hazardous. It will need a large sum of money to insure it a place in the field already well filled.

"If only, Lord," the happy voices sing—
"If only we have Thee, who faileth never,
Nor life nor death nor any other thing
Can hurt our joy forever and forever!"

If men could know how quickly pain is spent,
What compensations heaven has in keeping,
What home means, after earth's bleak banishment—
If only they would smile instead of weeping!

Sing louder, radiant host, wake our dull ears
Till, though the path be hard and the day lonely,
We, too, shall answer through the mist of tears
"If only we have Thee, Lord—have Thee only!"

GROWN WITH "HARD CASH" GUANO

On the Farm of Joseph M. Hurt, by J. P. Pettus.---Average Length of Leaf, FORTY INCHES.

MARCH 1st, 1899.

TESTIMONIALS:

MARCH 1st, 1899.

TEST MADE BY WALKER CLUB. the Bellefonte Guano was applied.

TINKLING, Lusenburg Co., Va.

To the Blackstone Guano Co.,
Blackstone, Va.

Gentlemen:—A committee of the Walker Club, composed of John O. Bragg and F. S. Manson, Jorgenson, and Theo. Orgain, Tinkling, Va., have examined the results of the fertilizer test made for the club on my farm with ten of the best brands of guanos. On plot No. 1, old lot land, ten brands of fertilizers were applied, each at the rate of 100 pounds per acre, the ten sections carefully marked and treated alike. The committee picked out the section on which your Bellefonte Guano was used as the one showing the best results. On plot No. 2, four acres of new ground from old field fine land, four brands were used. Here the committee also found the best results, very decidedly, in the acre on which

Yours truly,
L. A. HARDY.

I have sold the tobacco made on the four acres mentioned above. The tobacco made on the acre on which the Bellefonte was used brought thirty-four dollars and fourteen cents ($34.14) more than the tobacco made on either of the other acres. This acre, as far as I know, had no advantage over the other three acres, either in cultivation or natural fertility, or any other way. I know the tobacco did not get mixed in cutting, curing or shipping.

L. A. HARDY,
Committee for W. A. C.

I have used the several brands of guano made by the Blackstone Guano Company, for ten years and have tested them by brands of other makes on the same field and truthfully say that I think the Bellefonte and Hard Cash are unsurpassed for tobacco. It gives me pleasure to recommend the Blackstone Guano Co's. Guano to the farmers of Southside Virginia.

JOS. M. HURT.

Nottoway County.

Gentlemen:—I used your Bellefonte Guano last year along with another brand and sold the tobacco from the Bellefonte at an average of $19 per hundred, and the tobacco grown with the other brand at an average of less than $12, showing a difference of $7 per hundred in favor of Bellefontaine Guano. This ought to be enough to show what I think of Bellefonte Guano.

V. C. LOVE.

Danville, Va.

Gentlemen:—I have used your Guanos for the past ten years, and they have given me perfect satisfaction. I consider the Bellefonte the best I ever used, and shall use it the present year.

FRANK WHITE.

Nottoway Co.

Gentlemen:—I used your Bellefonte Guano last season along with other brands and am thoroughly convinced that it is the best I ever used. I have sold one barn of tobacco raised with the Bellefonte at an average of $15 around, lugs and all, which is a high average for shipping tobacco.

V. O. ANDREWS.

Dinwiddie, Co.

Blackstone Guano Co.—Gentlemen:—I bought of your agent, Mr. J. J. Mason, and used your Bellefonte Guano last season and am well pleased with the results. I have used a great many brands and think I can truly say it is the best I ever used, especially in the last ten years. Will say to my farmer friends that I think it a great mistake to use a low grade guano to save a few dollars in the ton at the expense of a larger difference in each hundred pounds of tobacco grown.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Lessons Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

A preacher's lack of wisdom is very often an overplus of sympathy.—Dr. V. S. Crowe, Universalist, New York.

The Liquor Problem.

Take away private profit from the liquor business, and, if you have not slain the terrible tiger, you have at least drawn his teeth and his claws.—Rev. Henry W. Pinkham, Baptist, Denver.

Fault Finders.

The habitual fault finder spends his time in planting the cactus along his own path and that of his friends, and then complains that the thorns are sharp.—George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

A Great Agitator.

Jesus Christ was the greatest disturber of the peace, and the world crucified him. But it was by the disturbance he caused that this world has been lifted up.—Rev. George L. Richmond, Presbyterian, Rutherford, N. J.

Sacrifice.

Sacrifice is the making all that one is sacred unto God and the welfare of mankind. It is the persistent using of all one's powers and possessions for the moral and spiritual betterment of the self and the world.—Rev. C. E. St. John, Unitarian, Pittsburgh.

Expansion.

Expansion of territory, as every one knows, has been thought to be for our public a suicidal policy, but whether this is the case or not, expansion of territory even beyond the natural water boundaries of our country already has begun.—Rev. Dr. Townsend, Methodist, Washington.

A Rallying Point.

There are today many men who stay away from church because they think they are not wanted in the church and others who stay away because they think they do not need the church, yet both classes feel that there should be a standard lifted—a rallying point made for righteousness.—Dr. William S. Rainsford, Episcopalian, New York.

Life.

Our Lord was not a negative but a positive teacher. His ministry was not only destructive of error, but constructive of truth. Life depends mainly on the state of mind and heart. It is a common but true saying, "A contented mind is a continual feast." What matters it whether we have little or much if we are contented. Life is too often degraded into a mere struggle for money.—Rev. W. J. Ramsey, Presbyterian, Pittsburgh.

The Christian Life.

A Christian life is the very highest thing, the real poetry of life, and the saddest thing of all the sad things of earth is that, in our absorbing passion for the practical, we treat the sentimental as though it were a useless thing. We think the divine vision fades, the divine voice dies in our souls and waken to the tragic fact that our spirits are deserted spectrums. Where there is no vision there can be no art, no heroism, no outlook into the world invisible, where our true treasures are.—Rev. Charles C. Albertson, Methodist, Buffalo.

Reasons For Churchgoing.

We should go to church for the nurture of spiritual life. Physical life is nourished by wholesome food, regularly taken. It may even, at times, require a tonic. The church stands for help in a needy world. There the means appointed by the divine Giver of Life for spiritual nourishment may be had. The church educates the spirit. Some who regularly attend may continue ignorant. Conversion is a marvelous blessing, but Christ never intended that man should cling to that one experience as a limpet, glued to its parent rock, sticks there though washed by the waves of a boundless sea. It is carelessness amounting to profanity to imagine an independence of Christ's constituted church, as if men could do as well without it or because 1 per cent of her adherents may be hypocrites. It is manly and dutiful to attend church. To act otherwise is to act disobediently and to ignore Christ's appointed means for advancing His kingdom.—Dr. W. D. Williams, Church of the Holy Apostles, New York.

Dawn of a New Idea.

In the Revolution America won liberty. In the civil war America achieved nationality. In the campaign of 1898 America rose into new and holy relations with humanity. Necessity has been laid upon us to study and to illustrate a new idea in the progress of the race—the obligation which rests upon a strong and prosperous people to minister to the woe of the world beyond its own frontiers. The guns of Dewey ushered in the dawn of another day. This is a twilight hour of tumult and confusion, of the clash of opinions and the struggle of prejudices. The wounds of conflict are still unhealed. The sweat of the struggle is not yet wiped away. On the one hand is timidity, on the other asperity. The brazen cry of greed is heard and the serpentine hiss of cunning. But a glorious daybreak has come. In the years which are to come, lands redeemed from tyranny and made rich with the choicest stores of a Christian civilization, peoples rescued from ignorance and barbarism and uplifted to a place among the nations of the earth, races saved from savagery and dowered with priceless blessings of civil and religious liberty, will recall the roar of those fateful cannon and look back to those somber hours of the bared sword and the smoking musket and will utter the grateful cry "What a glorious morning! God bless the United States!"—Rev. Howard Duffield, Presbyterian, New York.

EPWORTH LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

The Epworth Leagues of the Petersburg and Farmville districts met in joint session at Blackstone, Friday evening, April 28, 1899, Rev. John O. Moss, presiding.

On motion, G. F. Greene was elected secretary, and R. S. Baughan assistant secretary.

After singing hymn No. 1, in the Young People's Hymnal, Hon. T. Freeman Epes, Mayor of Blackstone, was introduced, and in well-chosen, earnest words welcomed the Epworth Leaguers to Blackstone. This address was followed by Rev. R. A. Compton, pastor of the Methodist Church, who, in behalf of the Church, gave the Leaguers a hearty welcome. To these addresses of welcome Rev. E. T. Dadmun, of Petersburg, responded.

After singing No. 8, Rev. A. Coke Smith, D. D., was introduced and made a powerful speech on "The Epworth League Movement."

Announcements for Saturday morning's session were read, and then the Conference adjourned.

Saturday, April 29th.—The Conference met according to adjournment. Rev. T. H. Campbell in the chair.

An experience meeting was conducted by Rev. E. V. Carson, after which the subjects previously announced were taken up and discussed.

"Do we need the League in the Country?"—By Rev. G. F. Greene.

"How to get them?"—By Rev. J. B. Winn.

"How they may help the pastor?"—By Rev. R. S. Baughan.

Dr. A. Coke Smith was introduced to the Conference and gave some very practical hints on "How the pastor may help the League," and was followed by Rev. E. T. Dadmun on the same subject.

"Junior Work" was ably discussed by Rev. W. W. Lear, and was followed by a beautiful and helpful paper prepared and read by Miss Alice Owens, of Smith Grove League.

Rev. T. P. Epes, D. D., president of the Hoge Academy, and pastor of Blackstone Presbyterian Church, was introduced to the Conference.

Announcements for the afternoon session were read, and then the Conference adjourned with the benediction by Rev. Dr. Epes.

Afternoon session, 2:30 o'clock.—The Conference met according to adjournment. Rev. E. V. Carson in the chair. Divine service was conducted by G. V. Robinette.

The minutes of the morning session were read and approved.

Rev. E. T. Dadmun moved that in the absence of two of the speakers for the afternoon topics, that these subjects be eliminated, and the time be taken up in hearing reports from the different Leagues. The motion prevailed, and encouraging reports were made from the following Leagues:—Crenshaw, Crewe, Farmville, Amelia, Eltrick, Matoaca, Market-Street, Smith Grove, Ocran. After these reports the following papers were read:

"Public Literary Meetings"—By Miss Julia Blackwell, of the Blackstone Female Institute.

"League Social"—By Miss Ruth Blanks, of the Washington-Street League.

"What social entertainments shall we substitute for those we condemn?"—By Forrest W. Tucker, of the Market-Street League.

The questions from the question drawer were answered by Rev. E. T. Dadmun, and then the Conference adjourned.

Saturday evening, 8 o'clock.—A concert and reception was tendered the Conference by the Blackstone Female Institute. The programme was elaborate, and was rendered in a faultless manner by the young ladies.

On motion, the Conference, by a rising vote, extended thanks to the Faculty and pupils for the pleasant entertainment.

Sunday, April 30.—The Conference met according to adjournment. Rev. J. R. Sturgis in the chair.

Divine service was conducted by Rev. J. R. Sturgis, after which the following subjects were discussed:

"Department of charity and help"—By Rev. J. B. Winn.

"Missions"—A paper prepared by Rev. W. W. Royall, D. D., and read by Rev. J. R. Sturgis.

The hour for preaching having arrived, the Conference adjourned to a sermon by Rev. W. W. Lear. Subject: "Christ our Ideal."

Afternoon session.—The Conference met according to adjournment. Rev. R. S. Baughan in the chair.

A Love-Feast was conducted by Rev. John O. Moss. After this spiritual feast, the following topics upon the League prayer-meeting were discussed:

"The leader's preparation."—By G. V. Robinette.

"How to lead."—By Geo. P. Adams.

"How to help the leader."—By Rev. F. W. Proctor.

And then the Conference adjourned. Evening session, 8 o'clock.—The Con ly, or returns to her former course of duty renouncing the scenes which have deeply wounded her conscience and robbed her of her innocence and peace; for unless the pleasures of the ball-room be LOVED they cannot be ENJOYED, and will not be followed; but if the heart be imbued with the love of those sensual pleasures, they will banish the love of God, of duty and of devotion.

The second thing that we should condemn is theatre-going. But says someone, I think, we should condemn theatre-going as a practice, but I don't see any harm in going to see one of Shakespeare's plays; in fact, I think it is instructive. Have you ever thought of the influence you may have on others by attending even these plays? How about the man who is making the Church-member's faults an excuse for his not belonging to the Church? Will not anyone seeing you there on these occasions take it for granted that you are a regular attendant. But if it be desirable to possess ourselves of the rights and benefits of Shakespeare's productions, this can be done more advantageously by a calm, private reading of an edition of them, than by thinking of the dirty waters that require increased muddiness as they flow to us through the channel of the stage. Again, can you ask God to go with you on these occasions, or can you carry the motto of our organization—"All for Christ"—into the theatre, even to witness one of Shakespeare's plays? The next thing that we should condemn is the circus. This is so universally condemned by Church members that I shall not descant at length on it. I know that no member of the Epworth League could be found at a circus, unless, of course, they happened to get inside the tent by accident; that is, they went to see the animals, and accidentally got inside where they were compelled to witness the exhibition.

Again, we should condemn card-playing. Playing for amusement is to be distinguished very much from the habitual tipping is to drunkenness. One leads to the other as directly as the road to the city or the river to the sea. No man becomes a gambler by one step, no more than he becomes a drunkard by one step. It is by playing with the harmless and beautiful pung adder, until his poison fangs are down, that man becomes mortally but unconsciously bitten. To teach any one to play at all, is to throw him into temptation; to form the habit is to give power to that temptation; and to contract a passion for playing is to become a victim. On one occasion, a lady, after hearing a searching sermon by the pastor, told him she could submit to all the claims of the gospel, as laid down in him, save in one thing—she could not give up the amusement of cards. You think you could not be happy without them? said he. I KNOW I could not, he replied. Then, madam, they are for God, and they must save you or you are lost.

And now we have come to the original question: What Entertainment shall we substitute? This question is answered in the scope of the work of the Third Department of the League—The Literary Committee.

For those who advocate Dancing because it gives good exercise and is therefore, healthy, our Literary Committee would organize a Bicycle club. Instead of being accomplished in YOUR "pedal attributes", we would teach you to master the "pedal attributes" of the Bicycle. Instead of learning to "balance all" in the mazes of the dance, we would place you on a wheel and learn you to "balance all". Having mastered the art of wheeling, which you will do in an infinitely shorter time than you can the art of dancing, instead of WHIRLING in the rounds of the waltz, we would take you SPINNING over the hill and dale, when, instead of breathing the heated, impure air of the ball room, you can breathe God's own fresh and pure air. Instead of listening to the music of the orchestra, we would invite you to listen to the grandest and most sublime music—that of nature; for as Byron has said: "There's Music in the sighing of a reed; There's Music in the gushing of a rill; There's Music in all things, if men had ears; This Earth is but an echo of the spheres".

If the Bicycle club does not appeal to you, then we would organize a golf club, or a tennis club, or a croquet club.

For those who attend the theatre for either entertainment or instruction, the Literary Committee would substitute the Literary Entertainment. Now I do not mean that we should attempt to imitate the clog dancer or the burnt cork singer of comic songs. The Church is not a professional fun-maker, and when she attempts this she is out of her place. Any recitation or speech bordering on the coarse or vulgar should be strictly guarded against. If we are not going to substitute higher and better entertainment than the theatre we should not attempt to substitute at all. We should appeal to the higher and better qualities of man—to his manly and not to his animal nature. These meetings should be bright and sunny, however, and the proper kind of fun should come into them. It is as natural for young people to have fun as it is for birds to sing. Music should be given a prominent place on the program for these occasions. Vocal, instrumental, or both. Vocal—solos, duets, trios, quartets, choruses. Instrumental—organ, piano, guitar, mandolin, violin, cornet. For the benefit of our Shakespearean attendant of the theatre, we might have several scenes from one of Shakespeare's plays presented by our League talent. If we have not talent enough for this, we might use his works in the Reading Circle. The following suggestions for these occasions might not be amiss:

A Curio Social: In nearly every home may be found some rare and curious article. Let each member bring that, and tell about it; its discovery, use, value, etc.

An Evening with a Wizard. Take up Edison's work as an electrician, and show how he has made electricity the friend and servant of mankind.

An Interview with the Editor of a Daily Paper. Let some young lady be editor in chief; then let her receive "copy" from reporters, Society Editor, Poetry Editor, etc.

The Biography of a Silver Dollar. Let several members write a continued story on this subject. Tell how it was taken from the mine; coming up to the light of day; its journey to the smelter, trip to the U. S. Mint; in circulation; in exchange for a Bible; in a Missionary's hands in a distant country; its account of the salvation of a heathen, etc.

What I could do with a Million Dollars.

Tableaux, Debates, Essays etc on Historical or modern topics, will all go to make up an evening of rare enjoyment and instruction.

For card playing we may substitute almost any game. Authors, Farchesi, Dominoes, Chess, Crokinole and a multitude of others. Again there is the League Social, for our enjoyment

Then there are the moonlight nights for excursions or hay-rides. What equals the balmy hours after twilight for resting the body and enlarging the mind with great thoughts of God? The contemplation of the Heavens, the vastness of the celestial dome, the stillness and orderly procession of the burning worlds in space, the soft breathing zephyr, all bid men's heart break out in a doxology to Him who is the inspiration of every noble purpose in human life, and the exceeding great reward of the loving and true hearted disciple of His Son.

The trite statement that the Church does not open any doors for innocent pleasures is, alas! too common; and though the Church is not expected to amuse, it ought, at least, to furnish entertainment of such a character as to commend itself to the respect of the thoughtful and, too often, unsaved portion of our young people.

THIS NUMBER.

This number of the RECORDER is given up to an account of the Epworth League Conference of the Farmville and Petersburg Districts.

It was the first Conference ever held by this districts. It met at Blackstone. There were between Sixty and Seventy-five delegates present. The congregations were large, from six to eight hundred persons, the very large Church being crowded on some occasions. The papers and addresses were strong, helpful, inspiring.

The papers which were handed in, are published in this issue of the RECORDER. But the fine address by Dr. A. Coke Smith, the spiritual sermons of Bro. Dadman and Lear, the stimulating talks by Bro. Winn, and many others we can not give here. The experience meetings were profitable to all, and the Conference closed with reconsecrations, penitents at the altar and conversions.

May this Conference be only one of many such, and may its spiritual character prevail in all our Church gatherings Annual and District Conferences, should all bring immediate spiritual fruit in reconsecration and conversion.

It is only just and right to say that the success of the Convention was more largely due to Bro. E. T. Dadman than to any other one person. He was always in place, and ready to give the best turn to everything that took place. In his endeavour he received the earnest co-operation of the brethren. A spirit of brotherly love prevailed, and the Holy Ghost manifested His approval by His evident presence.

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER!

On the third page of this issue a statement is published concerning the "American Illustrated Monthly Magazine." This is a monthly magazine, of which Dr. J. W. Lee is one of the editors. It is fully described on the third page. THE EXTRAORDINARY OFFER is to furnish this excellent magazine, coming once every month, and the METHODIST RECORDER coming once every week for $1.00 for a whole year!

HOW TO MAKE A JUNIOR LEAGUE SUCCESSFUL.

(BY MISS ALICE OWENS)

Can we conceive a grander work given to mortals here below than that of gently leading the rising generation—the little ones of our land—in the foot-steps of our blessed Master, the Holy Child, Christ Jesus? Is not this the object of the Junior League; and think ye not that God Himself looks down upon such an organization with an approving eye. Ah, yes. Then with His divine approval and His promise to bless and prosper His cause upon earth, we must make a grand, aye, a glorious success of the Junior League?

There seems to be a lack of these societies. Why is this? Why is the religious training of the little folk of our Church so neglected?

I fear the Leaguers in general feel too little, if any, interest in the welfare of the younger League. This should not be so. Dear Leaguers, if we are deeply and earnestly interested in the future as well as the present success of our society, we will look forward to the time when our places must be filled by those who are now but children. God knows only how great a work may be accomplished by the League of the future if we do our part with the children of today.

Be not afraid to let them know that you are interested in their labors. Cause them to feel that they are doing a work that none but they can do.

The superintendent of the society holds an office of great responsibility. To you, dear friend, may be due the failure or success of the League over which you preside.

I beseech you. Let your light so shine before men that even the children, seeing your good works, may glorify your Father which is in Heaven. A sincere, everyday, live Christian is wanted. Not one who seems only to think of the spiritual life when in the Junior room, but one whose life and light appears to shine brighter and brighter unto the perfect day.

Dear superintendent do you realize the fact that the little ones under your leadership are looking to you for an example of a perfect life in Christ? Oh, let them not be led astray.

It is necessary to carefully study the disposition of each child in order to know how to obtain the highest and best results in your dealings with that child. Teach the children to love and trust you by sharing with them as much as possible their little sorrows or pleasures as the case may be.

When you are in their company make yourself a child with them. A little pleasant surprise now and then pleases the children very much. For instance, at one of their Junior meetings have some older one whom they love come in and give them a short address or a good story with a lesson in it for themselves.

Another time, at the close of the service, give them a surprise by serving light refreshments. Occasionally invite the Juniors to spend the afternoon with their superintendent; or go with them to give their pastor a surprise call; thus pleasing the children as well as causing the pastor to feel that he is remembered by the lambs of his flock.

These with many other little harmless pleasures that might be mentioned cause the children to feel that in joining the society they are not entirely shut out from what they so much delight in—having a good time.

One thing necessary to success is order during the hour of service. Let the children understand this from the first. Make it a rule to begin the meetings on time. I would advise the study of the Church catechism in connection with the Junior League. Prayer-meeting topics, each one of which should be so simply explained that the tiniest tot in the room will understand it and be able to tell you something about it when the lesson is perhaps reviewed the next week. To make the lesson more interesting read a good story or relate an incident illustrating that portion you wish to make most impressive.

By all means encourage the children to take an active part in the prayer-meetings. I believe the Seniors make a great mistake by keeping silent in their service. They not only miss a blessing from God but also an opportunity perhaps of doing much good to their fellowmen.

If the children are taught to read the verse of scripture, to rise and give their little religious experiences and to offer prayer while young, when they become Seniors they will not be afraid to hear the sound of their own voice in an Epworth League prayer-meeting, as seen to be the case—I regret to say—with the average Leaguer of the present. I imagine there is joy in Heaven as the Saviour listens with delight as the childish prayers of the little ones are wafted upward from the Junior room of Virginia. Let the League be officiated by children. Teach them how to conduct a business meeting properly. Let them feel that there is a responsibility resting upon each one of them.

If by these few suggestions I may at least encourage any Junior worker I feel that I am fully repaid for any effort I may have put forth to make this paper interesting. I pray God's rich blessing upon you and may great success attend your labors.

PUBLIC LITERARY MEETINGS.

(BY MISS JULIA BLACKWELL.)

"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." Since it would never do for Jack to be a dull boy, he must have play, and play of the right sort; for Jack is a good and conscientious boy and does not want to cast a reproach upon the cause he has espoused by the choice of any form of amusement that he or his leader could not countenance. The question of how to spend his play hours thus becomes a serious one with Jack. What shall he do to amuse himself? Shall he yield to his natural love of gaiety and go to those places of amusement that have not the sanction and approval of his Church? Or shall he rather abstain from all forms of amusement? In his innocent heart he knows that the weight of his influence should be placed on the side of right and the Church, but his nature calls most energetically for some healthy and harmless amusement.

Jack is of a social nature, also, and never enjoys himself so much as when he is sharing his pleasure with Jack or some other of his large circle of friends. The study of human nature is a charming study to him, especially when that human nature is embodied in the attractive person of some fine fellow or nice girl. He likes to broaden his ideas by comparing them with the ideas of some one else. In fact, young folk, like birds, naturally flock together. But Jack is not satisfied with the mere companionship of his friends; he desires some lasting good to result therefrom. He wishes to broaden his ideas not only by observation, but by other means as well.

Jack's comrades feel about the matter just as he does. Their appetite for facts of some kind is enormous and not easily satisfied; nevertheless they feel for Jack that fun gotten in defiance of the vows is not fun. To afford them amusement their amusements must be uplifting. Since beneath the gay exterior there lies hidden a wealth of earnestness that occasionally sends up a shining nugget of serious thought, they desire that their amusements be helpful.

as enjoyable. Fortunately, the Church now recognizes the need for this full development of man's whole nature, or, at least, that part of his nature that is freed from the dominion of the old Adam. Happily for the young people, the times of the strict Puritan regime have passed by—those good old days when it was reckoned a sin for the mother to kiss her child on Sunday. Now the Church sees the necessity of providing for that side of young people's nature which pleads for recreation and she furnishes them with the means of obtaining almost an endless amount of enjoyment at the same time that she bestows hearty encouragement on the earnest desire for improvement latent in the mind of every right minded youth or maiden. By the Public Literary meetings of the Epworth League, the Church affords opportunities for social pleasure as well as for greater culture and the broadening of the mental and moral horizon. The Church also publicly recognizes the benefits to be derived from the contemplation and study of the noble thoughts of noble men.

The public literary meeting is indeed a blessing to Jack. He learns from it two things. One is that the mighty preacher spoke the truth when he said: "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity," for he, that evening, has seen himself and his feelings over and over again in the writings of the author who was up for consideration, and he has enjoyed exceeding these repeated meetings with himself. His pride gets a hard fall when he finds that he has, himself, yielded to the weakness of vanity, and he leaves the meeting a wiser though not a sadder man. The only thing that reconciles him to the discovery that he had been breaking the command not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think, is the fact that he enjoyed just as greatly the recognizing of his friends' traits and peculiarities in those self-same writings. He has seen himself and his friends playing parts in a wider life than his own. He has had the pleasure of expressing that, in this life of his, he would never have thought of, but which, he now sees, would have been his own had he just have had the opportunity to exchange places with the characters in the book. In fact, as Jack walks home in the moonlight, he comes to the entirely novel conclusion that a great water holds up a mirror to nature and reflects in a glorified fashion sure enough people. And Jennie, who is with him, of course thinks as he does.

In looking back over the evening, Jack tries to discover why it was that he enjoyed the public literary meeting so much. His self-respect will not allow him to think that all his enjoyment was due to the fact that he saw himself and his friends as they would like to be and perhaps are not, as yet. For one thing, the subjects read and discussed during the evening stirred his brain and touched his heart. Jack is not a genius and would never be expected to set the world on fire by his unusual brainy, but he has a brain and he likes to use it. He knows that himself. He likes to be made to think, not too deeply, and he does not object to a reasonable acceleration in the betraying of his heart. In his thoughtful moments he has discovered that his muscles strengthen by being used. His little brother is never happier than when he is making a contortionist of himself to develop his muscles in an all-round fashion. So Jack does not see why his mind and heart should not strengthen by being used, just as his muscles do. At any rate, since this form of diversion is eminently enjoyable, he determines to try it.

Jack has only one reason to be grateful to the public literary meetings; for now, when he marches up to Miss Jennie and asks, with his very best bow, if he may see her safely home, he no longer experiences the terrible shock

ing of the heart that used to turn out to him when he wondered what he was to talk about. Now he plunges gallantly into a discussion of the merits and demerits of the writings and the life of some author.—Longfellow for instance, whom they have had in a public meeting while Jennie eagerly follows his lead. No longer do they have to refine their conversation to suit the weather or each other's doings for now has been brought into their lives the very piece of life—variety and nobility—of the weather or each other's doings for now has been brought into their lives the very piece of life—variety and nobility—of the weather or each other's doings for now has been brought into their lives the very piece of life—variety and nobility—

Not only this, but the conversation comes to be a pleasure in itself. As has been said before, Jack is a thoughtful boy and wishes to be helped even by his amusements. He finds that the public literary meetings of the Epworth League do really help him, for they quicken his love of books and of reading and enlarge his circle of ideas. He discovers that what Sir Francis Bacon says is true, "that there is no impediment in the wit but may be wrought out by appropriate studies." He straightway resolves to read histories for wisdom, and poetry for wit. Jack's comrades, too, are deriving much benefit from the meetings. There is Tom who loves to read but has few books. It warms Jack's very heart to see Tom's intense enjoyment of the meetings. Then Dick, poor Dick, who is as afraid of a book two inches thick as a timid maiden is of a mouse—even Dick has actually begun to read, and with pleasure, too.

Jack also begins to realize with amazement that his taste in books is changing. He no longer enjoys what once seemed to him the highest product of artistic skill. Formerly he read with enjoyment what now wearies him. He remembers when, a short while back, he read greedily, books of the blood and thunder stamp, thrilling detective stories, accounts of break neck adventures and hair-breadth escapes; now he considers Sir Walter Scott's romances sufficiently thrilling and Dickens's Pickwick Papers full enough of adventure. In his reckless moods, Cooper's stories of Indian life and of life on the broad ocean furnish him with all he desires in the way of excitement. Jennie, too, finds that Dora Thorne, East Lynne, and St. Elmo fail to satisfy her intellectual craving now. They both realize that they are beginning to recognize and value true worth in books and to throw aside a valueless whatever is weak and silly and foolish.

In one of the many conversations Jack holds with Jennie he brings up the question whether the profit they receive from the public literary meetings is only to their mental nature. Enthusiastically does Jennie negative that idea, bringing up argument after argument to prove that public literary meetings aid in moral growth as well as intellectual development. Books are filled with the wisest of maxims, the purest nuggets of the gold of truth. Triumphant she quotes such truths as these: "I'd rather BE than SEEM to be," "Act well thy part, THERE all the honor lies," "It is only noble to be good," "Kind hearts are more than coronets," And simple faith than Norman blood."

Mrs. Browning says that "The poets are the only truth-tellers now left to God, the only speakers of essential truth." Not only the poets are the speakers of essential truth, all noble writers are. And not only they are the speakers of truth, they are the creators of character which embodies in their lives all that is admirable and worthy of imitation.

Jack thinks that the study of the lives of the authors themselves does much to ward inciting himself and his friends to a larger, nobler life. "We needs must love the highest" when we see it in the light of a Tennyson, and what we love and admire we imitate. The story of Sir Walter Scott's brave shouldering of responsibility when overtaken by severe financial reverses may well serve as an incentive to nobler effort in the overcoming of obstacles. The lives of Longfellow and Bryant serve as patterns after which to fashion the life of a Christian gentleman. And Jack desires above all things to be a noble Christian gentleman. On the other hand, the wasted, ruined lives of Byron, Burns, Poe, who, while they have done wonderful work, have failed in attaining their highest, may well serve as warnings of how not to live. Not alone is the reading the life of an author inspiring and instructive, it is entertaining as well. "I have remarked," says Carlyle, "that the true delineation of the smallest man and his scene of pilgrimage through life is capable of interesting the greatest man." Jack is glad to find that he would have had Carlyle to uphold him in thinking the biographical sketch of an eminent author one of the most interesting features of a public literary meeting, if Carlyle had just been living at this time and had been a good Methodist.

Since Jack's views have become so much broader and his thoughts have gone so much deeper into things he has discovered that he and his fellow-leaguers are obtaining a culture that comes from the past, that now they are keeping excellent company. He realizes that if a man lives in an atmosphere of high and noble thoughts, where motives are pure, purposes are true, his nature is elevated to be in consonance with his surroundings. Thus it is that the very atmosphere of good books is inspiring. When Jack lives in a world peopled by the creations of some great master, he tunes his whole being to their key. He knows and reveres the good and true and separates unerringly from the false, the sham. He is unconsciously purified of the baseness of earthiness that still clings to him and becomes like to the Creator who is all truth and in whose image he was made. The influence for good of good books cannot be over estimated. Books open vistas of thought and experience that are undreamed of by the soul in the caterpillar state before it has got its butterfly wings. The shackles of this narrow restricted life fall away and the imagination may compass the globe in its flights. The horizon of the soul widens and life becomes richer and deeper and fuller of meaning.

Nor is this culture confined to Jack and his friends. They in their turn become sources of inspiration to all round them. They bring to their homes the uplift they have received and unconsciously transmit to those about them the loftier ideas they have grasped. They shed abroad their light as a diamond reflects in a million sparkles of light the ray it receives from the sun. Life to them is nobler and those around them are privileged to share in their broader view. Harmful forms of amusement are crowded out to make way for finer pleasure for others as well as for Jack and his friends. The narrowness and sordidness of life is in part done away with while broader spirit of culture reigns and the millennium comes a step nearer.

Above all, the Church by giving her approval to the public literary meeting of the Epworth League shows to the world that she is governed by no narrow spirit of asceticism but sanctions and approves all innocent and helpful forms of amusement. In this way outsiders are made to see the real attractiveness and cheerfulness of the religion she professes. Long may the public literary meetings of the Epworth League show to the world that the Church approves and desires culture of the mind, of the heart, of the soul.

THIS COLLEGE

is now located in its own grand new building, n. e. corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 50 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its own building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

For thirty years this school has been preparing young people for practical business life. It teaches Single, Double Entry and Joint-Stock Book-keeping, Penmanship, Shorthand, Typewriting, Telegraphy, English, &c. GROWN WITH "HARD CASH" GUANO

On the Farm of Joseph M. Hurt, by J. P. Pettus.---Average Length of Leaf, FORTY INCHES.

MARCH 1st, 1899.

TESTIMONIALS:

MARCH 1st, 1899.

TEST MADE BY WALKER CLUB.

TINKLING, Lunenburg Co., Va.
To the Blackstone Guano Co.,
Blackstone, Va.

Gentlemen:—A committee of the Walker Club, composed of John O. Bragg and F. S. Manson, Jorgenson, and Theo. Orgain, Tinkling, Va., have examined the results of the fertilizer test made for the club on my farm with ten of the best brands of guanos. On plot No. 1, old lot land, ten brands of fertilizers were applied, each at the rate of 500 pounds per acre, the ten sections carefully marked and treated alike. The committee picked out the section on which your Bellefonte Guano was used as the one showing the best results. On plot No. 2, four acres of new ground from old field line land, four brands were used. Here the committee also found the best results, very decidedly, in the acre on which the Bellefonte Guano was applied.

Yours truly,

L. A. HARDY.

I have sold the tobacco made on the four acres mentioned above. The tobacco made on the acre on which the Bellefonte was used brought thirty-four dollars and fourteen cents ($34.14) more than the tobacco made on either of the other acres. This acre, as far as I know, had no advantage over the other three acres, either in cultivation or natural fertility, or any other way. I know the tobacco did not get mixed in cutting, curing or shipping.

L. A. HARDY,
Committee for W. A. C.

I have used the several brands of guano made by the Blackstone Guano Company, for ten years and have tested them by brands of other makes on the same field and truthfully say that I think the Bellefonte and Hard Cash are unsurpassed for tobacco. It gives me pleasure to recommend the Blackstone Guano Co.'s Guano to the farmers of Southside Virginia.

JOS. M. HURT,

Nottoway County.

Gentlemen:—I used your Bellefonte Guano last year along with another brand and sold the tobacco from the Bellefonte at an average of $19 per hundred, and the tobacco grown with the other brand at an average of less than $12, showing a difference of $7 per hundred in favor of Bellefontaine Guano. This ought to be enough to show what I think of Bellefontaine Guano.

DANVILLE, Va.

V. C. LOVE.

Gentlemen:—I have used your Guanos for the past ten years, and they have given me perfect satisfaction. I consider the Bellefonte the best I ever used, and shall use it the present year.

FRANK WHITE.

Nottoway Co.

Gentlemen:—I used your Bellefonte Guano last season along with other brands and am thoroughly convinced that it is the best I ever used. I have sold one barn of tobacco raised with the Bellefonte at an average of $15 around, logs and all, which is a high average for shipping tobacco.

V. O. ANDREWS.

Dinwiddie, Co.

Blackstone Guano Co.—Gentlemen:—I bought of your agent, Mr. J. J. Mason, and used your Bellefonte Guano last season and am well pleased with the results. I have used a great many brands and think I can truly say it is the best I ever used, especially in the last ten years. Will say to my farmer friends that I think it a great mistake to use a low grade guano to save a few dollars in the ton at the expense of a larger difference in each hundred pounds of tobacco grown.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

Moments are atoms piled up to the blue of God's sky.—Rev. Dr. Lee, Presbyterian, Cincinnati.

Conversion.

Conversion involves the reshaping of one's life, and, more than that, it determines destiny.—Rev. John L. Scudder, Congregationalist, Jersey City.

Pursuit of Truth.

In the pursuit of truth we chase a flying goal. To visions profounder and ever yet profounder man's spirit must dive.—Rev. L. M. Powers, Universalist, Buffalo.

The Steady Gait Wins.

There is a way to race and a way to live, and it's the steady gait that carries one through to the noble end and wins the crown.—Rev. E. A. Woods, Baptist, San Francisco.

Pleasure and Peace.

Pleasure is a leaf liable to fall and float awhile on any stream, on the bad and on the good, but peace is the depth and quality of the stream itself.—Dr. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago.

Greatest Words.

The greatest words are not those that astound and perplex, but those that make people say within themselves "This is the word I believe."—Rev. Alexis W. Stein, Episcopal, Cincinnati.

Death.

Death is "commencement." It is the gateway into a larger and more real world of affairs. It is promotion to higher tasks and nobler responsibilities.—Rev. Dr. David James Burrell, Reformed, New York.

International Gratitude.

The universal day of joy may well be followed by the universal day of thankfulness, an international day of gratitude in which every tongue shall praise the Lord.—Rev. Wilbur Fiske Wood, Presbyterian, Stapleton, N. Y.

True Happiness.

True happiness is best found in a life of unselfish devotion to others. For in helping others we find our greatest joy. If we worship self, our lives are as narrow as the object of worship.—Rev. J. C. Stewart, Christian Church, Newport, O.

Haste and Thoughtfulness.

Haste and thoughtfulness must go together. The haste is inevitable, and the thoughtfulness is a duty. There is no harm in running, if one knows what object he is pursuing.—Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

Heaven Our Home.

This is not our dwelling place. Heaven is our home. The joys of this world are but as a storm that comes and is gone. They flee away as the mists. Riches disappear, happiness is gone.—Rev. Charles H. Yatman, Presbyterian, Kansas City.

True Worship.

In true worship there is no desire of a selfish sort, only the spirit of consecration, the wish to be a coworker with God, to be perfectly at home with him and to help in making the world good and beautiful.—Rev. David Utter, Unitarian, Denver.

An Ideal Church.

The ideal church should be of every class of society, of the rich and poor, the ignorant, the ten talent man and the one talent man, those who lead and those whose joy it is to follow.—Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, Congregationalist, Chicago.

Truth the Food for the Church.

To give a church the necessary robust constitution there must be nutritious food. Truth is the requisite menu. There must be pure air all about and permeating the entire body forming the church.—Rev. O. H. Denney, Congregationalist, Cincinnati.

What Christian Names Should Remind Us Of.

Our Christian names all have meanings. God has called us by these names with a purpose which we should strive to realize. They should remind us that God has given us each an individual work to do for him in his family, the church.—Rev. Henry E. Cooke, Episcopal, San Francisco.

An Encouraging Thought.

To know that he whose love is supreme is never beyond reach of your cry and that they whom you have loved with a true and lasting love can and do come at your call and even before the call is uttered is a fact to make the heart rejoice, to make us calm when life is tempestuous and to make us strong when the burden is heavy.—Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

Eloquence of Silence.

There are times when speech is weak and silence all powerful, momentous occasions when words are sadly insufficient and silence all expressive. Speech is of finitude, silence of infinity; speech of time, silence of eternity. The eloquence of silence is often more expressive far than the most impassioned speech. It is when the soul of man is overwhelmed that his lips are sealed and the sense of his limitations oppresses him.—Rev. David Philipson, Hebrew, Cincinnati.

Co-operation in Churches.

Many people have mistaken ideas of how the unity of the church is to be brought about. Some think there will be an amalgamation of all the churches under one denomination, and that this one denomination will be accepted as the proper one. Any proposition that involves the submission of denominations and the forsaking of the principles of denominations by those who believe in them never will meet with success. That is an impossible solution. We will find the solution of the problem in co-operation instead of consolidation. Such co-operation would have to be based on practical assumptions and worked along practical lines.—Rev. Samuel Van Vranken, Presbyterian, Buffalo.

THREE PRAYERS.

(BY KATE TUCKER GOODE.)

An infant in its cradle slept,
And in its sleep it smiled—
And one by one three women knelt
To kiss the fair-haired child:
And each thought of the days to be,
And breathed a prayer, half silently.

One poured her love on many lives,
But knew love's toil and care;
Its burdens oft had been to her
A heavy weight to bear:
She stooped and murmured lovingly,
"Not burdened hands, dear child, for thee."

One had not known the burdened hands.
But knew the empty heart:
At life's banquet she had sat
An unfed guest apart:
"Oh, not," she whispered tenderly,
"An empty heart, dear child, for thee."

And one was old; she had known care,
She had known loneliness:
She knew God leads us by no path
His presence cannot bless;
She smiled, and murmured trustfully,
"God's will, dear child, God's will for thee."

THE NASHVILLE MEETINGS.

The eyes of the Church have been fastened upon those in authority who were in session at Nashville last week. Some of the action taken is given.

The plan of Episcopal visitation is given elsewhere. From this it will be seen that Bishop Wilson will preside at our Conference in Petersburg next fall. He has not been here for about a decade. He will have much important work on his hands.

Bishop Hendrix was appointed as fraternal messenger to the British Wesleyan Conference, to meet in London, in July, 1900. Dr. Hoss was appointed to the same position for the Northern Methodist General Conference in May, 1900.

Dallas, Texas, was selected as the next meeting place for the General Conference.

The greatest interest centered about the "War Claim." The secular press reports that a resolution was introduced in the Book Committee calling for a change in the Book Agents. This resolution was defeated by a vote of twelve to one, the one being Dr. W. P. Lovejoy, of North Georgia. He then tendered his resignation, which was accepted. The committee then determined to make a report to the church in reply, it is said, to the strictures of the United States Senate upon them.

The Bishops also had the subject under consideration, and a majority of them adopted a statement, which we give below, upon which comment will be made next week. They say:

"In considering what action should be taken by the College of Bishops following the action of the United States Senate in our communication to that body respecting our unwillingness for the Church, under conditions reflecting on her honor, to receive of ever so just a claim of our Publishing House, which had been pending for over twenty-five years, we make the following statement:

"We find that the Senate, after full investigation, exonerated the Church from all censure, and we transfer to our records their official action, namely:

"RESOLVED, That the report of the committee, made July eighth, eighteen hundred and ninety eight, be approved, and that no censure should rest upon the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the misstatements and concealments of the Book Agents in connection with the passage of the bill for the payment of the claim referred to in the letter of the Bishops now under consideration; that the injury resulting therefrom affected only the beneficiaries of the fund and not the United States, and the Senate should take no further action in the matter."

"The Senate having thus declared that the United States Government sustained no injury in the passage of the measure and declined to take any further action in the matter, we have no occasion to make other communication to that body.

"As to the proper administration of the connectional officers, the law has specifically charged the Book Committee with that responsibility.

"We deeply deplore any language used by the Book Agents that has been the occasion of humiliation and action among the ministers and laymen of our beloved Church. We sympathize with their jealous concern for the good name of the Church, believing as we do that even so just a claim of the Church should be maintained by methods perfectly candid and righteous.

"We have given much consideration to the communications sent to us under a misapprehension of our authority. The Bishops have not been members of the Book Committee since 1878, and that body is solely responsible to the General Conference.

"We recognize the distinguished courtesy of the United States Senate in its dealings with the Church, and its desire to protect the beneficiaries of the Church."

A PERSONAL CARD.

(The following card is taken from the "Wesleyan Advocate"):

I desire to say that, in regard to the question, as to the best measures to be employed for the adjustment of the unfortunate "Publishing House" trouble; I regret my inability to concur with the majority of those under like responsibility and more experience than myself.

This was said with due regard for all whose views of this matter may differ from my own, and from a conscientious conviction which I cannot disregard.

H. C. MORRISON,
Atlanta, Ga., May 6, 1899.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A THOUGHT FOR SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS.

(BY MRS. R. H. BENNETT.)

Opportunity and responsibility are correlative terms. We cannot mention the one without the other being understood. To admit that we have certain opportunities is to admit that certain obligations rest upon us. The teacher is not responsible for the amount of knowledge or the moral character of the scholars before whom he stands for the first time, but he cannot come before them a second time and feel that he is in no way responsible for them, and with each successive meeting the necessity of this responsibility is increased. To say that we do not realize our opportunities means we shall not measure up to them, and to assume responsibilities without realizing the full measure of our opportunity would certainly indicate we were unworthy the responsibilities we had assumed.

A class of boys or girls must inspire in a Sunday-school teacher a feeling of respect and awe. In them are so many possibilities. As yet their characters are unformed. They are in a soft, pliable condition and, like clay in the potter's hand, can be moulded this way or that. They can be formed for the truth or for deceit, for honesty or dishonesty, for duty or pleasure, for God or self. But the potter's hand must be a skilled one, or else the clay will be marred in the moulding, and that which might have been beautiful and fit for noble uses, is misshapen and must serve an unworthy purpose.

Years of preparation are required of teachers in our day schools, and rigid examinations must be passed. Teachers are not only required to be informed in the branches they desire to teach, but they must study pedagogy and understand the best method of instruction. It is required of a teacher to be prompt. If he were to be habitually ten or fifteen minutes late in the morning he would in many cases lose his position. If every inclement day he remained at home would he keep his position long?

And yet what are the requirements demanded of Sunday-school teachers? I think it is safe to say that half of them have no intelligent knowledge of the Bible. They have probably read it through; they have some favorite verses and chapters, but they do not know its geography or history. They know that at some time Christ healed a blind man, but under what circumstances they are not aware. Of Christ's life as a whole they have no conception. Their knowledge is only fragmentary.

In many cases the heart preparation for the lesson is no greater than the head preparation. The teacher often comes to the class without knowing in his own heart the truths of the lesson, and, in many cases, does not think of the necessity of heart preparation.

There is no way of compelling Sunday-school teachers to be efficient, faithful and prompt, inasmuch as theirs is a free-will service. The best, and indeed the only way to make them more efficient and more worthy of their position, is to cause them to realize their opportunities and responsibilities.

Suppose it were possible to bring together as a class of boys, Luther, Wesley, Spurgeon, Stanley, Judson. How would the teacher of such a class feel? Would he feel that he was fit to teach and train them without all the preparation possible of hand and heart? Would he come late to his class, or would he stay at home for any trivial excuse, and thus train them to think that they need not be faithful to duty when inconvenient or troublesome. Would he like to be their teacher and yet feel that by his life touching theirs he had given them no uplift, had not raised their ideals, had not brought them to love the Christ.

In your class you have no Wesley or Luther, no Judson or Stanley, but from that class of restless boys, so full of mischief, so inattentive, so hard to interest, will come the leaders of the future; leaders, it may be, as great as any in the past.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

(BY MRS. T. M'N. SIMPSON.)

At the Annual meeting of the W. F. M. Society a reluctant promise was given Mrs. Bacon, our District secretary, to write a letter for the RECORDER. There was no lack of interest in the work, but a want of ability to write for the public. But the promise had been made, and it has ever since rested as a burden upon my heart. There is an old adage—"It is never too late to do good," and acting upon it, the Farmville District shall hear from this section.

The Annual meeting, held last Fall, was a refreshing occasion to our spirits, and an incentive to greater zeal in the cause that ought to be so dear to our hearts. There were met noble women who have had the spirit of missions poured out upon them and so were ready to provoke to good works those younger in this great cause, who had not felt so imperatively the command: "Go, teach all nations." The delegation was quite large, showing an increase in Auxiliaries, as well as an increase in the interest of "woman's work for woman."

It was found, however, that the body had become unwieldy and the advisability of diminishing it was discussed. Dr. A. Coke Smith gave a very helpful talk on the subject, suggesting that the plan be adopted that was in force in the Virginia Conference. The question was finally put into the hands of the District secretaries, "with power to act." They soon reported, and recommended that a District meeting be held in each presiding elder's district, where every Auxiliary should be represented, and where the delegates to the Annual meeting should be elected. If the District meetings are attended as they should be, they will be of very great help to the Auxiliaries, bringing together in the aggregate a much larger number of the people. The reports read showed an advance along nearly all lines. There were two interests, however, that had not been sufficiently served, the Contingent Fund and the Ella Coffee Fund. In Ella Coffee the Virginia Auxiliaries have a representative of whom they may feel proud and for whose support they should esteem it a privilege and pleasure to contribute. She is doing a noble work. Let us see that she is not affected by our failure to meet our obligations. One society on the Eastern Shore reported its membership as embracing all the members of the Church; it was the "only" society at that time, but let its example be followed by others.

Some of the Districts have already held their meetings, according to the plan mentioned above, and others are expected to do so, among them our own Farmville District. We have just passed through a very hard Winter and many of us have been frozen up, especially the country Auxiliaries, but the Spring is upon us now, so we will have a chance to thaw out before the coming meeting. Our District embraces a large territory, and it has not been convenient for Mrs. Bacon to visit all the Auxiliaries, so it will make her heart glad to meet a representative of every society at the meeting soon to be held. From now till then let everyone of us endeavor to get others interested in this good cause that we may have good reports to send up. Now, do not get excited, but there is a suggestion that may not be amiss: Let every Auxiliary try to send by its representative one dollar, more or less, according to ability, so that we may have the privilege of making a "Life Member."

Now, if the editor can allow any more space, it may not be out of place to say something of the Farmville Auxiliary. Every meeting has been held during the Winter, and for several months we met in the room of one of God's "shut ins." It has really been a benediction. The bright, cheerful spirit exhibited by her proves that the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ is "no cunningly devised fable," but a genuine comfort and support to the trustful heart. Although so much afflicted by rheumatism as to be unable to leave her room she has with her own drawn hands crocheted spreads and turned the proceeds into the missionary treasury. During the last three years the aggregate has exceeded one hundred dollars. How many of us have made sacrifices that will count for so much?

At the invitation of our president, Mrs. H. E. Wall, our last meeting was held at her house. Eleven ladies promptly assembled at 4 o'clock, April 19th. After the business had been transacted, Mrs. Wall gave a review of the work of the Auxiliary for the past ten years. During this whole period she has served as president, Mrs. D. T. Elam as treasurer, and Mrs. J. M. Crute as organist.

For some years Mrs. T. J. Davis has filled the office of corresponding secretary, and for a large part of the time Mrs. H. C. Paulett has made an efficient recording secretary. The membership has varied some, but upon the whole interest has increased and the work has gained ground. Let us take courage and go forward.

After this instructive feature of the evening, Mrs. Wall excused herself for a moment, and brought in a band-box, saying she knew we all wanted to see her Spring hat. This being a lady's weakness, there was a ready response. She then proceeded to say that the service she had rendered had brought her into very pleasant association with the ladies and had been a help to her in many ways, and in token of her appreciation of the faithfulness of the officers and the co-operation of the other members, she wanted everyone present to receive a souvenir of the evening. Mrs. Elam who, because of home duties, had been compelled to resign her office, was presented with a neatly bound and beautifully illustrated book, entitled "Gold Dust." Then from the depths of the band-box six beautiful—hats? No,—pin-cushions, were brought forth and each officer was given one; then every other member was presented with an apple geranium. Time and thought had been given to the preparation for this hour, for the geraniums had been grown from the bud, the pin-cushions covered with either drawn work or hand embroidery, and all by the diligent hand of our esteemed president. But the good time was not over yet, for a waiter then appeared, loaded with various kinds of candy, and for "love verses" we found conundrums. So food for the mind had been provided as well as refreshments for the body. It has been no secret all the time that we had a wise and capable leader, but April 19, we discovered still more—a fine artist, a skillful needlewoman, a good confectioner, a successful florist, and a model hostess. Mrs. Elam, in behalf of the ladies, very fittingly returned thanks to Mrs. Wall for a delightful evening, and expressed the society's grateful appreciation of her long and faithful services. As all good things come from above, we joined in singing "Praise God, From Whom All Blessings Flow," and returned to our homes brighter and happier because of the hour we had spent together. In closing, let me say, do not forget the District meeting, nor the Annual meeting of the Woman's Home Mission Society, May 24th. Visitors welcome.

FARMVILLE, VA.

"BUT WHY SHOULD GOD TAKE MY CHILD?"

It is the one dark, despairing wail of motherhood. What little skepticism woman is capable of is concentrated here. But here is a mistake. God does not take your child. He is not a kidnapper. You want to run over to your neighbor's, and you say to your little girl, "here, Mary, hold baby for mama until she comes back, and remember it is all your own while I am gone." But you stay longer than you intended, and when you come back, little Mary, who has been playing mother all through the blessed hour, gets it into her little head that baby is her own, and she refuses point blank to give it up. God lays one of His little ones on a mother's breast, and says, "take care of it for Me; it shall be all yours until I call for it." If He calls for it tomorrow, is it not His? And if He does not call for it in three score years and ten, is not the grown-up baby still His?

You thought your child was born to be a man, and you talk mournfully of "buds of promise blighted," and "tender flowers cut off." But it was not born to be a man, nor has it been cut off. It was born to fulfill a mission. If that mission was to the world, it would doubtless have become a man. It did not become a man, and you have a right to believe that the only message it brought was for you. You must learn the language of that message before spring-time will come again to your heart. Begin now; see if you can find the key in one of these sentences following: The pretty babe may have been sent as a love token—a reminder. He may have sent it to discipline you, or to measure you, or to take the chill out of your heart and break up the great deep of your better nature. He may have sent it as a magnet to draw you into Heaven by. He may have sent it to preach to you that beautiful gospel—"For such is the kingdom of Heaven." If it had lived three score and ten years, it would not have more than fulfilled its mission; it could not have done less if it had died with the first day. Nor was it cut off. If I transplant a pale, sickly flower from a close hot-bed to an open, sunny hillside, is it cut off? There is no blight in God's pathway wherever He has walked among men. P.

THE PRESIDING ELDERSHIP AND PRESIDING ELDERS.

In the "Wesleyan" of April 5, there is an article from Brother G. W. Childress with the above caption, that is both timely and sensible. I concur heartily in nearly all he says.

I have never heard any one advocate the abolishment of the presiding eldership. We all regard it as an indispensable part of our itinerant system. I believe, however, that the districts ought to be enlarged.

I confess that when the plan was first brought to my attention, it did not meet with my approval. It looked like an innovation—a departure from the old paths. The more I think about it, however, the more does it commend itself to my better judgment as the very thing we need.

I believe that the change is surely coming. Like all advance movement, it will meet with opposition, but that opposition will give way before sense and practical judgment of our people. I agree most heartily with Brother Childress, that the thing most needed in our Methodist polity is, to put the right men into the presiding eldership, and not to keep them there too long.

In saying this, I am actuated by no spirit of acrimony toward our cabinet officers. On the contrary, some of them are, my warm personal friends. But in all candor and honesty, I believe that the practice of placing men of questionable fitness in the presiding eldership, and above all, of retaining them there for a life time, is contrary to the spirit of the itinerancy, and is doing great harm. I know not a single good reason that can be adduced in its behalf. During my whole ministerial experience, it has created more friction and trouble than any other cause of which I have knowledge.

It is greatly to be regretted that the last General Conference did not pass the four-year law. If it had been left to a vote of the Annual Conferences, the result would probably have been far different. Four year is as long as any man ought to remain clothed with the weighty responsibility of the presiding eldership. I am a genuine itinerant, and believe in Rotation in the presiding eldership as well as in the pastorate.

We quote, at this point, from a recent article in the Nashville "Christian Advocate." Speaking of continuing presiding elders in office indefinitely, it says: "Against this there are many strong reasons. Public sentiment is largely opposed to it. If the matter were left to a vote of the Conferences, we believe that the result would be startling. All the analogies of our itinerant system are against it. Pastors must change every four years. They usually change much oftener. Our bishops, by an unwritten law, seldom preside over the same conference more than one year at a time—never, we believe, more than twice consecutively. And yet the same men are often retained in the cabinet of our conferences for a generation, against the earnest wish of a large number—we believe a large majority—of the members."

There are many men in our conferences who have excellent presiding elder timber in them, and a year or two on the black horse would be of great benefit to them and to the work. Give them a trial—but don't keep them there too long. OBSERVER.

A Great Combine

Trusts and Combines in many lines of production, and controlling the output of many factories, have recently been formed, some and other similar organizations are projected. It is not our purpose to discuss here the influence of these trusts, whether beneficial to public interests or otherwise; but we wish to announce to our readers that which is not prejudicial to any interests, but which, on the contrary, is directly in favor of every reader of this paper.

HERE IS THE PLAN

A splendid illustrated MONTHLY, devoted to the cause of Methodism throughout this broad land and called THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE, is published in St. Louis, with offices in New York and Chicago. It is the peer of the best of the popular magazines in illustration, literature, and typographical excellence, and is designed to be to the Methodist membership of about six millions in America, what the popular secular magazine is to the general reading public. The Magazine is not a competitor of any of the other Church periodicals; it is general in its scope. It is the ONLY ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE PUBLISHED MONTHLY IN THE UNITED STATES, and occupies a field distinctly its own. Its aims and purposes are of the highest. Its motto is: THE PUREST IN LITERATURE, THE HIGHEST IN ART, THE NOBLEST IN METHODISM. It is a worthy exponent of the great Church it so ably represents.

Some Opinions of Representative Methodists, North and South.

"The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine should be welcomed by the whole Methodist family. Many a number will contain articles worth ten times the subscription price."
—Bishop Charles C. McCabe.

"Fair, sweet-toned, appetizing."
—Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald.

"Our common Methodism is to be congratulated on this valuable accession to our periodical treasures. I hope every Christian will have this beautiful Magazine."
—Bishop John F. Hurst.

"It takes rank with the best for its varied and rich table of contents. A valuable auxiliary to our Epworth League work."
—Bishop E. R. Hendrix.

The Press, Denominational and Secular, Speak in Highest Terms.

"A future of gratifying success and large usefulness is assured it."
—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"The contributions compare well with those of any other Magazine of the day and its illustrations are excelled by none."
—Pittsburg (Pa.) Daily News.

"Interesting and attractive, not only to Methodists but also to the general reading public, for the matter which fills the pages is of a character broader than the title would indicate."
—Columbus (O.) Dispatch.

"The prospectus of the Magazine indicates that there is an abundance of good things in store for its readers; but the Magazine itself is better than any prospectus."
—The Pittsburg (Pa.) Times.

"The scholarship of the Magazine is insured by the editorship of Revs. James W. Lee and Naphtali Luccock, who are known and loved in St. Louis and throughout the West."
—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

"It compares favorably with the best of them, and is a brilliant success from the beginning."
—Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution.

To these might be added hundreds of testimonials from Church officials, pastors and laymen, North and South, all praising the Magazine for its intrinsic worth and its lofty purpose.

"THE ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF METHODISM," which is being published serially in the Magazine, is a feature of marked interest, and is alone worth the subscription price; but the History is only one of the many interesting and artistic features of each number.

Every Methodist family should be a subscriber. Its price is so small all can afford it, but in combination with this paper an opportunity is offered to secure both publications for little more than the cost of one alone.

The subscription price of THE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATED METHODIST MAGAZINE is $1.00 a year; the subscription price of this paper is $1.00 a year. We will supply BOTH one year for $1.00.

This is our GREAT COMBINE—a TRUST organized solely in the interests of our readers, and which they are invited to join. Do not delay. Take advantage of this remarkable offer at once. It may not remain open long.

EDITORIAL.

MORE BEREAVEMENTS.

Surely this year has brought more bereavements to the households of our preachers than any recent year. Every week brings tidings of death in some family. Last week, Bro. Routten and his wife were called upon to part with their only daughter. She was seventeen years old, and up to a few months ago she was a picture of health, and there was every indication of many years. But last October she began to show symptoms of poor health, and although she improved greatly, yet she never recovered fully, and in February she was taken with the sickness which confined her to her bed until her death, on May 2. The writer saw her the week before she died, and stayed with her for nearly an hour. Although she suffered so much, especially from weakness, she was quiet and uncomplaining. She had then been at death's door two or three times, but she showed no fear or trouble, and seemed to be patiently enduring the will of God. Her parents and brothers were devoted to her, and had they not known God as their Father, and hers, their grief would be desolating indeed, but they are Christians and trust in God, and have cast their burdens upon Him.

Ruby's girl friends at the Institute were very fond of her, and several of them, with her Sunday-school teacher, Miss Zilla Mapp, went from Blackstone to the funeral, which was held in Richmond, conducted by Rev. J. C. Reed, assisted by other ministers of the city.

Upon receipt of the news of her death, the faculty and students of B. F. Institute held a meeting and after remarks by the Principal, a committee was appointed, which reported the following resolutions, which were adopted by a rising vote:

WHEREAS, Our Heavenly Father has taken out of this world the soul of our former school mate, Ruby Routten, and has taken her to Himself forever, be it
RESOLVED 1: That while we cannot murmur at any action of our Heavenly Father, yet we shall greatly miss our friend and school-mate, who had become dear to us during our associations together.

RESOLVED 2: That we deeply sympathize with her family and sincerely pray that our Father's love may so surround them that they may be continually comforted.

RESOLVED 3: That we will earnestly endeavor to profit by this dispensation of God's Providence, and try to so live that when He shall call us we may be ready.

RESOLVED 3: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of our departed friend and a copy be sent to the SOUTHERN METHODIST RECORDER for publication.

COMMITTEE: ZILLA A. MAPP, BESSIE L. CROWDER,
M. LOUISE TILGHMAN,
N. VERA O'BRIEN,
ETHEL M. PEETE,
ANNIE B. CROWDER.

The papers announce the death of the mother of Bro. W. F. Hayes. May the community of sorrow draw the brotherhood more closely together. "Casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you."

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

CONFERENCE.

The Methodist ministers held their weekly meeting at Epworth Church yesterday, President Edwards presiding, and Rev. Charles I. Stengle opening the proceedings with prayer. The following reports of Sunday services were made in response to a call of the Churches:

Epworth, Rev. W. J. Young, D. D.—One new member received, one penitent.

LeKies' Memorial, Rev. W. T. Williams—Four new members received on profession of faiths, making fourteen additions within the last three weeks.

Union Mission, Rev. Charles I. Stengle—Three conversions Sunday night. He also reported the conversion in a store yesterday of one of the train dispatchers of the Seaboard Air Line.

Cumberland-Street, Rev. H. E. Johnson, D. D.—One conversion.

Queen-Street, Rev. S. C. Hatcher—This pastor delighted his brother ministers by informing them that Rev. A. G. Brown, D. D., presiding elder of the Norfolk district, was deriving much benefit from his stay at Clifton Springs, New York.

Monumental, Portsmouth, Rev. L. B. Betty—The outlook for a revival is encouraging.

Wright Memorial, Portsmouth, Rev. R. B. Blankenship—Received 12 new members on profession of faith, and had seven conversions Sunday night, making a total of forty-three, the result of the revival services.

Port Norfolk, Rev. J. T. Carey—Received eleven new members on profession of faith.

Park View, Portsmouth, Rev. W. R. Proctor—Received four new members and had four conversions. Revival services still in progress.

Rev. R. M. Chandler and Geo. H. Spooner offered resolutions of sympathy to Rev. J. T. Routten and family on the death of their only daughter, which were unanimously adopted and ordered to be spread upon the minutes and a copy be forwarded to the family.

The meeting then discussed at length the paper presented several weeks ago by Rev. W. A. Crocker, on the causes of decline in the net increase of membership in the Church. The consensus of opinion was that the views set forth in the paper were in the main correct. —Norfolk "Virginian-Pilot."

The closing services of a series of meetings held at Queen-Street M. E. Church were attended Sunday night by a large and appreciative audience. Rev. S. C. Hatcher preached an earnest and effective sermon from Rev. 3:20, after which three persons went forward to the altar and professed conversion, and several reconsecrated themselves.

It was a matter of general regret that circumstances suggested the closing of the meetings, which have been much enjoyed and highly beneficial to those who attended. The preaching was entirely by the pastor, who has succeeded in winning the interest and esteem of the community and a warm place in the hearts of his own flock. As a result thirty-two persons made a profession of faith, most of whom will unite with Queen-Street Church.—Norfolk "Virginian-Pilot."

One of the greatest gatherings which ever assembled in this city was the union meeting of all the evangelical Christians of Richmond and Manchester held at 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon in the Academy of Music. Every seat was taken, hundreds stood in the aisles, and many were unable to obtain admittance on account of the dense crowd.

Upon the stage were seated the majority of the ministers of Richmond and Manchester, every denomination being represented by one or more. The choir of one hundred persons which sang at Trinity Church during the Methodist centennial celebration, also occupied seats on the stage, and was under the direction of Prof. Mitchell.

MINISTERS PRESENT.

Rev. R. A. Goodwyn, pastor of St. John's Episcopal Church, presided, and the services were conducted in turn by Rev. Dr. R. P. Kerr, Rev. Dr. W. G. Starr, Rev. H. C. Garrison, Rev. C. A. Marks, Rev. Wm. A. Barr, Rev. Jere Witherpoon, Rev. W. R. L. Smith, and Revs. J. R. Thornhill and Spencer, of Manchester.

The meeting was held pursuant to a resolution offered at the March meeting of the Ministerial Union by Dr. Kerr. It was divined to express "Our Vital Oneness in Christ," and each of the addresses was devoted to the theme of unity.

The meeting opened with the singing of the long metre doxology. Nearly every voice took up the familiar tune, and the big building was filled with the solemn melody. Then followed the Lord's prayer and the Apostles' creed, repeated in unison, and the singing of familiar hymns, the congregation standing.

Rev. Dr. Kerr was the first speaker, his subject being the "Basis of Christian Unity." Dr. Kerr spoke with deep feeling, and made an eloquent plea for true union. He spoke of the magnificent audience present, and said that it proved the power of the Church.

To illustrate the oneness of all believers, Dr. Kerr said that once while travelling in the East a little girl had met him and addressed some remarks to him in her language. He could not understand her, and she then said: "Jesus, Jesus."

"I knew," said the speaker, "that she was claiming kinship with me, and I could only take her hands in both of mine and reply: 'Jesus, Jesus.'"

"Who could not love a Presbyterian after that speech of Dr. Kerr's," said Rev. Dr. W. G. Starr, as he rose to follow him.

Dr. Starr's subject was "The Benefit

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON VIII, SECOND QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, MAY 21.

Text of the Lesson, John xviii, 15, 27.
Memory Verses, 23-25—Golden Text, John i, 11—Commentary Prepared by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1899, by D. M. Stearns.]

15. "And Simon Peter followed Jesus." In Math. xxvi, 58, it is said that Peter followed Him afar off, and when any follow Him that way instead of following fully we may expect to see some work of Satan in such a one. The dogs do not need to run after the sheep which keep close by the shepherd. It is only the wanderers which need to be barked in. Matthew also says that Peter went in and sat with the servants. He put himself in bad company. He is in great danger.

16. "Peter stood at the door without." John went out and spoke unto her that kept the door and had Peter come in a little nearer. Before this and immediately after His arrest all the disciples forsook Him and fled, even as Jesus had said, "Ye shall be scattered, every man to his own and shall leave me alone" (John xvi, 32). But Peter and John must have soon returned. Peter in his great weakness and John in his great love seemed in many ways the nearest to Christ of all the disciples.

17. "Art not thou also one of this man's disciples? He saith, I am not." Thus spake the damsel that kept the door, and thus Peter replied. Peter, who had said: "Although all shall be offended, yet will not I. If I should die with Thee, I will not deny Thee in any wise" (Mark xiv, 29, 31). How little we know our own hearts or realize how weak we are and what we might do if left to ourselves.

18. "Peter stood with them and warmed himself." He stood with the servants and officers who had made a fire of coals to warm themselves, for it was cold. The expression "it was cold" seems to me to go along with that in chapter xiii, 30, "It was night." If they call to mind any time in your own life when with you, either literally or figuratively, or both, it was night—so dark and cold and lonely—you will better understand. To our Lord it was from the earthly side so dark and lonely, but His comfort was His Father's presence and approval.

19. "The high priest then asked Jesus of His disciples and of His doctrine." As if it had been some friendly call that Jesus had made upon him, while all the time there was murder in his heart and he was probably rejoicing that at last he had this man in his power who had set aside their traditions, broken their Sabbath days, defied their power and plainly told them that they were hypocrites, blind guides, whitened sepulchres. Our Lord Jesus had proved that He was Israel's Messiah, sent of God, and that God was with Him, and the high priest knew, as Nicodemus knew, that no one could do what Jesus did unless God was with him (chapter iii, 2).

20. "Jesus answered him, I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing." Even the people had said: "Lo, He speaketh boldly, and they say nothing unto Him. Do the rulers know indeed that this is the very Christ?" (John vii, 26.) The officers also said to the chief priests and Pharisees. "Never man spake like this man" (John vii, 46).

21. "Why askest thou Me? Ask them which heard Me what I have said unto them; behold they know what I said." Yes, and the high priest himself knew enough of what Jesus had said, for many a time had he and the other priests and the Pharisees talked of the sayings of Jesus, but the teaching was too holy for them; the light was too strong for their eyes; they could not bear it. They taught the commandments of men, but Jesus taught the word of God. They preferred their traditions to the word of God.

22. "One of the officers which stood by struck Jesus with the palm of his hand." The margin says "with a rod." How difficult it is to understand all this, and to see the true High Priest standing as a criminal before the legal high priest, who was in reality no priest of God at all, and then to see this officer of the law lift his hand and smite his Creator! But they did not know what they were doing.

23. "Jesus answered him, If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil; but if well, why smitest thou Me?" It was a mild protest to a great wrong and to most unjust treatment. Even a great criminal is by the law and the officers of the law protected till his case is heard, and no one dare touch him. Against our Lord nothing was proved yet; He was not even properly on trial.

24. "Now Annas had sent Him bound unto Caiaphas, the high priest." John does not dwell longer upon His ill treatment before Caiaphas, the false witnesses, the blindfolding and spitting and buffeting. Perhaps, like the agony in Gethsemane, it was more than he could write about. Matthew, Mark and Luke saw it not; they only heard it from others; but John saw it all, it was very real to him, he could not forget it, and to write it would be to live it all over again. He could not stand it; it was not required of him, else he would have done it. Do not fail to notice what Jesus said to the high priest about His second coming, for it will surely come to pass (Math. xxvi, 64).

25. As Peter warmed himself at the servants' fire one said unto him, "Art not thou also one of His disciples?" And the second time he denied and said, "I am not." The steps in Peter's downfall seem to be self confidence and boasting, following afar off, keeping the company of the ungodly and enjoying the warmth of their fire. They are written for our warning that we may avoid them all. They are partly summed up in Ps. i, 1.

26, 27. A relative of the man whose ear Peter cut off said, "Did not I see thee in the garden with Him?" And for the third time Peter denied, and immediately the cock crew. The Lord had told Peter that he would deny Him thrice ere cock crew (Luke xxii, 34), and so it came to pass. It was Satan sifting Simon, but with God's permission for Simon's good, for Satan had to ask for it, but Jesus' prayer prevailed for him (Luke xxii, 31, 32). Matthew says that Peter's second denial was with an oath, and his third with cursing and swearing (Math. xxvi, 72, 74). At the third denial the Lord turned and looked upon Peter, and Peter remembered the word of the Lord, how He had said unto him, "Before the cock crow thou shalt deny Me thrice." And Peter went out and wept bitterly (Luke xxii, 61, 62). No word had our Lord from Him, and no message had Peter from Him till that kind word after the resurrection from the angel by the women, "Go your way, tell His disciples and Peter (Mark xvi, 7), Peter being the only one mentioned by name.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning May 21, "The Gift of Power."

Text, Acts i, 1-8.

A Secretary of Wesley Guild.

The Wesley guild is to Methodism in England what the Epworth League is to Methodism in America. Rev. Simpson Johnson is one of the secretaries and is well known on both sides of the water. He has filled some of the most important circuits of the Wesleyan church in England and has during all his ministerial career been in close touch with the young people. His services as a speaker are in great demand. Those who were present at the Toronto convention will not soon forget him. He is in his prime, being about 45 years of age.

Power.

It does not consist in any particular position. He who has it makes positions where none before existed. It does not largely lie in opportunity, but the man of power seizes and controls opportunities. It is not dependent on physical conditions in any great degree, but changes conditions to meet its need. It is not in voice or manner, not in expression or gesture, but back of all these and under all. Power lies in the inner soul. It is in consciousness, in the real self, and controls all faculties. Whoever has it seems to himself to be able to see more clearly, feel more intensely and act more determinedly. Strength comes to him, enthusiasm warms him, impulses drive him. Speak and act he must and will whatever may hinder. The strength seems to him to be that of some force not himself, and yet he holds it and uses it while it still holds and uses him.

BIBLE TRUTHS FOR BUSY FOLK.

"GIVE HIM SOMETHING TO EAT IF THERE IS ANYTHING LEFT OVER."

THE DAY OF JUDGMENT.

THE Pompous Man, with the heavy gold watch chain, is very fond of telling how much pew rent he pays, and how large his subscriptions to missions is, and how often he lets the cook give left-over victuals to a tramp at the back door. He really supposes that he is a most charitable person, and he really imagines, in some way or other, that the money and the cold victuals he gives away, are going to make things all right for him upon the judgment day.

He was talking to Uncle Bez about it, yesterday, and he manifested great pride in his charity.

"Yes, sir," said the Pompous Man, stroking his heavy watch chain, "I enjoy giving. Of course, I don't miss it very much, but I think I'd give something even if I did feel it a little. Charity is the greatest virtue, and the Lord said: 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these,' you know. So I always tell the cook, when she comes in to tell us there's a hobo at the back door, to give him something to eat if there's anything left over. He might as well have it as to throw it into the garbage barrel. Yes, sir, 'the greatest of these is charity.'"

"Yes," said Uncle Bez, in his gentle way, with that quizzical smile about his mouth; "yes, charity is the greatest of virtues, but you know charity doesn't consist entirely of doing and giving; there's a great deal of being and feeling in it. If I were in want and distress, some people's handshake and smile and 'God bless you,' would do me more real good than a present of $50 from some other people. Charity isn't all in giving.

"And I am afraid," Uncle Bez went on, "that some people don't fully understand Christ's account of the Judgment Day, in which He spoke of feeding the hungry and clothing the naked. You remember that He said that on that great day when the King came in His glory, He would separate His people as a shepherd separates his sheep from the goats. Christ is the Good Shepherd, and He knows His sheep, and He sets them on His right, because they are sheep, because they are His own, because He knows them. A shepherd doesn't have to make a minute examination every night of all the flock, to tell which are sheep and which are goats; He doesn't have to recall how the flock has acted during the day; He knows the sheep, and He gathers them all carefully into the fold. So Christ sets His children on His right—not because of what they have done; their good deeds, their charity has not earned them the right to be placed there—no, He puts them there because they are His own, and He knows them. But He reminds them of their good deeds, just as a mother when she tucks her little child snug in his bed at night, kisses the little one and says, 'You have been a good boy today,' so Christ reminds His children of their love and faithfulness. And just as the happy, unconscious child who has not been spoiled by too much training, might look up and ask, 'Why, mamma, what have I done to be good today?' so Christ's children, in surprise, ask when they have had the privilege of feeding, and clothing, and visiting the Master. They had not been conscious of their good deeds; they had not opened an account book with the Lord; they hadn't kept tally on their charities; they hadn't counted what they had done to themselves for righteousness. They had done good deeds because they, themselves, were good; they had loved their brethren, because their hearts were full of love. Their deeds had not made them God's children; they did good because they were His children.

"And the goats were sent from Him—not because of their failure to feed Christ's brethren, but because they were goats. Christ says to them: 'Depart from Me, I know ye not.' They are not His children.

"So, if I were you," said Uncle Bez to the Pompous Man, who still fumbled his watch chain, "I wouldn't count too much on the amount of money you pay to the church. That really is a very minor matter. Charity is more than giving. We must first have the love of God in our hearts; we must first become one of His children, and then our deeds, our instincts and our lives will be right. Christ said, 'He that abideth in Me and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit.' And that is the only way that fruit can be brought forth. If the heart is right, there'll be no danger about the deeds. Don't you really think that is of the first importance?"

And the Pompous Man fumbled his big watch chain and said he supposed it was.

to the World of Manifesting our Unity." The speaker enumerated in clear and eloquent terms the benefits which must flow from such unity. He said:

"God drew the line long years ago. Christ retraced it in the fifteenth and sixteenth verses of the seventeenth chapter of the Gospel of St. John. The world is to be found on one side of it; the Church is on the other. The business of the Church is to save the world. If the work be hindered we must investigate until we find the cause. If that cause be a lack of brotherly kindness among professing Christians, it must be removed out of the way. A sectarian can be a Churchman but never a Christian. A sinner, with the hundred eyes of Argos to help him, can find faults and flaws in the practice of what is taught by the Church of God, but he ought never to discover a lack of love between those who profess to serve a God of Love.

"If the people of God in all the evangelical denominations display in personal experience that spirit of brotherhood which ought to characterize the followers of Christ, certain results will be visible among fair-minded men outside the Church of God. 1. They will give evidence of a conviction of the reality of our profession of faith. 2. They will reverence the doctrines which produce such wonderful transformations of character. 3. They will suspend their opposition to this saving work of the Church in the world. 4. In many instances they will make public a deliberate choice to honor Christ and be numbered with His people.

"A Church bound together by the strong bond of Christian fraternity is a divinely-appointed ante-chamber to the Kingdom of Heaven."

Rev. H. C. Garrison, of the Christian Church, spoke on "Unity Shown in the Work, Hymns, and Prayers of Christians." He delivered a striking address, with an eminently practical application.

"There are many small towns," said Mr. Garrison, "which could support one strong Church, which now have half a dozen weak ones."

He favored the brushing aside of all minor differences so that all denominations might work together for the advancement of religion.

Rev. C. A. Marks, pastor of the First English Evangelical Lutheran Church, spoke feelingly on the subject, "Christian Unity a Foretaste of Heaven."

The subject of Rev. William A. Barr, was "Christian Unity a Proof of the Divinity of Our Lord."

Like Mr. Garrison, Mr. Barr thought that all unessential differences should be done away with that the world might see a truly united Church.

The closing address was delivered by Rev. Dr. W. R. L. Smith, pastor of the Second Baptist Church, and was on the subject of "Christian Unity and the Outpouring of the Holy Spirit."

After prayer by Rev. Dr. Thornhill, the doxology was sung, and Rev. Mr. Goodwin pronounced the benediction. —Richmond "Times."

The Sabbath school of Monumental M. E. Church, this city, is a model one indeed, as the following record will show:

Sunday morning, notwithstanding the inclement weather, every one of the nine officers of the school answered the roll call, while out of 38 teachers, all were present except three, one of whom was confined at home by sickness, and the other two were out of the city.

There are 38 classes in the school, and

FIVE BOOKS That help make BETTER AND WISER.

BESIDE THE BONNIE BRIER BUSH. (182 pages.) Complete and Unabridged from original edition. By IAN MACLAREN.

A collection of beautiful stories, full of pathos and Christian spirit. One of the most helpful and successful books of the age.

BLACK BEAUTY. (245 pages.) Complete and Unabridged. By ANNA SEWELL.

The "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of the Horse. Adopted by the Boston Grammar Schools as supplementary reading, to instil into their pupils the principles of kindness and justice to our domestic animals, as well as to each other.

DRUMMOND'S ADDRESSES. (263 pages.) Complete and Unabridged.

By HENRY DRUMMOND.

By far the loftiest expression of religious sentiment that has ever appeared in book form. Contains the celebrated essay entitled "The Greatest Thing in the World, Love."

TEN NIGHTS IN A BAR-ROOM. (196 pages.) Complete and Unabridged.

By T. S. ARTHUR.

This is the masterpiece of T. S. Arthur, and has been one of the most effective means of temperance reform ever conceived. Graphic, pathetic, convincing. Every young person in the land ought to read this book.

AESOP'S FABLES. (192 pages, with 50 illustrations. Contains 300 of the choicest fables.) Translated by Rev. G. F. TOWNSEND.

For centuries this collection of fables has been the fountain of worldly wisdom. Its apt and terse comparisons are calculated to clear the mind of falsehood, vanity and folly.

All these books are printed in large, clear type, and bound in white and gold (paper covers). Size of book 4¼x6¼ inches, such as have been usually sold at 25 cents each.

of that number only four showed for the month of April a percentage for attendance as low as 60 per cent. Six classes are credited with a percentage from 60 to 70. Six more with 70 to 80; eleven with 80 to 90; eight with 90 to 100, and three with the magnificent percentage of 100.

The basket collections of the school for April were $55.—"Virginian-Pilot."

The mission established by Central M. E. Church, between Cottage Place and Scottsville, was opened Sunday afternoon under very flattering circumstances. The Sunday-school was organized at three p. m., with a membership of 113 teachers and scholars. The following officers were elected: Superintendent, R. Bohlken; Secretary, J. E. Thompson; Treasurer, L. B. Lester; Librarian, R. M. Diggs; Organist, Mrs. Kenyon. The other officers will be elected next Sunday.

The necessary literature will be furnished by Central school and the classes will be organized and teachers assigned them next Sunday. At 4 p. m. the Rev. R. F. Beadles preached the first sermon in the new building to an overflowing audience. The sermon was a strong one and left its impress on the congregation. Mr. Beadles will preach at the mission every Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock, and there will be a prayer meeting service held every Thursday evening at 8 o'clock.—Norfolk "Landmark."

The Danville "Register" says: At a meeting of the Epworth League city union, held at Main-Street M. E. Church, a resolution was adopted, inviting the Lynchburg District Epworth League to meet in conference with the Danville District Leaguers. The date and program are to be arranged by the secretaries of the Lynchburg and Danville districts. The president was authorized to appoint a committee on entertainment from the various leagues of the city. A large crowd is expected at the joint conference of the Leaguers.—Lynchburg "News."

At Wright Memorial Church there were seven conversions and twelve persons connected themselves with the Church. The afternoon praise meeting was the greatest meeting ever seen in that edifice. Last night Rev. L. P. Bransford preached to a good audience on the "Prodigal Son."

Rev. Dr. A. Coke Smith will deliver the annual address before the literary societies at the commencement exercises of Randolph-Macon Academy, at Bedford City, Monday, June 8.

The revival services during the week at Park View M. E. Church have been very interesting and profitable, congregations have been large, and there have been conversions nearly every night.—Norfolk "Landmark."

The Whealon Methodist Church will be dedicated to the services of God on the second Sunday in this month, May 14. Rev. J. P. Stump, of Fredericksburg, assisted by Rev. J. O. Babcock, of Lancaster circuit, will conduct the

When the proposed new Methodist Church at Newport News is built one of the handsomest features of it will be a beautiful window, which will be presented by the Epworth League. It will cost several hundred dollars, its exact cost not having been yet ascertained.

Ten members joined Central M. E. Church Sunday morning and, though the revival services have closed, there were three conversions Sunday night.—Norfolk "Landmark."

Rev. Dr. J. B. Hawthorn has accepted the call to Grove-Avenue Baptist Church, Richmond, and will begin his work in September.

Rev. Dr. A. Coke Smith, pastor of Court-Street Methodist church, and one of the most eminent preachers in the South, will leave on Wednesday for Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, where he may place himself in the hands of physicians there for treatment, after which he will probably take a short rest at some health resort. The Doctor has not been strong for some time, and during the past winter has suffered severely from the grip.—Times.

Dr. R. N. Sledd was sick while at the meetings in Nashville last week, and in returning stopped off in Atlanta on Friday morning. He is quite sick and is being treated at the Grady Hospital. He was better on Monday morning.—Wesleyan Advocate.

GENERAL NEWS.

Under date of April 1, 1899, the Acting Assistant Attorney General for the Post Office Department gave quite a lengthy opinion, ruling that chain-letters and chain investment schemes are violations of the postal laws relating to lotteries and frauds.—Richmond "Dispatch."

The Methodist Church now possesses 20 houses of worship in Old Rome, one of which is worth $200,000. Other denominations are also gaining ground in the eternal city.

The missionaries of the world receive less money in one year to save the world than the smokers of the United States burn up in one month, viz: $13,000,000 a year for missionaries, and $15,000,000 a month for the smokers.

Canada has 87,000 Epworth League members, who have undertaken the support of twenty-one missionaries.

Hoke Smith, Secretary of the Interior under President Cleveland's second administration, is superintendent of the Sabbath school of the North Avenue Church, Atlanta, Ga., a new organization recently formed by a colony from the First Church in that growing city.

Andrew Carnegie, when a hard working lad was invited by one Col. Anderson, of Allegheny, Pa., to read books from his library. He then resolved if Fortune ever favored him, he would lend books to poor people. As a result, he has already expended $6,000,000 for libraries, and has promised $2,000,000.

With 74,000 inhabitants, Iceland has only one policeman. GROWN WITH "HARD CASH" GUANO

On the Farm of Joseph M. Hurt, by J. P. Pettus.---Average Length of Leaf, FORTY INCHES.

MARCH 1st, 1899.

TESTIMONIALS:

MARCH 1st, 1899.

TEST MADE BY WALKER CLUB. the Bellefonte Guano was applied.

TINKLING, Lugenburg Co., Va
To the Blackstone Guano Co.,
Blackstone, Va.

Gentlemen:—A committee of the Walker Club, composed of John O. Bragg and F. S. Manson, Jorgenson, and Theo. Orgain, Tinkling, Va., have examined the results of the fertilizer test made for the club on my farm with ten of the best brands of granos. On plot No. 1, old lot land, ten brands of fertilizers were applied, each at the rate of 300 pounds per acre, the ten sections carefully marked and treated alike. The committee picked out the section on which your Bellefonte Guano was used as the one showing the best results. On plot No. 2, four acres of new ground from old field fine land, four brands were used. Here the committee also found the best results, very decidedly, in the acre on which

Yours truly,
L. A. HARDY.

I have sold the tobacco made on the four acres mentioned above. The tobacco made on the acre on which the Bellefonte was used brought thirty-four dollars and fourteen cents ($34.14) more than the tobacco made on either of the other acres. This acre, as far as I know, had no advantage over the other three acres, either in cultivation or natural fertility, or any other way. I know the tobacco did not get mixed in cutting, curing or shipping.

L. A. HARDY,
Committee for W. A. U.

I have used the several brands of guano made by the Blackstone Guano Company, for ten years and have tested them by brands of other makes on the same field and truthfully say that I think the Bellefonte and Hard Cash are unsurpassed for tobacco. It gives me pleasure to recommend the Blackstone Guano Co's. Guano to the farmers of Southside Virginia.

JOS. M. HURT.

Nottoway County.

Gentlemen:—I used your Bellefonte Guano last year along with another brand and sold the tobacco from the Bellefonte at an average of $19 per hundred, and the tobacco grown with the other brand at an average of less than $12, showing a difference of $7 per hundred in favor of Bellefontaine Guano. This ought to be enough to show what I think of Bellefonte Guano.

V. C. LOVE.

Danville, Va.

Gentlemen:—I have used your Guanos for the past ten years, and they have given me perfect satisfaction. I consider the Bellefonte the best I ever used, and shall use it the present year.

FRANK WHITE.

Nottoway Co.

Gentlemen:—I used your Bellefonte Guano last season along with other brands and am thoroughly convinced that it is the best I ever used. I have sold one barn of tobacco raised with the Bellefonte at an average of $15 around, lugs and all, which is a high average for shipping tobacco.

V. O. ANDREWS.

Dinwiddie, Co.

Blackstone Guano Co.—Gentlemen:—I bought of your agent, Mr. J. J. Mason, and used your Bellefonte Guano last season and am well pleased with the results. I have used a great many brands and think I can truly say it is the best I ever used, especially in the last ten years. Will say to my farmer friends that I think it a great mistake to use a low grade guano to save a few dollars in the ton at the expense of a larger difference in each hundred pounds of tobacco grown.

THE GENERAL MISSION BOARD.

We give in this number a full account of the proceedings of the General Mission Board, at Nashville. It gives much information and will repay a careful reading.

THE BISHOPS STOOD SIX TO FOUR.

The following is taken from the "Nashville American" of May 15, and if a correct report, as the editor thinks it to be, as it was sent him by a prominent member of the last General Conference, it shows more clearly what the situation is in the Episcopal College, and inspires a greater feeling of hope than the deliverance given out by the College of Bishops as a body. The extract from the "American" follows:

"The following are the resolutions defeated by a vote of six to four in the College of Bishops at its recent discussion of the acts of their Book Agents by which the claim of $288,000 for injuries due to the Publishing House during the war was successfully prosecuted:

"The first resolution was as follows:
